AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 608. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated to the corporation to carry out this title not to exceed $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1979, $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1980, and $30,000,000 for fiscal year 1981.

(b) Funds appropriated pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

(c) Non-Federal funds received by the corporation, and funds received by any recipient from a source other than the corporation, shall be accounted for and reported as receipts and disbursements separate and distinct from Federal funds.

(d) The corporation shall prepare annually a business-type budget which shall be submitted to the Office of Management and Budget, under such rules and regulations as the President may establish as to the date of submission, the form and content, the classifications of data, and the manner in which such budget program shall be prepared and presented. The budget of the corporation as modified, amended, or revised by the President shall be transmitted to the Congress as a part of the annual budget required by the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921. Amendments to the annual budget program may be submitted from time to time.

TITLE VII—MISCELLANEOUS

TITLE I MULTIFAMILY LOAN LIMITS

SEC. 701. Section 2(b) of the National Housing Act is amended by striking out "$25,000", "$5,000", and "twelve years" in the third proviso in clause (3), and inserting in lieu thereof "$37,500", "$7,500", and "fifteen years", respectively.

MULTIFAMILY MORTGAGE INSURANCE

SEC. 702. (a) The last sentence of section 207(c) of the National Housing Act is amended by striking out "eight" and inserting in lieu thereof "five".

(b) Section 241(d) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "At any sale under foreclosure of a mortgage on a project or facility which is not insured under this Act but which is senior to a loan assigned to the Secretary pursuant to subsection (c), the Secretary is authorized to bid, in addition to amounts authorized under section 207(k), any sum up to but not in excess of the total unpaid indebtedness secured by such senior mortgage, plus taxes, insurance, foreclosure costs, fees, and other expenses. In the event that, pursuant to subsection (c), the Secretary acquires title to, or is assigned, a loan covering a project or facility which is subject to a mortgage which is not insured under this Act, the Secretary is authorized to make payments from the General Insurance Fund on the debt secured by such mortgage, and to take such other steps as the Secretary may deem appropriate to preserve or protect the Secretary's interest in the project or facility.".

MORTGAGE INSURANCE FOR NONRESIDENT CARE FACILITIES

SEC. 703. (a) Section 232(a) of the National Housing Act is amended—

(1) by inserting immediately before the period at the end of paragraph (1) a comma and the following: "including additional facilities for the nonresident care of senior citizens and others who are able to live independently but who require care during the day"; and

(2) by inserting immediately before the period at the end of paragraph (2) a comma and the following: "including additional facilities for the nonresident care of senior citizens and others who are able to live independently but who require care during the day".

(b) Section 232(b)(2) of such Act is amended by inserting immediately after "nursing services;" in the first sentence the following: "(3) a 'nursing home' or intermediate care facility' may include such additional facilities as may be authorized by the Secretary for the nonresident care of senior citizens and others who are able to live independently but who require care during the day;".

CONDOMINIUM MORTGAGE INSURANCE

SEC. 704. (a) The first sentence of section 234(c) of the National Housing Act is amended by inserting immediately after "less units" in the proviso of clause (2) a comma and the following: "or twelve or more units in the case of a multifamily project the construction of which was completed more than a year prior to the application for mortgage insurance,".

(b) The third sentence of section 234(c) of such Act is amended by inserting "(100 per centum if the mortgagor is a veteran as defined under section 203(b)(2) of this Act)" after "centum" in clause (A)(1).

PURCHASE OF FEE SIMPLE TITLE

SEC. 705. Section 240 of the National Housing Act is amended by adding "($30,000 if the property is located in Hawaii)" immediately after "$10,000" in subsection (c)(2).

HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT DAY CARE CENTER FACILITIES

SEC. 706. Section 7(n) of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act is amended to read as follows:

"(n) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary is authorized by contract or otherwise to establish, equip, and operate a day care center facility or facilities, or to assist in establishing, equipping and operating interagency day care facilities for the purpose of serving children who are members of households of employees of the Department. The Secretary is authorized to establish or provide for the establishment of appropriate fees and charges to be chargeable against the Department of Housing and Urban Development employees or others who are beneficiaries of services provided by any such day care center. In addition, limited start-up costs may be provided by the Secretary in an amount limited to three percent of the first year's operating budget, but not to exceed $3,500.".

SALE OF SURPLUS FEDERAL LAND FOR HOUSING

SEC. 707. (a) The first and second sentences of section 414(a) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1969 are amended to read as follows: "Notwithstanding the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, any Federal surplus real property within the meaning of such Act may, in the discretion of the Administrator of General Services, be transferred to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development at the Secretary's request for sale or lease by the Secretary at its fair value for use in the provision of housing to be occupied predominately by families or individuals of low and moderate income, assisted under a Federal housing assistance program administered by the Secretary or under a State or local program found by the Secretary to have the same general purpose, and for related public commercial or industrial facilities approved by the Secretary. Prior to any disposition of Federal surplus real property to an entity other than a public body, the Secretary shall notify the governing body of the locality where such property is located of the proposed disposition and no such disposition shall be made if the local governing body, within ninety days of such notification, formally advises the Secretary that it objects to the proposed disposition, unless the Secretary determines (1) that the proposed disposition would be consistent with any approved housing assistance and community development plans developed by such body pursuant to the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, or (2) in cases where such plans are not available, that there is a need for low- and moderate-income housing, taking into consideration any applicable State housing plans, and that there is or will be available in the area public facilities and services adequate to serve any housing proposed in conjunction with the proposed disposition.".

(b) Subsection (b) of section 414 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) As a condition of any disposition by the Secretary of Federal surplus real property under this section to an entity other than a public body, the Secretary shall obtain such undertakings as the Secretary may consider appropriate to assure that the property will be used, to the maximum practicable extent, in the provision of housing and related facilities to be occupied by families or individuals of low and moderate income for a period of not less than thirty years. If during such period the property is used for any purpose other than the purpose for which it was disposed of, it shall revert to the United States (or, in the case of leased property, the lease shall terminate) unless the Secretary and the Administrator, after the expiration of the first twenty years of such period, have approved the use of the property for such other purposes.".

REPORT ON MOBILE HOME CONSTRUCTION AND SAFETY STANDARDS

SEC. 708. (a) The first sentence of section 626(a) of the National Mobile Home Construction and Safety Standards Act of 1974 is amended—

(1) by striking out "March 1 of each year" and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1 of every other year beginning with calendar year 1978"; and

(2) by striking out "preceding calendar year" and inserting in lieu thereof "two preceding calendar years".

(b) The second sentence of section 626(a) of such Act is amended by striking out "such year" in clauses (1), (2), and (5) and "the year" in clause (6) and inserting in lieu thereof "such years" in each such clause.

AMENDMENT OF THE HOME OWNERS LOAN ACT OF 1933

SEC. 709. The eighth undesignated paragraph of section 5(c) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by striking "real property located within urban renewal areas as defined in subsection (a) of section 110 of the Housing Act of 1949", and inserting in lieu thereof "real property located in areas in which physical development activities assisted under title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 are being carried out in a concentrated manner".

STATEMENT OF POLICY AND STUDY ON HOUSING DISPLACEMENT

SEC. 710. The Congress declares that in the administration of Federal housing and community development programs, the utmost care should be taken to minimize the displacement of persons from their homes and neighborhoods. In furtherance of the objectives stated in the preceding sentence, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall conduct a study on the nature and extent of such displacement, and, not later than January 31, 1979, shall report to the Congress on recommendations for the formulation of a national policy to minimize displacement caused by the implementation of the Department's programs, and to alleviate the problems caused by displacement of residents of the Nation's cities due to residential and commercial development and housing rehabilitation, both publicly and privately financed. In carrying out such a study, the Secretary shall (1) consult with representatives of affected public interest groups, government, and the development and lending industries; (2) provide data on the nature and scope of the displacement problem, both past and projected, and identify steps needed to improve the availability of such data; and (3) report fully on the current legal and regulatory powers and policies of the Department to prevent or compensate for displacement caused by its own programs.

REHABILITATION GUIDELINES

SEC. 711. Title V of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1970, as amended by section 305(b) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"REHABILITATION GUIDELINES

"SEC. 510. (a)(1) The Secretary shall develop model rehabilitation guidelines for the voluntary adoption by States and communities to be used in conjunction with existing building codes by State and local officials in the inspection and approval of rehabilitated properties.

"(2) Such guidelines shall be developed in consultation with the National Institute of Building Sciences, appropriate national organizations of agencies and officials of State and local governments, representatives of the building industry, and consumer groups, and other interested parties.

"(3) The Secretary shall publish such guidelines for public comment not later than one year after the date of enactment of this section, and promulgate them no later than eighteen months after such date of enactment.

"(4) The Secretary shall furnish technical assistance to State and local governments to facilitate the use and implementation of such guidelines.

"(b) The Secretary shall report to Congress not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of this section regarding (1) actions taken by State and local governments to adopt guidelines or their equivalents, and (2) recommendations for further action.".

DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION

SEC. 712. None of the funds available to the Department of Housing and Urban Development may be obligated or expended during the fiscal year ending October 1, 1978, or October 1, 1979, for the reorganization or transfer of any function of any area, field, or insuring office which relates to multifamily housing or community planning or development and related technical services.

ALASKA HOUSING PROGRAM

SEC. 713. (a) Subsection (a) of section 1004 of the Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act of 1966 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (hereinafter referred to as the 'Secretary') shall make loans and grants on the basis of need to the regional native housing authorities duly constituted under the laws of the State of Alaska for the purpose of providing planning assistance, housing rehabilitation, and maintaining an adequate administrative structure in conjunction with the provision of housing and related facilities for Alaska residents.".

(b) Section 1004(b) of such Act is repealed.

AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL HOME LOAN MORTGAGE CORPORATION ACT

SEC. 714. (a) Section 305(a)(1) of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended—

(1) by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence thereof "or from any mortgagee approved by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for participation and any mortgage insurance program under the National Housing Act"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "The Corporation may establish requirements, and impose charges or fees, which may be regarded as elements of pricing, for different classes of sellers or services, and for such purposes the Corporation is authorized to classify sellers or services according to type, size, location, assets, or, without limitation on the generality of the foregoing, on such other basic or bases of differentiation as the Corporation may consider necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes or provisions of this Act. The Corporation may specify requirements concerning, among other things, (A) minimum net worth; (B) supervisory mechanisms; (C) warranty compensation mechanisms; (D) prior approval of facilities; (E) prior origination and servicing experience with respect to different types of mortgages; (F) capital contributions and substitutes; (G) mortgage purchase volume limits; and (H) reduction of mortgage purchases during periods of borrowing. With respect to any particular type of seller, the Corporation shall not be required to make available programs involving prior approval of mortgages, optional delivery of mortgages, and purchase of other than conventional mortgages to an extent greater than the Corporation elects to make such programs available to other types of eligible sellers. Any requirements specified by the Corporation pursuant to the preceding three sentences must bear a rational relationship to the purposes or provisions of this Act, but will not be considered discriminatory solely on the grounds of differential effects on types of eligible sellers. Insofar as is practicable, the Corporation shall make reasonable efforts to encourage participation in its program by each type of eligible seller.".

(b) The provisions of this section shall take effect upon the expiration of two hundred and ten days after enactment of this Act, but not before January 31, 1979, or on such earlier date as the Corporation may prescribe.

AMENDMENTS TO INTERSTATE LAND SALES FULL DISCLOSURE ACT

SEC. 715. (a) Section 1403(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "condominium," after "commercial," in clause (3);

(2) by inserting after "adverse claims do not refer to" in clause (10) the following: "United States land patents or Federal grants and reservations similar to United States land patents, nor to"; and

(3) by striking out the matter which precedes "when—" in clause (11) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(11) the sale or lease of real estate which is zoned by the appropriate governmental authority for industrial or commercial development or which is restricted to such use by a declaration of covenants, conditions and restrictions which has been recorded in the official records of the city or county in which such real estate is located,".

(b) Section 1403 of such Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) thereof as subsection (c); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (a) thereof the following:

"(b) Unless the method of disposition is adopted for the purpose of evasion of this title, the requirements of sections 1405 to 1408 inclusive, shall not apply to—

"(1) the sale or lease of real estate by a developer who is engaged in a sales operation which is intrastate or almost entirely intrastate in nature. A sales operation shall be considered 'intrastate or almost entirely intrastate in nature' for the calendar year if not more than 5 per centum of the lots sold in such year were sold to residents of another State, or if not more than five lots sold in such year were sold to residents of another State, whichever is greater, exclusive of sales made under the provisions of clause (2) of this subsection. For the purpose of the exemption contained in the preceding sentence, a lot may be sold to a resident of another State only if—

"(A) the lot is free and clear of all liens, encumbrances, and adverse claims;

"(B) the purchaser or his or her spouse has made a personal on-the-lot inspection of the lot purchased; and

"(C) the developer executes and supplies to the purchaser a written instrument designating a person within the State of residence of the purchaser as his agent for service of process and acknowledging that the developer submits to the legal jurisdiction of the resident State of the purchaser.

As used in this clause (1), the terms 'liens', 'encumbrances', and 'adverse claims' do not include United States land patents and similar Federal grants or reservations, property reservations which land developers commonly convey or dedicate to local bodies or public utilities for the purpose of bringing public services to the land being developed, taxes and assessments imposed by a State, by any other public body having authority to assess and tax property, or by a property owners' association, which, under applicable State or local law, constitute liens on the property before they are due and payable, or beneficial property restrictions which would be enforceable by other lot owners or lessees in the subdivision, if—

"(i) the developer, prior to the time the contract of sale or lease is entered into, has furnished each purchaser or lessee with a statement setting forth in descriptive and concise terms all such reservations, taxes, assessments, which are applicable to the lot to be purchased or leased; and

"(ii) receipt of such statement has been acknowledged in writing by the purchaser or lessee;

"(2) the sale or lease of real estate by a developer to the resident of another State when the principal residence of the purchaser is within a radius of one hundred miles from the property purchased if—

"(A) the lot is free and clear of all liens, encumbrances, and adverse claims;

"(B) each purchaser or his or her spouse has made a personal on-the-lot inspection of the lot purchased; and

"(C) the developer executes and supplies to the purchaser a written instrument designating a person within the State of residence of the purchaser as his agent for service of process; and acknowledges that the developer submits to the legal jurisdiction of the resident State of the purchasers; and

"(D) the developer executes a written affirmation to the effect that he has complied with the provisions of clauses (A), (B), and (C) of this clause (2), such affirmation to be given on a form provided by the Secretary, where such form shall include only the name and address of the developer, the name and address of the purchaser, a legal description of the lot, an affirmation that clauses (A), (B), and (C) have been complied with, a statement that the developer submits to the jurisdiction of the Act in regard to the sale, and the signature of the developer. The affirmation is to be kept on file by the Secretary.".

Sales made under this clause shall not be subject to the limitation contained in clause (1) but the number of sales made under this clause will be added to sales made under clause (1) to arrive at the total number of sales made in one year by a developer for purposes of calculation of the 5 per centum out-of-State sales limitation factor contained in clause (1). As used in this clause (2), the terms 'liens', 'encumbrances', and 'adverse claims' do not include United States land patents and similar Federal grants or reservations, property reservations which land developers commonly convey or dedicate to local bodies or public utilities for the purpose of bringing public services to the land being developed, taxes and assessments imposed by a State, by any other public body having authority to assess and tax property, or by a property owners' association, which, under applicable State or local law, constitute liens on the property before they are due and payable, or beneficial property restrictions which would be enforceable by other lot owners or lessees in the subdivision, if—

"(i) the developer, prior to the time the contract of sale or lease is entered into, has furnished each purchaser or lessee with a statement setting forth in descriptive and concise terms all such reservations, taxes, assessments, which are applicable to the lot to be purchased or leased; and

"(ii) receipt of such statement has been acknowledged in writing by the purchaser or lessee; or

"(3) the sale or lease of real estate which is located within a municipality or county whose governing body specifies minimum standards for the development of subdivision lots taking place within its boundaries, when—

"(A) the subdivision meets all local codes and standards and is either zoned for single family residences or, in the absence of a zoning ordinance, is limited exclusively to single family residences;

"(B) the real estate is situated on a paved, public street or highway which has been built to a standard acceptable to the municipality or county or a bond or other surety acceptable to the municipality or county in the full amount of the cost of the improvements has been posted to assure completion to such standards, and that authority has accepted or has agreed to accept the responsibility of maintaining the public street or highway;

"(C) at the time of closing, potable water, sanitary sewage disposal and electricity have been extended to the real estate or the municipality or county has agreed to install such facilities within 180 days. For subdivisions which do not have a central water or sewage disposal system, rather than installation of water or sewer facilities, there must be assurances that an adequate potable water supply is available year-round or that the land is approved for the installation of septic tanks;

"(D) the contract of sale requires delivery of a warranty deed to the purchaser within 180 days of the signing of the sales contract;

"(E) a policy of title insurance or title opinion is issued in connection with the transaction showing that at the time of closing, title to the real estate purchased or leased is vested in the seller or lessor, but nothing herein shall be construed as requiring the recordation of a lease;

"(F) each and every purchaser or his or her spouse has made a personal on the lot inspection of the real estate which he purchased or leased, prior to the signing of a contract to purchase or lease;

"(G) there are no direct mail or telephone solicitations or offers of gifts, trips, dinners, or other such promotional techniques to induce perspective purchasers or lessees to visit the subdivision or to purchase or lease a lot.

"(c) Section 1412 of such Act is amended by striking the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof 'In no event shall any action be brought by a purchaser more than three years after the signing of a contract or lease, not withstanding delivery of a deed to a purchaser on the sale or assignment of the purchaser's contract or agreement to a third party.' ".

"(c)(1) In discharging his responsibilities under this title, the Secretary shall conduct all actions with respect to rulemaking or adjudication in accordance with the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code.

"(2) The Secretary, by rule, shall prescribe the procedure applicable to every case pursuant to this title of adjudication (as defined in section 551 of title 5, United States Code) not required to be determined on the record after notice and opportunity for hearing. Such rule shall, as a minimum, provide that prompt notice shall be given of any adverse action or final disposition and that such notice and the entry of any order shall be accompanied by a statement of legal authority and other written reasons.".

HOUSING PROGRAM PAPERWORK REDUCTION

SEC. 716. (a) The Congress finds and declares—

(1) that various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government with responsibilities involving housing and housing finance programs require, approve, use, or otherwise employ a variety of different forms as residential mortgages (or deeds of trust or similar security instruments), as notes secured by those mortgages, and for applications, appraisals, and other purposes, and that such duplication of forms constitutes a paperwork burden that adds to the costs imposed on the Nation's homeowners and home buyers;

(2) that unnecessary paperwork impairs the effectiveness of Federal housing and housing finance programs and the Federal agencies with responsibilities involving housing and housing finance programs have made inadequate attempts to reduce unnecessary paperwork and the costs imposed by unnecessary paperwork on participants in those programs;

(3) that both single-family and multifamily programs are affected;

(4) that the Commission on Federal Paperwork has recommended that the agencies reduce the paperwork by adopting the same or substantially similar forms for the same or substantially similar purposes and that the Commission's recommendations will contribute to lower housing costs; and

(5) that simplification of paperwork imposed by Federal housing and housing finance programs would contribute to achieving the Nation's housing goals by reducing housing costs.

(b)(1) Insofar as it is practicable and to the extent permitted by law and to the extent that such action would result in a reduction in paperwork and regulatory burden, the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Veterans' Administration shall employ in their respective programs—

(i) uniform single family and multifamily note and mortgage forms;

(ii) a uniform application form for mortgage approval and committment for mortgage insurance;

(iii) a uniform form for computation of the monthly net effective income of applicants;

(iv) a uniform property appraisal form;

(v) a uniform settlement statement which shall satisfy the requirements of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act; and

(vi) such other consolidated or simplified forms, the consolidation or simplification of which the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs mutually agree would contribute to a reduction in the paperwork and regulatory burden of housing and housing finance programs administered by the agencies.

(2) Each agency may employ riders, addenda, or similar forms of modification agreements to adapt such uniform forms to its respective programs and policies, consistent with the goals of minimizing the use and extent of such modification agreements and of maximizing the suitability of such forms for the use of all participants, public and private.

(3) To the extend permitted by law, the President may require the Farmers Home Administration and the Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration to comply with the requirements of this section if such compliance will contribute to a reduction in the paperwork and regulatory burden of housing and housing finance programs administered by the agency.

TASK FORCE ON HOUSING PROGRAM PAPERWORK REDUCTION

SEC. 717. (a) Within sixty days after the enactment of this Act, the President shall establish an Interagency Task Force on Housing Program Paperwork Reduction (hereinafter referred to as the "Task Force"), which shall be composed of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Commissioner of the Federal Housing Administration, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, the Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration, the President of the Government National Mortgage Association, or their designees, and any additional person or persons designated by the President, if such additional person or persons are serving in offices or positions to which appointment is made and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall be Chairman of the Task Force.

(b) Within one hundred and eighty days after enactment of this Act, the Task Force shall transmit to the Congress a plan and timetable for implementing those recommendations of the Commission on Federal Paperwork which have the purpose of reducing the regulatory and paperwork burden of Federal housing and housing finance programs. The Task Force shall in its plan include recommendations for such legislation as may be necessary to remove barriers to full implementation of the Commission's recommendations. If the Task Force finds that any recommendation of the Commission should not be fully implemented, it shall include a full explanation of its fundings and a description of the alternative that will be employed to achieve the goal of the rejected recommendation.

(c) The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall coordinate and monitor the development and implementation by Federal departments and agencies of the plan presented pursuant to subsection (b) and shall report to the Congress on such development and implementation as part of each report required under Public Law 93-556.

(d) The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall assign such professional and clerical staff full time to the Task Force as may be necessary, until the Task Force completes its duties. The Director of the Office of Management and Budget may, in addition, require any or all of the agencies on the Task Force to assign one person full time to the Task Force, until the Task Force completes its duties. Such personnel assignments should take into account experience in paperwork, records, and reports management and regulation design and implementation.

(e) The Task Force shall to the maximum extent possible consult with the private sector, including but not limited to homebuilders, realtors, financial institutions, mortgage companies, public interest groups, mortgage insurance companies, homeowners, the general public, and any other group or groups that will be affected directly or indirectly by the provisions of this section, and obtain their ideas and views in carrying out its duties under this section.

PAPERWORK CONTROL AND MANAGEMENT

SEC. 718. (a) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") shall, not later than January 1, 1979, and not later than such date in each year thereafter, publish in the Federal Register an agenda of regulations expected to be considered during the fiscal year in which the agenda is published. The agenda shall describe, to the greatest extent possible, any significant rulemaking activity for that fiscal year, including the creation of new regulations and the revision or repeal of existing regulations.

(b) The Secretary shall, prior to the publication of any proposed regulation for public comment, conduct a thorough regulatory analysis of the regulation under consideration. Such analysis shall include, but shall not be limited to, the following:

(1) A reasonable estimate of the benefits expected to be derived as well as the costs or other inflationary impact which could be expected to result from the rulemaking. In making the estimate required by this paragraph, the Secretary shall (A) consider recommendations which may be made by the Council of Economic Advisers, the Council on Wage and Price Stability, the Office of Management and Budget, or any other executive agency, and (B) give special consideration to the extent to which delays caused by Government review, processing, and general paperwork contribute to the cost of housing, and shall, wherever feasible, modify the proposed regulation to minimize or eliminate such delays.

(2) An assessment of the extent to which the proposed regulation may result in contradiction, unnecessary overlapping, or duplication of other regulations of the Department or of another executive agency.

(3) An assessment of the extent to which the proposed regulation increases the burden of recordkeeping and report filing requirements on individuals, businesses, and State and local governments. In making the assessment required by this paragraph, the Secretary shall use as a basis the "reporting hours burden", as estimated by the Office of Management and Budget.

(c) A summary of the findings of the regulatory analysis conducted under subsection (b) shall be published adjacent to the regulation being proposed in the Federal Register. In emergency situations or cases in which the Secretary must meet immediate statutory or judicial deadlines, there shall be published in the Federal Register a statement explaining why preparation of a regulatory analysis would be impracticable or inappropriate.

NEW COMMUNITY ASSISTANCE PROJECTS

SEC. 719. Section 415(c) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The term 'new community assistance projects' has the same meaning as the term 'new community assistance project' in section 718(c) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1970.".

COST-BENEFIT ANALYSIS OF FIELD REORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 720. Section 7 of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(o) A plan for the reorganization of any regional, area, insuring, or other field office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development may take effect only upon the expiration of ninety days after publication in the Federal Register of a cost-benefit analysis of the effect of the plan on each office involved. Such cost-benefit analysis shall include, but not be limited to—

"(1) an estimate of cost savings supported by background information detailing the source and substantiating the amount of the savings;

"(2) an estimate of the additional cost which will result from the reorganization; including, but not limited to, the cost of remodeling and moving into new office quarters, the loss of experienced personnel where such personnel shall be replaced by other personnel, the cost of training new personnel, the cost of moving personnel to new homes, any increase in rental costs (or an estimate of the likely increase in rental costs), and any adverse effects on any existing Federal office buildings;

"(3) a study of the impact on the local economy; and

"(4) an estimate of the effect of the reorganization on the availability, accessibility, and quality of services provided for recipients of those services.

Where any of the above factors cannot be quantified, the Secretary shall provide a statement on the nature and extent of those factors in the cost-benefit analysis.".

HOUSING PRODUCTION REPORT

SEC. 721. Section 1603 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 is amended to read as follows:

"REPORT ON GOALS

"SEC. 1603. Not later than January 20, of each year, the President shall transmit to the Congress a report which—

"(1) reviews the progress made in achieving housing production objectives during the preceding year, and in the event that proposed objectives are not achieved, identifies the reasons for the failure;

"(2) projects the level, composition, and general location of production and rehabilitation activity during the current year, and reassesses the availability of required resources;

"(3) specifies Federal programs and policies to be implemented or recommended in order to achieve the objective;

"(4) updates estimates of the housing needs of lower income families, analyzing these needs, insofar as possible, by type of household, housing need, including households with specialized needs, and general location, and in addition, reassesses the capacity of each Federal housing program to serve the needs identified;

"(5) reviews the progress made in achieving goals of conserving and upgrading older housing and neighborhoods, expanding homeownership and equal housing opportunities, and assuring reasonable shelter costs;

"(6) reports on progress made toward developing new methods for measuring and monitoring progress in achieving these goals; and

"(7) identifies legislative and administrative actions which will or should be adopted or implemented during the current year to support achievement of the goals.".

TITLE VIII—NEIGHBORHOOD SELF-HELP DEVELOPMENT

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 801. This title may be cited as the "Neighborhood Self-Help Development Act of 1978".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 802. (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) existing urban neighborhoods are a national resource to be conserved and revitalized wherever possible, and that public policy should promote governmental and private programs and activities that further that objective;

(2) to be effective, neighborhood conservation and revitalization efforts must involve the fullest possible support and participation of those most directly affected at the neighborhood level; and

(3) an effective way to obtain such support and participation at the neighborhood level is through neighborhood organizations accountable to residents of a particular neighborhood with a demonstrable capacity for developing, assessing, and carrying out projects for neighborhood conservation and revitalization.

(b) It is, therefore, the purpose of this title (1) to provide grants and other forms of assistance to qualified neighborhood organizations to undertake specific housing, economic or community development, and other appropriate neighborhood conservation and revitalization projects in low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, or for the benefit of low- and moderate-income residents of other neighborhoods which are in need of preservation and revitalization, and (2) in the process of providing such assistance, to increase the capacity of neighborhood organizations, individually and collectively, to utilize and coordinate resources available from the public and private sectors, and from neighborhoods themselves, for conserving and revitalizing existing neighborhoods.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 803. As used in this title—

(1) the term "neighborhood organization" means a voluntary, nonprofit organization which (A) is broadly representative of the neighborhood in which the project will be located, (B) is accountable to neighborhood residents with respect to the project being proposed, (C) has as an objective the preservation and revitalization of such neighborhood, and (D) is found by the Secretary to have a proven record on demonstrable capacity for developing resources for, and effectively implementing neighborhood conservation and revitalization programs and projects;

(2) the term "neighborhood conservation and revitalization projects" includes but is not limited to (A) locally conceived programs for housing rehabilitation and the creative reuse and improvement of existing housing; (B) revitalization of neighborhood retail business areas and the recycling of vacant industrial sites and public and privately owned businesses for the purpose of creating employment opportunities and promoting neighborhood economic development; and (C) energy conservation and weatherization projects; and

(3) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE

SEC. 834. (a) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is authorized, in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, to make grants and to provide other forms of assistance to neighborhood organizations for effectively planning and carrying out specific housing, economic and community development, and other appropriate neighborhood conservation and revitalization projects within a particular neighborhood, and to assist such organizations to conduct such projects in partnership with local government and the public and private sector.

(b) Grants and other forms of assistance may be made available under this section only if—

(1) the assistance will be used for a specific project which is related to and supportive of a revitalization strategy for the neighborhood in which the project will be located;

(2) the project will include a self-help component which involves a contribution of time or resources by neighborhood residents;

(3) the project will directly benefit the residents of a low- or moderate-income neighborhood or will primarily benefit low- and moderate-income residents of a neighborhood with an average income above the moderate level;

(4) the project will, to the extent feasible, involve leveraging of resources available from the private sector;

(5) the project will, to the extent feasible, involve the coordination of resources available from the local, State, or Federal Government; and

(6) the applicant demonstrates that the residents of the neighborhood where the project will be carried out, and particularly residents who will be directly affected by the project, have been actively involved in and supportive of the selection of the project, and will continue to be involved in project development, implementation, and evaluation through an effective, on-going neighborhood participation mechanism.

(c) Grants and other forms of assistance made available under this section shall be used primarily for the implementation of specific neighborhood housing, economic, and community development projects. No grant or other assistance shall be made available under this section for—

(1) planning functions which are not combined with project implementation, (2) a public works project such as street repair which is not associated with the specific project being funded under this section, (3) operation of a social service program which is not associated with the specific project being funded under this section, (4) an economic development project which will not primarily benefit the residents of the neighborhood in which it will be located, (5) operating costs of a community group which are not associated with the specific project being funded under this section, or (6) other purposes which the Secretary may determine are not consistent with the purposes of this title.

(d) With respect to any particular application, grants and other forms of assistance may be made available under this section only after the unit of general local government within which the neighborhood to be assisted is located certifies that such assistance is consistent with, and supportive of, objectives of that unit of government including housing and community development, economic development, and neighborhood conservation or revitalization activities being carried out by such unit.

(e) The Secretary shall consult with the heads of other Federal departments and agencies having responsibilities related to the purposes of this title, including the Community Services Administration, with respect to (1) general standards, policies, and procedures to be followed in the administration of this title, and (2) particular assistance actions or approvals which the Secretary believes to be of special interest or concern to one or more of such departments and agencies. The Secretary shall ensure the close coordination of activities assisted under this title with other related Federal, State, and local assistance programs, including the programs of the Community Services Administration, and, with respect to particular assistance actions or approvals, ensure a maximum commitment by the neighborhood organization of its own financial and other resources toward the assisted project.

APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 805. There are authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of carrying out this title not to exceed $15,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1979 and 1980. Any amount appropriated pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

TITLE IX—LIVABLE CITIES

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 901. This title may be cited as the "Livable Cities Act of 1978".

FINDINGS

SEC. 902. The Congress finds and declares—

(1) that artistic, cultural, and historic resources, including urban design, constitute an integral part of a suitable living environment for the residents of the Nation's urban areas, and should be available to all residents of such areas, regardless of income;

(2) that the development or preservation of such resources is a significant and necessary factor in restoring and maintaining the vitality of the urban environment, and can serve as a catalyst for improving decaying or deteriorated urban communities and expanding economic opportunities, and for creating a sense of community identity, spirit, and pride; and

(3) that the encouragement and support of local initiatives to develop or preserve such resources, particularly in connection with federally assisted housing or community development activities or in communities with a high proportion of low-income residents, is an appropriate function of the Federal Government.

PURPOSE

SEC. 903. The primary purpose of this title is to further the efforts of States, urban communities, neighborhoods, and organizations to initiate undertakings to revitalize such communities and neighborhoods, and to provide a more suitable living environment, expand cultural opportunities, and indirectly stimulate economic opportunities, for the residents, and particularly residents of low and moderate income, of such communities and neighborhoods, through the utilization, design, or development of artistic, cultural, or historic resources.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 904. For the purpose of this title—

(1) The terms "art" and "arts" include, but are not limited to, architecture (including preservation, restoration, or adaptive use of existing structures), landscape architecture, urban design, interior design, graphic arts, fine arts (including painting and sculpture), performing arts (including music, drama, and dance), literature, crafts, photography, communications media and film, as well as other similar activities which reflect the cultural heritage of the Nation's communities and their citizens;

(2) the term "nonprofit organization" includes States and units of local governments (including public agencies or special authorities thereof), regional organizations of local governments, and nonprofit societies, neighborhood groups, institutions, organizations, associations, or museums;

(3) the term "project" means a program or activity organized to carry out the purposes of this title, including programs for neighborhood and community-based arts programs, urban design, user needs design, and the encouragement of the preservation of historic or other structures which have neighborhood or community significance;

(4) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development;

(5) the term "Chairman" means the Chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts;

(6) the term "Department" means the Department of Housing and Urban Development; and

(7) the term "Endowment" means the National Endowment for the Arts.

GRANTS TO OR CONTRACT WITH ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 905. (a) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to, or contract or make other arrangements with, nonprofit organizations (or, in appropriate cases, as determined by the Secretary, to enter into contracts with profitmaking organizations) for the purpose of enabling such organizations to undertake or support in cities, urban communities, or neighborhoods, projects which the Secretary, in consultation with the Chairman, determines will carry out the purposes of this title and which—

(1) have substantial artistic, cultural, or urban design merit,

(2) represent community or neighborhood initiatives which have a significant potential for revitalizing communities or neighborhoods, for enhancing community or neighborhood identity and pride, and for contributing to a more suitable living environment and expanded cultural opportunity for the residents, and particularly low- and moderate-income residents, of the Nation's urban areas, and

(3) meet the criteria established jointly by the Secretary and the Chairman pursuant to this section.

(b) The Secretary and the Chairman shall establish jointly criteria and procedures for evaluating and selecting projects to be assisted under subsection (a) of this section. Such criteria shall address, but need not be limited to, the following factors:

(1) artistic, cultural, historical, or urban design quality;

(2) the degree of broadly based, active involvement of neighborhood residents, community groups, local officials, and persons with expertise in the arts, with the proposed project;

(3) the degree of utilization or stimulation of assistance or cooperation from other Federal, State, and local sources, including private sources and other public or private arts organizations, or the potential for generating such assistance or cooperation;

(4) the feasibility of project implementation, including the capability of the sponsor organization;

(5) the potential contribution to neighborhood revitalization and the creation of a sense of community identity and pride through fostering such activities as preservation of neighborhoods and existing structures;

(6) the potential for stimulating neighborhood economic and community development, particularly for the benefit of persons of low and moderate income; and

(7) the encouragement of utilization of artistic, cultural and historic resources by neighborhood residents, particularly residents of low and moderate income, senior citizens, and handicapped persons.

(c) No financial assistance shall be made to any organization under this section except upon application therefor which is submitted to the Secretary in accordance with regulations and procedures established jointly by the Secretary and the Chairman.

(d) Prior to the approval of any application for financial assistance under this title, the Secretary shall consult with the Chairman and, in accordance with regulations and procedures issued jointly by the Secretary and the Chairman, shall seek the recommendations of State and local officials and private citizens who have broad knowledge of, or experience or expertise in, community and economic development and revitalization, and of such officials and citizens who have broad knowledge of, or expertise in, the arts.

(e) The Secretary, in cooperation with the chairman, shall prescribe regulations to require that a specific portion of the cost of any project assisted under this title shall be provided from sources other than funds made available under this title. The Secretary may reduce or waive such requirement in order to take account of the financial capacity of the applicant.

(f)(1) An organization shall be eligible for a grant under this section only if (A) no part of its net earnings inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or stockholders, or individual or individuals, and (B) such organization is not disqualified for tax exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by reason of attempting to influence legislation, and does not participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of any candidate for public office.

(2) The Secretary, in cooperation with the Chairman, shall establish, pursuant to regulations, procedures for eliciting the cooperation of local officials and, where appropriate, State officials in assuring that no application will be approved under this title with respect to a project which would be inconsistent with the objectives of the unit of local government within which such project will be carried out, including the cultural or community development and neighborhood preservation and revitalization plans and activities of such unit.

(3) Funds made available under this title shall not be used to supplant non-Federal funds.

(4) No more than 10 per centum of the funds appropriated for any fiscal year under section 907 shall be available for administrative expenses.

COORDINATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF PROGRAM WITH OTHER FEDERAL AND NON-FEDERAL PROGRAMS

SEC. 906. The Secretary shall insofar as practicable, coordinate the administration of the provisions of this title, and encourage the coordination of activities assisted under this title, with existing Federal, State, and local programs and with those undertaken by other public agencies or private groups, including other public or private organizations, and with due regard to the contribution to the objectives of this title which can be made by Federal agencies under other existing programs.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 907. There are authorized to be appropriated for carrying out the puposes of this title not to exceed $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1979, and not to exceed $10,000,0000 for fiscal year 1980. Any amounts appropriated under this section shall remain available until expended.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. REUSS

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. REUSS moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 3084, and insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in H.R. 12433, as passed by the House, as follows:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Housing and Community Development Amendments of 1978".

TITLE I—COMMUNITY AND NEIGHBORHOOD DEVELOPMENT AND CONSERVATION

REHABILITATION LOANS AND LOAN INSURANCE

SEC. 101. (a) Section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964 is amended—

(1) by striking out the undesignated paragraph which follows subsection (a)(3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new undesignated paragraph:

"The Secretary shall, in making loans under this section, give priority to applications by low- and moderate-income persons who own the property to be rehabilitated and will occupy such property upon completion of the rehabilitation, including applications by condominiums and cooperatives in which the residents are principally of low and moderate income.";

(2) by striking out "$50,000" in subsection (c)(4)(B) and inserting in lieu thereof "$100,000";

(3) by striking out "and not to exceed $60,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1977" in subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "not to exceed $60,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1977, and not to exceed $245,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1978"; and

(4) by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(l) The Secretary may not, after 180 days following the date of the enactment of this subsection, make any loan under this section with respect to any property unless the Secretary has determined that the improvements to such property, upon completion of the rehabilitation, will meet cost-effective energy conservation standards prescribed by the Secretary."; and

(5) by inserting "(A)" in subsection (c)(3) after "not to exceed" and by inserting in such subsection after "at any time," the following: "or (B) except that where the Secretary finds it appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section, the Secretary may establish such higher rate of interest for loans which will primarily benefit persons who have annual incomes exceeding 95 percent of the median income of the area. Such higher rate shall not exceed a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current market yield of outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods of maturity comparable to the terms of loans made pursuant to this section, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 percent. In determining an appropriate rate, the Secretary shall consider the condition, location, and anticipated use of the property, the nature of the proposed rehabilitation, the income of the applicant and such other factors as the Secretary finds relevant;".

"(k)(1) The Secretary may, in order to order to assist in the rehabilitation of one- to four-family structures used primarily for residential purposes, insure and make commitments to insure rehabilitation loans (including advances made during rehabilitation) made by financial institutions on and after 180 days following the date of the enactment of the Housing and Community Development Amendments of 1978. Such commitments to insure and such insurance shall be made upon such terms and conditions which the Secretary may prescribe and which are consistent with the provisions of subsections (b), (c), (e), (i), and (j) of this section, except as modified by the provisions of this subsection.

"(2) For the purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'rehabilitation loan' means a loan, advance of credit, or purchase of an obligation representing a loan or advance of credit, made for the purpose of financing—

"(i) the rehabilitation of an existing one- to four-unit structure which will be used primarily for residential purposes;

"(ii) the rehabilitation of such a structure and the refinancing of the outstanding indebtedness on such structure and the real property on which the structure is located; or

"(iii) the rehabilitation of such a structure and the purchase of the structure and the real property on which it is located; and

"(B) the term 'rehabilitation' means the improvement (including improvements designed to meet cost-effective energy conservation standards prescribed by the Secretary) or repair of a structure, or facilities in connection with a structure, and may include the provision of such sanitary or other facilities as are required by applicable codes, a community development plan, or a statewide property insurance plan to be provided by the owner or tenant of the project.

"(3) To be eligible for insurance under this subsection, a rehabilitation loan shall—

"(A) involve a principal obligation (including such initial service charges, appraisal, inspection, and other fees as the Secretary shall approve) in an amount which does not exceed, when added to any outstanding indebtedness of the borrower which is secured by the structure and the property on which it is located, the amount specified in subsection (b)(2); except that, in determining the amount of the principal obligation for purposes of this subsection, the Secretary shall establish as the appraised value of the property an amount not to exceed the sum of the estimated cost of rehabilitation and the Secretary's estimate of the value of the property before rehabilitation;

"(B) bear interest at a rate permitted by the Secretary for mortgages insured under this section; except that the Secretary may permit a higher rate of interest to be applied to the loan with respect to the period beginning with the making of the loan and ending with the completion of the rehabilitation or such earlier time as the Secretary may determine;

"(C) be an acceptable risk, as determined by the Secretary; and

"(D) comply with such other terms, conditions, and restrictions as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(4) Any rehabilitation loan insured under this subsection may be refinanced and extended in accordance with such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, but in no event for an additional amount or term which exceeds the maximum provided for in this subsection.

"(5) All funds received and all disbursements made pursuant to the authority established by this subsection shall be credited or charged, as appropriate, to the General Insurance Fund, and insurance benefits shall be paid in cash out of such Fund or in debentures executed in the name of such Fund. Insurance benefits paid with respect to loans insured under this subsection shall be paid in accordance with paragraphs (6) and (7) of section 220(h); except that, where references to 'this subsection' are found in such paragraphs, such references shall be construed as referring to this subsection.".

(2) Section 203(c) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "subsection (n) is" in the first proviso and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (n) and (k) are"; and

(B) by inserting "or (k)" after "subsection (n)" the second time it appears in such proviso.

(3) The proviso in the first sentence of section 302(b)(1) of such Act is amended by inserting "or section 203(k)" after "title VIII" in clause (3).

URBAN HOMESTEADING

SEC. 102. The first sentence of section 810(g) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" immediately following "fiscal year 1977,"; and

(2) by inserting the following before the period at the end thereof: ", and not to exceed $25,000 for the fiscal year 1979".

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM AMENDMENTS

SEC. 103. (a) Section 104(a)(4)(B)(i) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended by inserting "including existing units to be upgraded and thereby preserved," immediately following "existing dwelling units,".

(b) Sections 104(a) of such Act is amended by inserting the following after "expected to reside in the community" in paragraphs (3)(C) and (4)(A): "as a result of existing or projected employment opportunities in the community".

(c) Section 104(c) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "and co-equal" after "primary" in paragraph (3); and

(2) by adding the following new sentence at the end thereof:

"The Secretary may not disapprove an application on the basis that such application addresses any one of the primary purposes described in paragraph (3) to a greater or lesser degree than any other.".

(d) Section 105(a)(11) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(11) relocation payments and assistance for displaced individuals, families, businesses, organizations, and farm operations, when determined by the grantee to be appropriate to the community development program;".

(e) Title I of such Act is amended by adding the following new section at the end thereof:

"FAIR ACCESS FOR SMALLER COMMUNITIES

SEC. 120. The Secretary shall not establish requirements that limit or exclude the excess of any community from assistance under this title on the basis of the population of such community except as expressly authorized by statute."

(f) The last sentence of section 107(a)(8) of such Act is amended to read as follows: "The Secretary may also provide, directly or through contracts, technical assistance under this paragraph to such governmental units, or to a group designated by such a governmental unit for the purpose of assisting that governmental unit to carry out its Community Development Program."

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 104. The amendments made by this title shall become effective October 1, 1978; except that the amendments made by subsections (b), (c) and (f) of section 103 shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.

TITLE II—HOUSING ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR CERTAIN HOUSING PROJECTS

SEC. 201. (a) The purpose of this section is to improve the management of certain housing projects covered by, or formerly covered by, mortgages insured under the National Housing Act, or assisted or approved for assistance under such Act, so that the financial soundness of such projects may be restored or maintained and so that a low- and moderate-income character may be maintained in such projects.

(b) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (hereinafter referred to in this section as the "Secretary") may make available, and contract to make available, to such extent and in such amounts as may be approved in appropriation Acts, financial assistance to owners of rental or cooperative housing projects meeting the requirements of this section. Such assistance shall be made on an annual basis and in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(c) A rental or cooperative housing project is eligible for assistance under this section only if such project—

(1)(A) assisted under section 236 or the proviso of section 221(d)(5) of the National Housing Act, or under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965; except that, in the case of any such project which is not insured under the National Housing Act, such assistance may not be provided before October 1, 1979; or

(B) met the criteria specified in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph before the acquisition of such project by the Secretary and has been sold by the Secretary, subject to a mortgage insured or held by the Secretary and subject to an agreement (in effect during the period of assistance under this section) which provides that the low- and moderate-income character of the project will be maintained; except that, with respect to projects sold after October 1, 1978, assistance shall be available for a period not to exceed two years; and

(2) meets such other requirements consistent with the purposes of this section as the Secretary may prescribe.

(d) No assistance may be made available under this section unless the Secretary has determined that—

(1) such assistance, when considered with other resources available to the project, is necessary and, in the determination of the Secretary, will restore or maintain the financial soundness of the project and maintain the low- and moderate-income character of the project;

(2) the assistance which could reasonably be expected to be provided over the useful life of the project will be less costly to the Federal Government than other reasonable alternatives by which the Secretary could maintain the low- and moderate-income character of the project;

(3) the owner together with the mortgagee in the case of a project not insured under the National Housing Act, has provided or has committed itself to providing assistance to the project;

(4) the project is structurally sound, as determined on the basis of information obtained as a result of an onsite inspection of the project;

(5) the community in which the project is located has evidenced a commitment to provide essential services in keeping with the community's general level of such services;

(6) the real estate taxes on the project are not greater than would be the case if the property was assessed in a manner consistent with the normal property assessment procedures for the community in which the property is located;

(7) the management of the project is being conducted by persons who meet minimum levels of competency and experience prescribed by the Secretary; and

(8) the project is being operated and managed in accordance with a management-improvement-and-operating plan which is designed to reduce the operating costs of the project, which has been approved by the Secretary, and which inludes the following: (A) a detailed maintenance schedule; (B) a schedule for correcting past deficiencies in maintenance, repairs, and replacements; (C) a plan to upgrade the project to meet cost-effective energy efficiency standards prescribed by the Secretary; (D) a plan to improve financial and management control systems; (E) a detailed annual operating budget taking into account such standards for operating costs in the area as may be determined by the Secretary; and (F) such other requirements as the Secretary may determine; and

(9) the appropriate unit of general local government has been consulted to insure consistency with local plans and priorities.

(e)(1) The Secretary may, with respect to any year, provide assistance under this section, and make commitments to provide such assistance, with respect to any project in any amount which the Secretary determines is consistent with the project's management-improvement-and-operating plan described in subsection (d)(7) and which does not exceed the sum of—

(A) an amount determined by the Secretary to be necessary to correct deficiencies in the project which exist at the beginning of the first year with respect to which assistance is made available for the project under this section, which were caused by the deferral of regularly scheduled maintenance and repairs or the failure to make necessary and timely replacements of equipment and other components of the project, and for which payment has not previously been made;

(B) an amount determined by the Secretary to be necessary to maintain the low- and moderate-income character of the project by reducing deficiencies, which exist at the beginning of the first year with respect to which assistance is made available for the project under this section and for which payment has not previously been made, in the reserve funds established by the project owner for the purpose of replacing capital items; and

(C) an amount not greater than the amount by which the estimated operating expenses (as described in paragraph (2) of this subsection) for the year with respect to which such assistance is made available exceeds the estimated revenues to be received (as described in paragraph (2) of this subsection) by the project during such year.

(2) The estimated revenues for any project under paragraph (1)(C) of this subsection with respect to any year shall be equal to the sum of—

(A) the estimated amount of rent which is to be expended by the tenants of such project during such year, as determined by the Secretary without regard to section 236(f)(1) of the National Housing Act;

(B) the estimated amount of rental assistance payments to be made on behalf of such tenants during such year, other than assistance made under this section;

(C) the estimated amount of assistance payments to be made on behalf of the owner of such project under section 221(d)(5) or section 236 of the National Housing Act during such year; and

(D) other income attributable to the project as determined by the Secretary;

(F) in computing the estimated amount of rent to be expended by tenants and the estimated amount of rental assistance payments to be made on behalf of such tenants, the Secretary may permit a delinquency-and-vacancy allowance of not more than 6 percent of the estimated amount of such rent and payments computed without regard to such allowance; except that, with respect to the first two years in which assistance is provided to a project under this section, the Secretary may permit such allowance for such project to exceed such 6 percent by an amount which the Secretary determines is appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.

For purposes of computing estimated operating expenses of any such project with respect to any year, the Secretary shall include all estimated operating costs which the Secretary determines to be necessary and consistent with the management-improvement-and-operating plan for the project for such year, including, but not limited to, taxes, utilities maintenance and repairs (except for maintenance and repairs which should have been performed in previous years), management, insurance, debt service, and payments made by the owner for the purpose of establishing or maintaining a reserve fund for replacement costs. The Secretary may not include in such estimated operating expenses any return on the equity investment of the owner in such project.

(3) Any assistance payments made pursuant to this section with respect to any project shall be made on an annual basis payable at such intervals, but at least quarterly, as the Secretary may determine, and may be in any amount (which the Secretary determines to be consistent with the purpose of this section), except that the sum of such assistance payments for any year may not exceed the amount computed pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection. The Secretary shall review the operations of the project at the project at the time of such payments to determine that such operations are consistent with the management-improvement-and-operating plan.

(f) In order to carry out the purposes of this section, the Secretary may, notwithstanding the provisions of section 236(f)(1) of the National Housing Act, provide that, for purposes of establishing a rental charge under such section, there may be excluded from the computation of the cost of operating a project an amount equivalent to the amount of assistance payments made for the project under this section.

(g) The Secretary may issue such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(h) There are authorized to be appropriated, for the purpose of providing financial assistance under this section, an amount (in addition to any amount appropriated for use under this section pursuant to section 236(f)(3) of the National Housing Act) not to exceed $74,000,000 for the fiscal year 1979.

(i) Effective October 1, 1978, section 236 of the National Housing Act is amended—

(1) by striking out the third and fourth sentences of subsection (g); and

(2) by striking out subsection (f)(3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) The Secretary shall utilize the fund described in subsection (g) for the sole purpose of carrying out the purposes of section 201 of the Housing and Community Development Amendments of 1978. No payments may be made from such fund unless approved in an appropriation Act. No amount may be so approved for any fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1979.".

HOUSING FOR THE ELDERLY AND THE HANDICAPPED

SEC. 202. (a) Section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) Of the amounts made available in appropriation Acts for loans pursuant to subsection (a)(4)(C) for the fiscal year commencing on October 1, 1978, not less than $50,000,000 shall be available for loans for the development of rental housing and related facilities specifically designed to meet the needs of handicapped (primarily nonelderly) persons. The Secretary shall take steps as may be necessary to assure that—

"(1) funds made available pursuant to this subsection will be used to support innovative methods of meeting the needs of handicapped persons by providing a variety of housing options, ranging from small group homes to independent living complexes; and

"(2) housing and related facilities assisted under this subsection will provide handicapped persons occupying units within such units within such housing with an assured range of services specified in subsection (f) and the opportunity for optimal independent living and participation in normal daily activities, and will facilitate access by such persons to the community at large and to suitable employment opportunities within such community.".

(b) The second sentence of section 202(a)(4)(C) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "in any fiscal year" after "under this section"; and

(2) by striking out "for such year" after "authority established".

(c) Section 202(d)(3) of such Act is amended by inserting "the cost of moveables necessary to the basic operation of the project as determined by the Secretary," immediately after "related facilities,".

(d) Section 202(d)(2) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(2) The term 'corporation' means any incorporated private institution or foundation—

"(A) no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any member, founder, contributor, or individual;

"(B) which has a governing board (i) the membership of which is selected in a manner to assure that there is significant representation of the views of the community in which such project is located, and (ii) which is responsible for the operation of the housing project assisted under this section; and

"(C) which is approved by the Secretary as to financial responsibility.".

LOW-INCOME HOUSING

SEC. 203. (a) Section 5(c) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" immediately after "October 1, 1976," in the first sentence;

(2) by inserting immediately after "on October 1, 1977," in the first sentence the following: "and by $1,195,043,000 on October 1, 1978";

(3) by striking out the second and fourth sentences; and

(4) by inserting "and on and after October 1 1978," immediately after October 1, 1976," in the third sentence.

(b) Section 8(d)(1)(B) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(B) the owner shall have the right to give notice to vacate, in accordance with State and local laws which the Secretary has determined provide adequate protection for tenants and in accordance with the determination of the public housing authority pursuant to review procedures which the Secretary has determined provide such protection;".

(c)(1) Section 8 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) In entering into contracts under this section with respect to substantially rehabilitated dwelling units, the Secretary shall provide that—

"(1) the maximum monthly rent permitted for the assisted units be not greater than the amount permitted under subsection (c) or a lesser amount which the Secretary determines is appropriate taking into consideration the investment of the owner in the assisted units and such other factors as the Secretary determines to be relevant;

"(2) the assisted units be rehabilitated to a level which meets but does not exceed applicable codes and standards for decent, safe, and sanitary housing which are prescribed by the Secretary;

"(3) all the dwelling units in the housing structure in which the assisted units are located meet applicable codes and standards prescribed by the Secretary for decent, safe, and sanitary housing;

"(4) the term of any such contract does not exceed the maximum term permitted under subsection (e)(1) or a shorter term which the Secretary determines is appropriate taking into consideration the amount of investment of the owner in the assisted units and such other factors as the Secretary determines to be relevant; and

"(5) the assisted units meet cost-effective energy efficiency standards prescribed by the Secretary.".

(2) The amendments made by this subsection shall become effective with respect to contracts entered into on or after 180 days following the date of enactment of this Act.

(d) Section 8 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) The Secretary may enter into annual contributions contracts under this subsection for the purpose of assisting lower income families by making rental assistance payments with respect to real property on which is located a mobile home which is owned by any such family and utilized by such family as its principal place of residence. In carrying out this subsection, the Secretary may (A) enter into annual contributions contracts with public housing agencies pursuant to which such agencies may enter into contracts to make such assistance payments to the owners of such real property, or (B) enter into such contracts directly with the owners of such real property.

"(2) Contracts entered into pursuant to this subsection shall establish the maximum monthly rent (including maintenance and management charges) which the owner is entitled to receive for each space on which a mobile home is located and with respect to which assistance payments are to be made. The maximum monthly rent shall not exceed by more than 10 per centum the fair market rental established by the Secretary periodically (but not less than annually) with respect to the market area for the rental of real property suitable for occupancy by families assisted under this subsection. The provisions of subsection (c)(2) of this section shall apply to the adjustments of maximum monthly rents under this subsection.

"(3) The amount of any monthly assistance payment with respect to any family assisted under this subsection shall be the difference between 25 per centum of one-twelfth of the annual income of such family and the sum of—

"(A) the monthly payment made by such family to amortize the cost of purchasing the mobile home;

"(B) monthly utility payments made by such family, subject to reasonable limitations prescribed by the Secretary; and

"(C) the maximum monthly rent permitted with respect to the real property which is rented by such family for the purpose of locating its mobile home; except that in no case may such assistance exceed the total amount of such maximum monthly rent.

"(4) Each contract entered into under this subsection shall be for a term of not less than one month and not more than 180 months.

"(5) The Secretary may prescribe other terms and conditions which are necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this subsection and which are consistent with the purposes of this subsection.".

(e) Section 9(c) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" immediately following "on or after October 1, 1976"; and

(2) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", and not to exceed $729,000,000 on or after October 1, 1978".

(f) The amendments made by this section, except the amendments made by subsection (c), shall become effective on October 1, 1978.

PUBLIC HOUSING SECURITY

SEC. 204. (a) This section may be cited as the "Public Housing Security Demonstration Act of 1978".

(b)(1) The Congress finds that—

(A) low-income and elderly public housing residents of the Nation have suffered substantially from rising crime and violence, and are being threatened as a result of inadequate security arrangements for the prevention of physical violence, theft, burglary, and other crimes;

(B) older persons generally regard the fear of crime as the most serious problem in their lives, to the extent that one-fourth of all Americans over 65 voluntarily restrict their mobility because of it;

(C) crime and the fear of crime have led some residents to move from public housing projects;

(D) an integral part of successfully providing decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for low-income persons is to insure that the housing is secure; and

(E) local public housing authorities may have inadequate security arrangements for the prevention of crime and vandalism.

(2) It is, therefore, declared to be the policy of the United States to provide for a demonstration and evaluation of effective means of mitigating crime and vandalism in public housing projects, in order to provide a safe living environment for the residents, particularly the elderly residents, of such projects.

(c)(1) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall promptly initiate and carry out during the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1978, to the extent approved in appropriation Acts, a program for the development, demonstration, and evaluation of improved, innovative community anticrime and security methods, concepts and techniques which will mitigate the level of crime in public housing projects and their surrounding neighborhoods.

(2) In selecting public housing projects to receive assistance under this section, the Secretary shall assure that a broad spectrum of project types, locations and tenant populations are represented and shall consider at least the following: the extent of crime and vandalism currently existing in the projects; the extent, nature and quality of community anticrime efforts in the projects and surrounding areas; the extent, nature and quality of police and other protective services available to the projects and their tenants; the demand for public housing units in the locality, the vacancy rate, and extent of abandonment of such units; and the characteristics and needs of the public housing tenants.

(3) In selecting the anticrime and security methods, concepts and techniques to be demonstrated under this section, the Secretary shall consider the improvement of physical security equipment for dwelling units in those projects, social and environmental design improvements, tenant awareness and volunteer programs, tenant participation and employment in providing security services, and such other measures as deemed necessary or appropriate by the Secretary. Particular attention shall be given to comprehensive community anticrime and security plans submitted by public housing authorities which (i) provide for coordination between housing management and local law enforcement officials, or (ii) coordinate resources available to the community through programs funded by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Department of Labor, the Community Services Administration, ACTION or other State or Federal agencies.

(d) The Secretary shall initiate and carry out a survey of crime and vandalism existing in the Nation's public housing projects. The survey shall include the nature, extent and impact of crime and vandalism and the nature and extent of resources currently available and employed to alleviate crime and vandalism in public housing.

(e) The Secretary shall report to the Congress not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act. Such report shall include the results of the survey on crime and vandalism in public housing; findings from the demonstration and evaluation of various methods of reducing the level of crime; and legislative recommendations, if appropriate for (i) a comprehensive program to increase security in public housing projects and (ii) increasing the coordination between anticrime programs of other State and Federal agencies that may be used by public housing authorities. Any recommendations shall include estimated costs of such programs.

(f) Of the additional authority approved in appropriation Acts with respect to entering into annual contributions contracts under section 5(c) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1978, the Secretary may utilize up to $12,000,000 of such authority in the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1978, for the establishment of the public housing security demonstration program authorized by this section.

DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

SEC. 205. (a) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall conduct a demonstration program, beginning in fiscal year 1979, for the purpose of determining new methods by which the program established by section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 can be improved in order to encourage more owners of new, substantially rehabilitated, and existing housing to utilize such program and thereby provide additional housing for low-income families, particularly families which have more than two children and which reside in market areas with a low-vacancy rate in rental housing. In carrying out this section, the Secretary may utilize the additional authority to enter into contracts for annual contributions provided on October 1, 1978, and approved in appropriation Acts, under section 5(c) of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

(b) The Secretary shall report to both Houses of the Congress annually, during the duration of such demonstration program, for the purpose of providing a detailed accounting of the results of such program.

"(a) Notwithstanding the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, any Federal surplus real property within the meaning of such Act may, in the discretion of the Administrator of General Services, be transferred to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development at the Secretary's request for sale or lease by the Secretary at its fair value for use in the provision of housing to be occupied predominantly by families or individuals of low and moderate income, assisted under a Federal housing assistance program administered by the Secretary or under a State or local program found by the Secretary to have the same general purpose, and for related public commercial or industrial facilities approved by the Secretary. Prior to any disposition of Federal surplus real property to an entity other than a public body, the Secretary shall notify the governing body of the locality where such property is located of the proposed disposition and no such disposition shall be made if the local governing body, within ninety days of such notification, formally advises the Secretary that it objects to the proposed disposition.".

(b) Section 414(b) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) As a condition of any disposition by the Secretary of Federal surplus real property under this section to an entity other than a public body, the Secretary shall obtain such understandings as the Secretary may consider appropriate to assure that the property will be used, to the maximum practicable extent, in the provision of housing and related facilities to be occupied by families or individuals of low and moderate income for a period of not less than thirty years. If during such period the property is used for any purpose other than the purpose for which it was disposed of, it shall revert to the United States (or, in the case of leased property, the lease shall terminate) unless the Secretary and the Administrator, after the expiration of the first twenty years of such period, have approved the use of the property for such other purposes.".

INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION MORTGAGE PURCHASE AUTHORITY AND LIMITS

SEC. 318. Clause (3) of the proviso in the first sentence of section 302(b)(1) of the National Housing Act is amended by striking out "if the original obligation thereof exceeds or exceeded $33,000 (or such higher amount not in excess of $38,000 as the Secretary may by regulation specify in any geographical area where he finds that cost levels so require), for each family residence or dwelling unit covered by the mortgage (plus an additional $2,500 for each such family residence or dwelling unit which has four or more bedrooms)." and inserting in lieu thereof "if the original principal obligation thereof exceeds or exceeded $50,000 in the case of property upon which is located a dwelling designed principally for a one-family residence; or $55,000 in the case of a two- or three-family residence; or $62,500 in the case of a four-family residence; or, in the case of a property containing more than four dwelling units, $38,000 per dwelling unit (or such higher amount not in excess of $45,000 per dwelling unit as the Secretary may by regulation specify in any geographical area where the Secretary finds that cost levels so require) for that part of the property attributable to dwelling use.".

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF BUILDING SCIENCES

SEC. 319. Section 809(h) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended by inserting after "1978" the following: ", and any amounts not appropriated for fiscal years 1977 and 1978 shall be available for appropriation through fiscal year 1979".

AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL HOME LOAN MORTGAGE CORPORATION ACT

SEC. 321. (a) Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 305 of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended by inserting the following before the period at the end of the first sentence thereof: "or from any mortgagee approved by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for participation in any mortgage insurance program under the National Housing Act".

(b) Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 305 of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "The Corportion may establish requirements, and impose charges or fees, which may be regarded as elements of pricing, for different classes of sellers or servicers, and for such purposes the Corporation is authorized to classify sellers or services according to type, size, location, assets, or, without limitation on the generality of the foregoing, on such other basis or bases of differentiation as the Corporation may consider necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes or provisions of this Act. The Corporation may specify requirements concerning among other things, (A) minimum net worth; (B) supervisory mechanisms; (C) warranty compensation mechanisms; (D) prior approval of facilities; (E) prior organization and servicing experience with respect to different types of mortgages; (F) capital contributions and substitutes; (G) mortgage purchase volume limits; and (H) reduction of mortgage purchases during periods of borrowing. With respect to any particular type of seller, the Corporation shall not be required to make available programs involving prior approval of mortgages, optional delivery of mortgages, and purchase of other than conventional mortgages to an extent greater than the Corporation elects to make such programs available to other types of eligible sellers. Any requirements specified by the Corporation pursuant to the preceding three sentences must bear a rational relationship to the purposes or provisions of this Act, but will not be considered discriminatory solely on the grounds of differential effects on types of eligible sellers. Insofar as is practicable, the Corporation shall make reasonable efforts to encourage participation in its programs by each type of eligible seller.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall become effective at the end of the two hundred and ten calendar days after enactment of this Act, but not before January 31, 1979, or on such earlier date as the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation may prescribe.

SALE OF ACQUIRED PROPERTY TO COOPERATIVES

SEC. 322. Section 246 of the National Housing Act is amended to read as follows:

"SALE OF ACQUIRED PROPERTY TO COOPERATIVES

"SEC. 246. In any case in which the Secretary sells a multifamily housing project acquired as the result of a default on a mortgage which was insured under this Act to a cooperative which will operate it on a nonprofit basis and restrict permanent occupancy of its dwellings to members, or to a nonprofit corporation which operates as a consumer cooperative as defined by the Secretary, the Secretary may accept a purchase money mortgage, or upon application of the mortgagee, insure a mortgage under this section upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines are reasonable and appropriate, in a principal amount equal to the value of the property at the time of purchase, which value shall be based upon a mortgage amount on which the debt service can be met from the income of the property when operated on a nonprofit basis after payment of all operating expenses, taxes, and required reserves; except that the Secretary may add to the mortgage amount an amount not greater than the amount of prepaid expenses and costs involved in achieving cooperative ownership, or make such other provision for payment of such expenses and costs as the Secretary deems reasonable and appropriate. Prior to such disposition of a project, funds may be expended by the Secretary for necessary repairs and improvements.".

SECONDARY MORTGAGES ON INSURED PROPERTIES

SEC. 323. Title V of the National Housing Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SECONDARY MORTGAGES ON INSURED PROPERTIES

"SEC. 528. In carrying out the provisons of title II of this Act with respect to insuring mortgages secured by a one- to four-family dwelling unit, the Secretary may not deny such insurance for any such mortgage solely because the dwelling unit which secures such mortgage will be subject to a secondary mortgage or loan made or insured, or other secondary lien held, by any State or local governmental agency or instrumentality under terms and conditions approved by the Secretary.".

SEC. 324. (a) Section 7 of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(o)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of the law, simultaneously with prescribing any rule or regulation, under this Act or any other Act, excluding section 3 of Public Law 90–301, the Secretary shall transmit a copy thereof to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives. Except as provided in paragraph (2), the rule or regulation shall not become effective, if within 90 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after the date the rule or regulation is prescribed, either House of Congress adopts a resolution, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: 'That the disapproves the rule or regulation prescribed by the Department dealing with the matter of which rule or regulation was transmitted to Congress on ', the blank spaces therein being appropriately filled.

"(2) If, at the end of 60 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after the date on which a rule or regulation is prescribed, no committee of either House of Congress has reported or been discharged from further consideration of a resolution disapproving the rule or regulation and neither House has adopted such a resolution, the rule or regulation may go into effect immediately.

"(3) Congressional inaction on, or rejection of, a resolution of disapproval under this subsection shall not be deemed an expression of approval of the rule or regulation involved.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) continuity of session is broken only by an adjournment of Congress sine die; and

"(B) the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain are excluded in the computation of 60, and 90 calendar-days of continuous session of Congress.".

(b) The amendments made in this section shall apply to any rule or regulation of the Department of Housing and Urban Development in the Federal Register prior to June 30, 1978. If any such rule or regulation becomes final before the date of enactment of this section, such rule shall cease to be in effect and shall be subject to the provision of section 7(b) of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act, as added by this section.

AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 401. (a) Section 513 of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended—

(1) by striking out "September 30, 1978" in clauses (b) and (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1979";

(2) by striking out "not to exceed $105,000,000" in clauses (b) and (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "$150,000,000" in clause (b) and "$115,000,000" in clause (c); and

(3) by striking out clause (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(d) not to exceed $10,000,000 for research and study programs pursuant to subsections (b), (c), and (d) of section 506 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979;".

(b) Section 514 of such Act is amended by striking out "$25,000,000" in subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "$38,000,000 (subject to approval in an appropriation Act)".

(c) Section 515(b)(5) of such Act is amended by striking out "September 30, 1978" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1979".

(d) Section 517(a)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "September 30, 1978" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1979".

(e) Section 523(f) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "October 1, 1978" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1979";

(2) by striking out "September 30, 1978" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1979"; and

(3) by striking out "$10,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$16,500,000".

(f) Section 525(c) of such Act is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "There are also authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, not to exceed $5,000,000 for the purposes of subsection (a) and not to exceed $5,000,000 for the purposes of subsection (b).".

RURAL HOUSING RESEARCH

SEC. 402. (a) Subsections (b) and (c) of section 506 of the Housing Act of 1949 are amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary is further authorized and directed to conduct research, technical studies, and demonstrations relating to the mission and programs of the Farmers Home Administration and the national housing goals defined in section 2 of this Act. In connection with such activities, the Secretary shall seek to promote the construction of adequate farm and other rural housing, with particular attention to the housing needs of the elderly, handicapped, migrant and seasonal farmworkers, Indians and other identifiable groups with special needs. The Secretary shall conduct such activities for the purpose of stimulating construction; improving the architectural design and utility of dwellings and buildings; and utilizing new and native materials, economies in materials and construction methods, and new methods of production, energy conservation, distribution, assembly, and construction. In addition, the Secretary shall conduct such activities for the purpose of reducing the cost of such dwellings and buildings and adapting and developing fixtures and appurtenances for more efficient and economical farm and other rural housing use.

"(c) The Secretary is further authorized to carry out a program of research, study, and analysis of rural housing in the United States for the purpose of developing data and other information on—

"(1) the adequacy of existing rural housing;

"(2) the nature and extent of current and prospective needs for rural housing, including needs for financing, subsidies, improved design, utility, comfort, and the best methods of meeting such needs;

"(3) the adequacy of the rural housing stock to meet the special needs of the elderly, the handicapped, farmworkers, and Indians and the best methods of meeting such needs;

"(4) problems faced by rural people, including farmers, eligible under section 501 for purchasing, constructing, improving, altering, repairing, and replacing their housing;

"(5) rural growth patterns and the interrelation of rural housing problems and the problems of housing in urban and suburban areas;

"(6) the status of community facilities and services in rural areas, problems resulting from inadequate facilities and services, and recommendations to alleviate such problems; and

"(7) any other matters relating to the provision of adequate rural housing and related community facilities."

(b) Section 506 of such Act is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(f)(1) The Secretary shall conduct a study of housing which is available for migrant and settled farmworkers. In conducting such study, the Secretary shall—

"(A) determine the location, number, quality, and condition of housing units which are available to such farmworkers and the cost assessed such farmworkers for occupying such units;

"(B) recommend legislative, administrative, and other action (including the need for new authority for such action) which may be taken for the purpose of improving both the availability and the condition of such housing units; and

"(C) determine the possible roles which individual farmworkers, farmworker associations, individual farmers, farmer associations, and public and private non-profit agencies can perform in improving the housing conditions of farmworkers.

"(2) The Secretary shall transmit the results of the study described in paragraph (1) to each House of the Congress within one year after the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(g)(1) In order to assist in reducing deaths caused by unsanitary water and waste disposal systems in rural areas, the Secretary shall conduct a study for the purposes of determining—

"(A) the approximate number of rural housing units without access to sanitary waste disposal facilities and potable water or without access to either sanitary waste disposal facilities or potable water; and

"(B) the cost of implementing an emergency program to provide sanitary waste disposal facilities and potable water supplies for such housing units within a two-year period.

"(2) The Secretary shall, no later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this subsection, transmit a report to both Houses of the Congress containing the findings, conclusions, and recommendations of the Secretary with respect to the study conducted pursuant to this subsection.".

NOTIFICATION REQUIREMENT

SEC. 403. Section 510 of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by redesignating paragraph (i) as paragraph (j) and by inserting after paragraph (h) the following new paragraph:

"(i) provide, and shall provide, to any applicant which has been denied assistance under this title adequate written notice of the reasons for which such assistance was denied; and".

RURAL RENTAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 404. (a) Section 521(a)(2)(A) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by inserting after "rental" the second time such term appears in the first sentence the following: ", congregate, or cooperative".

(b) Section 521(a)(2)(A)(i) of such Act is amended by inserting "or by a loan under section 514," immediately after "section 515 for elderly or handicapped housing".

STUDY OF PROBLEMS CAUSED BY REMOTE CLAIMS

SEC. 405. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to in this section as "Secretary") shall make a detailed study of the problems associated with obtaining title insurance by persons in rural areas with respect to real property encumbered by remote claims or other remote encumbrances which prevent such persons from receiving the full benefit of the use of such property, including the benefit of assistance provided under this title. The Secretary shall, in making such study, consider and develop findings and conclusions with respect to—

(1) the extent of such problems as they pertain to the lawful rights of such persons;

(2) the location and amount of land affected by such problems;

(3) the nature, extent, and effectiveness of remedies to such problems presently available, or proposed, under State law;

(4) the potential impact (with respect to existing Federal, State, and local laws) of such remote claims and encumbrances and of any reasonable remedies determined necessary for resolving the problems created for persons by such remote claims or encumbrances;

(5) the liability and losses which might accrue to the Federal Government as a result of each of the remedies considered in the study conducted under this section; and

(6) other issues which the Secretary determines shall be considered, after consulting with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

(b) The Secretary shall, no later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, transmit a report to each House of the Congress. Such report shall contain the findings and conclusions of the Secretary with respect to the study made under this section. In addition such report shall include—

(1) recommendations for Federal legislative actions necessary to implement reasonable remedies to the problems studied under this section; and

(2) recommendations for legislative actions which may be undertaken by State and local governments for the purposes of providing such remedies.

ASSISTANCE TO PERSONS RECEIVING LOANS TO PROVIDE OCCUPANT-OWNED, RENTAL, AND COOPERATIVE HOUSING

SEC. 406. (a) Section 521(a)(1) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(A)" after "SEC 521. (a) (1)";

(2) by striking out everything in the first sentence after "one-eighth of 1 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof a period; and

(3) by inserting the following at the end thereof:

"(B) From the interest rate so determined, the Secretary may provide the borrower with assistance in the form of credits so as to reduce the effective interest rate to a rate not less than 1 per centum per annum for such periods of time as the Secretary may determine for applicants described in subparagraph (A) if without such assistance such applicants could not afford the dwelling or make payments on the indebtedness of the rental or cooperative housing.

"(C) For persons of low income under section 502 or 517(a) whom the Secretary determines are unable to afford a dwelling with the assistance provided under subparagraph (B) and when the Secretary determines that assisted rental housing programs (as authorized under this title, the National Housing Act, and the United States Housing Act of 1937) would be unsuitable in the area in which such persons reside, the Secretary may provide additional assistance, pursuant to amounts approved in appropriation Acts and for such periods of time as the Secretary may determine, which may be in an amount not to exceed the difference between (i) the amount determined by the Secretary to be necessary to pay the principal indebtedness, interest, taxes, insurance, utilities, and maintenance, and (ii) 25 per centum of the income of such applicant.

"(D) With respect to borrowers under section 502 or 517(a) who have received assistance under subparagraph (B) or (C), the Secretary shall provide for the recapture of all or a portion of such assistance rendered upon the disposition or nonoccupancy of the property by the borrower. In providing for such recapture, the Secretary shall make provisions to provide incentives for the borrower to maintain the property in a marketable condition. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any such assistance whenever rendered shall constitute a debt secured by the security instruments given by the borrower to the Secretary to the extent that the Secretary may provide for recapture of such assistance.

"(E) Except for Federal or State laws relating to taxation, the assistance rendered to any borrower under subparagraphs (B) and (C) shall not be considered to be income or resources for any purpose under any Federal or State laws including, but not limited to, laws relating to welfare and public assistance programs.

"(F) Loans subject to the interest rates and assistance provided under this paragraph (1) may be made only when the Secretary determines the needs of the applicant for necessary housing cannot be met with financial assistance from other sources including assistance under the National Housing Act and the United States Housing Act of 1937.

"(G) Interest on loans under section 502 or 517(a) to victims of a natural disaster shall not exceed the rate which would be applicable to such loans under section 502 without regard to this section.

"(H) The aggregate principal amount of loans made to borrowers receiving assistance pursuant to subparagraph (C) shall not exceed $440,000,000.".

(b) Section 517(j) of such Act is amended by striking out "(2)" in paragraph (4).

TITLE V—CONGREGATE SERVICES

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 501. This title may be cited as the "Congregate Housing Services Act of 1978".

FINDINGS

SEC. 502. The Congress finds that—

(1) congregate housing, supplemented by supportive services, offers a proven and cost-effective means of enabling temporarily disabled or handicapped elderly and handicapped individuals to maintain their dignity and independence and to avoid costly and unnecessary institutionalization;

(2) a large and growing number of residents of public housing face premature and unnecessary institutionalization because of deficiencies in the availability, adequacy, coordination, or delivery of the supportive services required for the successful development of adequate numbers of congregate public housing units; and

(3) supplemental supportive services, available on a continuing basis, are essential to a viable congregate housing program.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 503. For purposes of this title—

(1) the term "congregate housing" means (A) low-rent housing which, as of January 1, 1979, was built or under construction, with which there is connected a central dining facility where wholesome and economical meals can be served to such occupants; or (B) low-rent housing constructed after, but not under construction prior to, January 1, 1979, (i) in which some or all of the dwelling units do not have kitchen facilities, and (ii) connected with which there is a central dining facility to provide wholesome and economical meals for such occupants;

(2) the term "congregate services programs" means programs to be undertaken by a public housing agency or a nonprofit corporation to provide assistance, including personal assistance and nutritional meals, to eligible project residents who, with such assistance, can remain independent and avoid unnecessary institutionalization;

(3) the term "elderly" means sixty-two years of age or over;

(4) the term "eligible project resident" means handicapped elderly individuals, nonelderly handicapped individuals, or temporarily disabled elderly individuals, who are residents of congregate housing projects administered by public housing agencies or by a nonprofit corporation;

(5) the term "handicapped" means an impairment which (A) is expected to be of long-continued and indefinite duration, (B) substantially impedes an individual's ability to live independently, and (C) is of such a nature that such ability could be improved by more suitable housing conditions; such impairment may include a functional disability or frailty which is a normal consequence of the human aging process;

(6) the term "personal assistance" means service provided under this title which may include, but is not limited to, aid given to eligible project residents in grooming, dressing, and other activities which maintain personal appearance and hygiene;

(7) the term "professional assessment committee" means a group of at least three persons appointed by a local public housing agency or a nonprofit corporation and shall include qualified medical professionals and other persons professionally competent to appraise the functional abilities of elderly or permanently disabled adult persons, or both, in relation to the performance of the normal tasks of daily living; and

(8) the term "temporarily disabled" means an impairment which (A) is expected to be of no more than six months' duration, (B) substantially impedes an indivdual's ability to live independently, and (C) is of such a nature that such ability could be improved by more suitable housing conditions; and

(9) the term "nonprofit corporation" means any corporation responsible for a housing project assisted under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959.

AUTHORIZATION TO ENTER INTO CONTRACTS

SEC. 504. The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to enter into contracts with local public housing agencies under the United States Housing Act of 1937 (hereinafter referred to as "public housing agencies") and with nonprofit corporations, utilizing sums appropriated under this title, to provide congregate services programs for eligible project residents in order to promote and encourage maximum independence within a home environment for such households capable of self-care with appropriate supportive congregate services. Each contract between the Secretary and a public housing agency shall be for a term of not less than three years or more than five years and shall be renewable at the expiration of such term.

CONGREGATE SERVICES PROGRAM

SEC. 505. (a) Congregate services programs assisted under this title must include full meal service adequate to meet nutritional needs, and may also include housekeeping aid, personal assistance and other services essential for maintaining independent living.

(b) No services funded under this title may duplicate services which are already affordable, accessible, and sufficiently available on a long-term basis to eligible project residents under programs administered by or receiving appropriations through any department, agency, or instrumentality of the Federal Government or any other public or private department, agency, or organization.

(c) A public housing agency and a nonprofit corporation applying for assistance shall consult with the Area Agency on Aging (or, where no Area Agency on Aging exists, with the appropriate State agency under the Older Americans Act of 1965) in determining the means of providing services under this title and in identifying alternative available sources of funding for such services.

(d) Prior to the submission of a final application for either new or renewed funding under this title, a public housing agency and a nonprofit corporation shall present a copy of a proposed application to the Area Agency on Aging (or, where no Area Agency on Aging exists, to the appropriate State agency under the Older Americans Act of 1965) for review and comment. Such agency and nonprofit corporation shall consider such review and comment in the development of any final application for either new or renewed funding under this title.

(e)(1) When nonelderly handicapped individuals are included among the eligible project residents, the public housing agency and nonprofit corporation shall consult with the appropriate local agency, if any, designated by applicable State law as having responsibility for the development, provision, or identification of social services to permanently disabled adult individuals, for the purpose of determining the means of providing services under this title and of identifying alternative available sources of funding for such services.

(2) Such public housing agency and nonprofit corporation shall also, prior to the submission of a final application for either new or renewed funding under this title, present a copy of the proposed application to such appropriate local agency for review and comment. The public housing agency and nonprofit corporation shall consider such review and comment in the development of any final application for either new or renewed funding under this title.

(f) Any nonprofit corporation or public housing agency receiving assistance under this title may provide congregate services directly to eligible project residents or may, by contract or lease, provide such services through other appropriate agencies or providers.

(g) Nonprofit corporations and public housing agencies receiving assistance for congregate services programs under this title shall be required to maintain the same dollar amount of annual contribution which they were making, if any, in support of the provision of services eligible for assistance under this title before the date of the submission of the application for such assistance unless the Secretary determines that the waiver of this requirement is necessary for the maintenance of adequate levels of services to eligible project residents. If any contract or lease entered into by a public housing agency or nonprofit corporation pursuant to subsection (f) of this section provides for adjustments in payments for services to reflect changes in the cost of living, then the amount of annual contribution required to be maintained by such public agency or nonprofit corporation under the preceding sentence shall be readjusted in the same manner.

(h) Each nonprofit corporation and public housing agency shall establish fees for meal service and other appropriate services provided to eligible project residents. These fees shall be reasonable, may not exceed the cost of providing the service, and shall be calculated on a sliding scale related to income which permits the provision of services to such residents who cannot afford meal and service fees. When meal services are provided to other project residents, fees shall be reasonable and may not exceed the cost of providing the meal service.

(i) The Secretary shall establish standards for the provision of services under this title, and, in developing such service standards, the Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and with appropriate organizations representing the elderly and handicapped, as determined by the Secretary.

ELIGIBILITY AND SELECTION

SEC. 506. (a) The identification of eligible project residents who may participate in a congregate services program assisted under this title, and the designation of the services appropriate to their individual functional abilities and needs, shall be made by a professional assessment committee utilizing procedures which insure that the process of determining eligibility of individuals for services under this title shall accord such individuals fair treatment and due process.

(b) Other residents may participate in a congregate meal service program assisted under this title if the local public housing agency or nonprofit corporation determines that the participation of these individuals will not adversely affect the cost-effectiveness or operation of the program.

APPLICATION PROCEDURES

SEC. 507. (a) An application for assistance under this title shall include—

(1) a plan specifying the types and priorities of the basic services the public housing agency or nonprofit corporation proposes to provide during the term of the contract; such plan must be related to the needs and characteristics of the eligible project resident and, to the maximum extent practicable, provide for the changing needs and characteristics of all project residents; such plan shall be determined after consultation with eligible project residents and with the professional assessment committee;

(2) a list of the names and professional qualifications of the members of the professional assessment committee;

(3) the fee schedule established pursuant to section 505(h) of this title; and

(4) a statement affirming (A) that the nonprofit corporation or public housing agency has followed the consultation procedures required in subsections (c), (d), and (e) of section 505, and (B) that such application complies with subsection (b) of such section.

(b) The Secretary shall establish appropriate deadlines for each fiscal year for the submission of applications for funding under this title and shall notify any public housing agency and nonprofit corporation applying for assistance under this title of acceptance or rejection of its application within ninety days of such submission.

(c) Within twelve months prior to the submission of an application for renewed funding under this title, each nonprofit corporation and public housing agency shall review the performance, appropriateness, and fee schedules of their congregate services program with eligible project residents and with the professional assessment committee. The results of such review shall be included in any application for renewal and shall be considered in the development of the application for renewal by the nonprofit corporation or public housing agency and in its evaluation by the Secretary.

EVALUATION OF APPLICATIONS AND PROGRAMS

SEC. 508. (a) In evaluating applications for assistance under this title, the Secretary shall consider—

(1) the types and priorities of the basic services proposed to be provided, and the relationship of such proposal to the needs and characteristics of the eligible residents of the projects where the services are to be provided;

(2) how quickly services will be established following approval of the application;

(3) the degree to which local social services are adequate for the purpose of assisting eligible project residents to maintain independent living and avoid unnecessary institutionalization;

(4) the professional qualifications of the members of the professional assessment committee; and

(5) the reasonableness of fee schedules established for each congregate service

(b) In evaluating programs receiving assistance under this title, the Secretary shall—

(1) establish procedures for the review and evaluation of the performance of nonprofit corporations and public housing agencies receiving assistance under this title, including provisions for the submission of an annual report, by each such nonprofit corporation and public housing agency, which evaluates the impact and effectiveness of its congregate services program; and

(2) publish annually and submit to the Congress, a report on and evaluation of the impact and effectiveness of congregate services programs assisted under this title. Such report and evaluation shall be based, in part, on the evaluations required to be submitted pursuant to paragraph (1).

FUNDING PROCEDURES

SEC. 509. (a) The Secretary shall establish procedures—

(1) to assure timely payments to nonprofit corporations and public housing agencies for approved assisted congregate services programs with provision made for advance funding sufficient to meet necessary startup costs;

(2) to permit reallocation of funds approved for the establishment of congregate services in existing public housing projects and projects assisted under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 if the services are not established within six months of the notification date of funding approval;

(3) to assure that where such funding has been approved for the establishment of congregate services for public housing projects and projects assisted under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 under construction or approved for construction, these services shall be in place at the start of the project's occupancy by tenants requiring such services for maintaining independent living;

(4) to establish accounting and other standards in order to prevent any fraudulent or inappropriate use of funds under this title; and

(5) to assure that no more than 1 per centum of the funds appropriated under this title for any fiscal year may be used by public housing agencies and nonprofit corporations for evaluative purposes required by section 508(b)(1).

(b) The Secretary shall establish a reserve fund, not to exceed 10 per centum of the funds appropriated in each fiscal year for the provision of services under this title, in order to supplement grants awarded to public housing agencies and nonprofit corporations for evaluative purposes as required termination of the Secretary, such supplemental adjustments are required to maintain adequate levels of services to eligible project residents.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 510. (a) Each public housing agency and nonprofit corporation shall, to the maximum extent practicable, utilize elderly and permanently disabled adult persons who are residents of public housing projects or projects assisted under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, but who are not eligible project residents, to participate in providing the services assisted under this title. Such persons shall be paid wages which shall not be lower than whichever is the highest of—

(1) the minimum wage which would be applicable to the employee under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, if section 6(a)(1) of such Act applied to the resident and if he or she were not exempt under section 13 thereof;

(2) the State or local minimum wage for the most nearly comparable covered employment; or

(3) the prevailing rates of pay for persons employed in similar public occupations by the same employer.

(b) No service provided to a public housing resident or to a resident of a housing project assisted under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 under this title, except for wages paid under subsection (a) of this section, may be treated as income for the purpose of any other program or provision of State or Federal law.

(c) Individuals receiving services assisted under this title shall be deemed to be residents of their own households, and not to be residents of a public institution, for the purpose of any other program or provision of State or Federal law.

(d) The Secretary may issue regulations to carry out the provisions of this title.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 511. To carry out the provisions of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated—

(1) for fiscal year 1979, not to exceed $20,000,000;

(2) for fiscal year 1980, not to exceed $25,000,000; and

(3) for fiscal year 1981, not to exceed $35,000,000.

Any sums appropriated pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

AMENDMENT TO UNITED STATES HOUSING ACT OF 1937

SEC. 512. Section 7 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "As used in this section, the term 'congregate housing' means (1) low-rent housing which, as of January 1, 1979, was built or under construction, with which there is connected a central dining facility where wholesome and economical meals can be served to such occupants; or (2) low-rent housing constructed after, but not under construction prior to, January 1, 1979, (A) in which some or all of the dwelling units do not have kitchen facilities, and (B) connected with which there is a central dining facility to provide wholesome and economical meals for such occupants. Such occupants of congregate housing may also be provided with other supportive services appropriate to their needs under title V of the Housing and Community Development Amendments of 1978.".

TITLE VI—NEIGHBORHOOD REINVESTMENT CORPORATION

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 601. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the neighborhood housing services demonstration of the Urban Reinvestment Task Force has proven successful as a program to assist in revitalizing older urban neighborhoods by mobilizing public, private, and community resources at the neighborhood level; and

(2) the demand for neighborhood housing services programs in cities throughout the United States warrants the creation of a public corporation to institutionalize and expand the neighborhood housing services program and other programs of the present Urban Reinvestment Task Force.

(b) The purpose of this title is to establish a public corporation which will continue the joint efforts of the Federal financial supervisory agencies and the Department of Housing and Urban Development to promote reinvestment in older neighborhoods by local financial institutions working cooperatively with community people and local government and which will continue the nonbureaucratic approach of the Urban Reinvestment Task Force, relying largely on local initiative for the specific design of local programs.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A CORPORATION

SEC. 602. (a) There is established a National Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the "corporation") which shall be a body corporate and shall possess the powers, and shall be subject to the direction and limitations specified herein.

(b) The corporation shall implement and expand the demonstration activities carried out by the Urban Reinvestment Task Force.

(c) The corporation shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia or at such other place the corporation may from time to time prescribe.

(d) The corporation, including its franchise, activities, assets, and income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority; except that any real property of the corporation shall be subject to State, territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS; ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 603. (a) The corporation shall be under the direction of a board of directors made up of the following members:

(1) the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board;

(2) the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development;

(3) a member of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, to be designated by the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System;

(4) the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation;

(5) the Comptroller of the Currency; and

(6) the Administrator of the National Credit Union Administration.

(b) The Board shall elect from among its members a chairman who shall serve for a term of two years, except that the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board shall serve as Chairman of the Board of Directors for the first such two-year term.

(c) Each director of the corporation shall serve ex officio during the period he holds the office to which he is appointed by the President.

(d) The directors of the corporation, as full-time officers of the United States, shall serve without additional compensation but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties as directors of the corporation.

(e) The directors of the corporation shall adopt such bylaws, policies, and administrative provisions as are necessary to the functioning of the corporation and consistent with the provisions of this title.

(f) The presence of a majority of the board members shall constitute a quorum.

(g) The corporation shall be subject to the provisions of section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

(h) All meetings of the board of directors will be conducted in accordance with the provisions of section 552b of title V, United States Code.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 604. (a) The board shall have power to select, employ, and fix the compensation and benefits of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as shall be necessary for the performance of its duties under this title, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, classification, and General Schedule pay rates, except that no officer, employee, attorney, or agent of the corporation may be paid compensation at a rate in excess of the highest rate provided for GS–18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) The directors of the corporation shall appoint an executive director who shall serve as chief executive officer of the corporation.

(c) The executive director of the corporation, subject to approval by the board, may appoint and remove such employees of the corporation as he determines necessary to carry out the purposes of the corporation.

(d) No political test or political qualification shall be used in selecting, appointing, promoting, or taking any other personnel action with respect to any officer, agent, or employee of the corporation or of any recipient, or in selecting or monitoring any grantee, contractor, or person or entity receiving financial assistance under this title.

(e) Officers and employees of the corporation shall not be considered officers or employees of the United States.

POWERS AND DUTIES

SEC. 605. (a)(1) The corporation shall continue the work of the Urban Reinvestment Task Force in establishing neighborhood housing services programs in neighborhoods throughout the United States, supervising their progress, and providing them with grants and technical assistance. For the purpose of this paragraph, a neighborhood housing services program may involve a partnership of neighborhood residents and representatives of local governmental and financial institutions, organized as a State-chartered nonprofit corporation, working to bring about reinvestment in one or more neighborhoods through a program of systematic housing inspections, increased public investment, increased private lending, increased resident investment, and a revolving loan fund to make loans available at flexible rates and terms to homeowners not meeting private lending criteria.

(2) The corporation shall continue the work of the urban reinvestment task force in identifying, monitoring, evaluating, and providing grants and technical assistance to selected neighborhood preservation projects which show promise as mechanisms for reversing neighborhood decline and improving the quality of neighborhood life.

(3) The corporation shall experimentally replicate neighborhood preservation projects which have demonstrated success, and after creating reliable developmental processes, bring the new programs to neighborhoods throughout the United States which in the judgment of the corporation can benefit therefrom, by providing assistance in organizing programs, providing grants in partial support of program costs, and providing technical assistance to ongoing programs.

(4) The corporation shall continue the work of the Urban Reinvestment Task Force in supporting Neighborhood Housing Services of America, a nonprofit corporation established to provide services to local neighborhood housing services programs, with support which may include grants and technical assistance to assist in the development of its national loan purchase pool demonstration and may contract with it for services which it can perform more efficiently or effectively than the corporation.

(5) The corporation shall, in making and providing the foregoing grants and technical and other assistance, determine the reporting and management restrictions or requirements with which the recipients of such grants or other assistance must comply. In making such determinations, the corporation shall assure that recipients of grants and other assistance make available to the corporation such information as may be necessary to determine compliance with applicable Federal laws.

(b) To carry out the foregoing purposes and engage in the foregoing activities, the corporation shall have the following powers:

(1) to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal;

(2) to have succession until dissolved by Act of Congress;

(3) to make and perform contracts, agreements, and commitments;

(4) to sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any State, Federal, or other court;

(5) to determine its necessary expenditures and the manner in which the same shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, and appoint, employ, and fix and provide for the compensation of consultants, without regard to any other law, except as provided in section 607(d);

(6) to settle, adjust, and compromise, and with or without compensation or benefit to the corporation to release or waive in whole or in part, in advance or otherwise, any claim, demand, or right of, by, or against the corporation;

(7) to invest such funds of the corporation in such investments as the board of directors may prescribe;

(8) to acquire, take, hold, and own, and to deal with and dispose of any property; and

(9) to exercise all other powers that are necessary and proper to carry out the purposes of this title.

(c)(1) The corporation may contract with the Office of Neighborhood Reinvestment of the Federal home loan banks for all staff, services, facilities, and equipment now or in the future furnished by the Office of Neighborhood Reinvestment to the Urban Reinvestment Task Force, including receiving the services of the Director of the Office of Neighborhood Reinvestment as the corporation's executive director.

(2) The corporation shall have the power to award contracts and grants to—

(A) neighborhood housing services corporations and other nonprofit corporations engaged in neighborhood preservation activities; and

(B) local governmental bodies.

(3) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the Federal home loan banks, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Reserve banks, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Comptroller of the Currency, the National Credit Union Administration or any other department, agency, or other instrumentality of the Federal Government are authorized to provide services and facilities, with or without reimbursement, necessary to achieve the objectives and to carry out the purposes of this title.

(d)(1) The corporation shall have no power to issue any shares of stocks, or to declare or pay and dividends.

(2) No part of the income or assets of the corporation shall inure to the benefit of any director, officer, or employee, except as reasonable compensation for services or reimbursement for expenses.

(3) The corporation may not contribute to or otherwise support any political party or candidate for elective public office.

REPORTS AND AUDITS

SEC. 606. (a) The corporation shall publish an annual report which shall be transmitted by the corporation to the President and the Congress.

(b) The accounts of the corporation shall be audited annually. Such audits shall be conducted in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards by independent certified public accountants who are certified by a regulatory authority of the jurisdiction in which the audit is undertaken.

(c) In addition to the annual audit, the financial transactions of the corporation for any fiscal year during which Federal funds are available to finance any portion of its operations may be audited by the General Accounting Office in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

(d) For any fiscal year during which Federal funds are available to finance any portion of the corporation's grants or contracts, the General Accounting Office, in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States, may audit the grantees or contractors of the corporation.

(e) The corporation shall conduct or require each grantee or contractor to provide for an annual financial audit. The report of each such audit shall be maintained for a period of at least five years at the principal office of the corporation.

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 607. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated to the corporation to carry out this title not to exceed $8,500,000 for fiscal year 1979.

(b) Funds appropriated pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

(c) Non-Federal funds received by the corporation, and funds received by any recipient from a source other than the corporation, shall be accounted for and reported as receipts and disbursements separate and distinct from Federal funds.

(d) The corporation shall prepare annually a business-type budget which shall be submitted to the Office of Management and Budget, under such rules and regulations as the President may establish as to the date of submission, the form and content, the classifications of data, and the manner in which such budget program shall be prepared and presented. The budget of the corporation as modified, amended, or revised by the President shall be transmitted to the Congress as a part of the annual budget required by the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921. Amendments to the annual budget program may be submitted from time to time.

APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT CORPORATION CONTROL ACT

SEC. 608. Section 101 of the Government Corporation Control Act is amended by inserting "National Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation;" after "Federal Housing Administration;".

TITLE VII—TREATMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFIT INCREASES UNDER CERTAIN FEDERAL HOUSING LAWS

SEC. 701. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, social security benefit increases occurring after May 1976 shall not be considered as income or resources or otherwise taken into account for purposes of determining the eligibility for or amount of assistance which any individual or family is provided under the United States Housing Act of 1937, the National Housing Act, the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1955, or the Housing Act of 1949. For purposes of this subsection, the term "social security benefit increases occurring after May 1978" means any part of a monthly benefit payable to an individual under the insurance program established under title II of the Social Security Act which results from (and would not be payable but for) a cost-of-living increase in benefits under such program becoming effective after May 1978 pursuant to section 215(i) of such Act, or any other increase in benefits under such program, enacted after May 1978, which constitutes a general benefit increase within the meaning of section 215(i)(3) of such Act.

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall be effective only with respect to assistance which is provided (under the Acts referred to in the first sentence of such subsection) for periods after September 30, 1978.

TITLE VIII—HOUSING PROGRAM PAPERWORK REDUCTION

FINDINGS AND AUTHORITY

SEC. 801. (a) The Congress finds and declares—

(1) that various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government with responsibilities involving housing and housing finance programs require, approve, use or otherwise employ a variety of different forms as residential mortgages (or deeds of trust or similar security instruments), as notes secured by those mortgages, and for applications, appraisals and other purposes, and that such duplication of forms constitutes a paperwork burden that adds to the costs imposed on the Nation's homeowners and home buyers;

(2) that unnecessary paperwork impairs the effectiveness of Federal housing and housing finance programs;

(3) that both single-family and multifamily programs are affected; and

(4) that simplification of paperwork imposed by Federal housing and housing finance programs would contribute to achieving the Nation's housing goals by reducing housing costs.

(b)(1) Insofar as it is practicable and to the extent permitted by law and to the extent that such action would result in a reduction in paperwork and regulatory burden, the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Veterans' Administration shall employ in their respective programs—

(A) uniform single-family and multi-family note and mortgage forms;

(B) a uniform application form for mortgage approval and commitment for mortgage insurance;

(C) a uniform form for computation of the monthly net effective income of applicants;

(D) a uniform property appraisal form;

(E) a uniform settlement statement which shall satisfy the requirements of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act; and

(F) such other consolidated or simplified forms, the consolidation or simplification of which the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs mutually agree would contribute to a reduction in the paperwork and regulatory burden of housing and housing finance programs administered by the agencies.

(2) Each agency may employ riders, addenda, or similar forms of modification agreements to adapt such uniform forms to its respective programs and policies, consistent with the goals of minimizing the use and extent of such modification agreements and of maximizing the suitability of such forms for the use of all participants, public and private.

(3) To the extent permitted by law, the President may require the Farmers Home Administration and the Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration to comply with the requirements of this section if such compliance will contribute to a reduction in the paperwork and regulatory burden of housing and housing finance programs administered by the agency.

(c) The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall coordinate and monitor the development and implementation by Federal departments and agencies of the efforts required by subsection (b) and shall report to the Congress on such development and implementation as part of each report required under Public Law 93-556.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS).

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill, H.R. 12433, was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON S. 3084, HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT AMENDMENTS

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments to the Senate bill S. 3084, a bill to amend and extend certain Federal laws relating to housing, community, and neighborhood development and preservation, and related programs, and for other purposes, and request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, appoints the following conferees: Messrs. REUSS, ASHLEY, MOORHEAD of Pennsylvania, ST GERMAIN, GONZALEZ, MITCHELL of Maryland, AUCOIN, BLANCHARD, LUNDINE, BROWN of Michigan, STANTON, ROUSSELOT, and WYLIE.

There was no objection.

COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT EXTENSION AND AMENDMENTS

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10285) to extend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, for 4 years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. FOLEY).

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair designates the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER) as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and requests the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH) to assume the chair temporarily.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 10285, with Mr. WIRTH (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. FOLEY) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MADIGAN) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington (Mr. FOLEY).

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10285, a bill which extends and amends the Commodity Exchange Act.

The Commodity Futures Trading Commission was established in 1974 by amendments to the Commodity Exchange Act as a new independent regulatory body, with a much more comprehensive regulatory role than its predecessor agency, which was one of many agencies within the Department of Agriculture.

Under the sunset provision in the 1974 act, authorization for funding of the Commission will expire in September 1978 unless it is extended. In considering legislation to extend the authorization, the Committee on Agriculture began, last December, conducting a serious examination of the proper role of the Commission and the need for changes in its basic mandate. To this end, we held extensive hearings and many markup sessions. The committee also benefited from the review of operations of the Commission conducted by the House Appropriations Committee and the General Accounting Office.

As in 1974, we continue to believe there is a need for a strong, independent regulatory commission and have included in the bill a 3-year extension. The Commission assumed its new responsibilities in the midst of one of the most rapid growth periods the futures industry has ever experienced. The annual volume of futures contracts traded has risen more than 50 percent since 1974 to nearly 43 million contracts traded in 1977. According to the futures industry association, the regulated futures industry exceeded an annual trading volume of $1 trillion in 1977.

The Commission has had several significant accomplishments in its first years of existence despite operating under difficult circumstances. It has issued many of the necessary rules and regulations needed to implement its authority, and it is actively carrying out the job of regulating trading in 62 contracts on the Nation's 10 commodity exchanges. In spite of these accomplishments, the Commission has been the subject of much public controversy. There has also been strong criticism by the General Accounting Office of ineffective management which it claims exists within the Commission.

While the committee is of the view that the Commission's mandate should be extended, it has limited the extension of the appropriation authorization to a 3-year period so that at the end of that period the committee can again review the Commission's performance and the need for changes in its basic authority over this rapidly expanding and often controversial industry. The oversight exercised by the committee during consideration of the reauthorization legislation has proven useful and beneficial. It has brought to the forefront issues confronting the Commission, the public, and the industry.

In H.R. 10285, we have addressed those issues which could be solved through legislation. I would like to highlight a few of the important ones considered by the committee.

Several jurisdictional issues were raised. Both the U.S. Department of the Treasury and the Securities and Exchange Commission supported transferring some of the Commission's jurisdiction and responsibilities to those agencies. In particular, concern was expressed about futures trading in financial instruments and Governments securities. The committee decided, however, that jurisdiction over futures markets should continue to reside in a single agency, such as the Commission, whose regulatory role requires an economic expertise which focuses upon the risk shifting and price determining function that futures trading performs.

We do not believe that the public interest would be served by duplicating regulatory authority over the futures markets. However, the bill would require the Commission to maintain an ongoing liaison with and obtain the views of the Treasury Department, the Federal Reserve System, and the SEC on matters relating to their areas of responsibility. Additionally, it requires that prior to approving a new futures contract on any government security, the Commission must solicit the views of the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve System. Inputs from these agencies should insure that the final decisions made by the CFTC are financially sound and are not in conflict with the national interest.

In dealing with recommendations from several State Securities Commissioners, the committee adopted an amendment to assist in combating fraud and otherwise protect the public in commodity transactions by allowing the States to supplement the Commission's enforcement activities with their own resources. Under the amended act, States would have the authority to investigate and prosecute civil actions in Federal District Court for violations of the act or the Commission's rules and regulations to protect their citizens from persons dealing in London options, dealer options, or leverage contracts.

The States could also investigate and whenever authorized to do so as parens patriae prosecute civilly in Federal court any other violation of the act (other than violations by boards of trade). Under this provision, the States should be able to proceed against futures commission merchants and other commodity professionals involved in futures or options activities on domestic exchanges where the State can show that the violation of the act has harmed or is causing harm to the welfare of its citizens.

Finally, H.R. 10285 makes clear that the States may continue to enforce their own anti-fraud and other criminal statutes of general application against improper activities in commodity related transactions.

The committee refused to adopt a provision that would have authorized the States to bring action in State courts under State statutes identical to the Commodity Exchange Act. The committee was concerned that, despite safeguards in the act, the possibility existed that in time there would be separate bodies of State court decisions among the various States that would cause confusion and disruption among the regulated persons. It is the view of the committee that with the added enforcement authority conferred on the States by H.R. 10285, they should have the flexibility necessary to deter fraud and abuses such as were recently experienced in the sale of commodity options.

The most publicized issue which was addressed by the committee was the matter of the sale of London options. Because of continued fraud in this area and because the Commission found it virtually impossible to regulate the sale of London options, it ordered a suspension of options transactions which became effective June 1, 1978. H.R. 10285 backstops the Commission by providing a congressional ban on options transactions, but leaves the Commission with the authority to move ahead with domestic traded options under rules and regulations adopted by the Commission unless either House of Congress disapproves them within 10 days of the receipt of the Commission's rules and regulations.

The committee bill permits the Commission to set different terms and conditions for different markets. Thus, for example, the bill permits the Commission, if it should so elect, to adopt regulations to implement a pilot program for commodity option trading on certain U.S. exchanges.

H.R. 10285 grants the Commission authority to exempt from the suspension trade options and certain grantors of dealer options under rules and regulations issued under expedited procedures. In committee, there was discussion of proposals whereby options on physical commodities would be exempted from the prohibition if the grantor of the options and the futures commission merchant marketing the options could meet specified criteria. However, the committee believes that it is more consistent with the regulatory process for the Commission to determine whether, and under what circumstances, dealer options might be permitted to be offered to the public, rather than for Congress to mandate specific standards in the act.

H.R. 10285 also contains a number of provisions that relate to management and administration of the Commission. Ambiguities in the act have resulted in disagreement regarding the Executive and administration functions of the Chairman and the policy formulation functions of the Commission. Accordingly the committee has clarified the division of responsibility and authority between the Commission and the Chairman. The committee has also made the term of the Chairman subject to the pleasure of the President to bring it into line with the term of service of Chairmen of many other Federal regulatory bodies. Under H.R. 10285, a new Chairman may be designated at any time by the President subject to confirmation by the Senate. Finally, the committee deleted from the act the requirement that the Executive Director be appointed by the Commission with the advice and consent of the Senate to eliminate constitutional questions arising from the required Senate confirmation.

H.R. 10285 also includes a provision clarifying current statutory provisions relating to registration of national futures associations. Title III of the 1974 act authorized the Commission to register national futures associations which would consist of firms that deal directly with the public and have fiduciary duties to the public. At the present time there are industry participants operating largely beyond exchange supervision which are increasing in number. Regulation of any such persons could be achieved through expansion of Commission activities or, instead, through registration of one or more futures associations which would provide a self-regulatory program under Commission oversight. The committee has left the determination of that issue to the Commission. It has, however, included an amendment which provides expressly that the Commission may approve rules for any futures association or associations that would require persons eligible for membership to become members of at least one such association, upon a determination by the Commission that such rules and regulations are appropriate to achieve the purposes and objectives of the act. Use of the authority of this amendment would be completely discretionary with the Commission. The committee was persuaded that such discretion may be useful to the Commission if it should decide that such a provision is necessary for an effective self-regulation program and is otherwise in the interest of the objectives of the act.

An amendment was also included which would enable a contract market to delegate its arbitration responsibilities under the act to a registered futures association if the Commission should determine it desirable and in the interest of the objectives of the act. The effect of such a provision would be to allow the Commission to provide for centralization of the arbitration programs for customer claims.

H.R. 10285 contains many other amendments of a technical nature. Among other things, these include strengthening the penalty provisions of the act, and tightening the provisions against disclosure of market positions and other data relating to individual traders. A provision has also been included in H.R. 10285 which deletes the requirement for making public any information furnished a congressional committee and provides instead for such information to be furnished a committee on a confidential basis. In addition, H.R. 10285 provides for a hearing on the record for Commission refusal, suspension, or revocation of a contract market designation and prior to issuing a cease-and-desist order or imposing a civil money penalty against a contract market for violating provisions of the act or Commission regulations. Several of the more technical provisions were included in a bill which passed the House in the 94th Congress but failed of enactment in the final days of that Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members of the House to join me in support of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, for a further discussion of the basic directions taken in this legislation, I yield now such time as he may consume to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Conservation and Credit that was responsible for the basic markup of this legislation, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES).

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10285, a bill to extend the life of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission for 3 years and make other amendments to this act. The Senate, on July 12, passed by a vote of 84 to 6, a bill which closely parallels H.R. 10285 except that it would grant a 6-year extension.

The Subcommittee on Conservation and Credit began the "sunset" review last December by contacting the primary parties involved with commodity futures regulation, asking at that early date what changes they felt were needed to update the act. Later we held 3 days of public hearings and held extensive markups in both the subcommittee and full committee.

Additionally, we have closely reviewed the findings of the General Accounting Office and the investigation conducted by the House Committee on Appropriations.

The primary decision, of course, was whether to reauthorize the Commission in its present form or to transfer some or all of its functions to other agencies. Quickly, I decided that an independent regulatory commission was essential to a proper functioning futures trading market in the United States.

I listened to the arguments of the Securities Exchange Commission and the Department of the Treasury as they tried to make bureaucratic power grabs on the jurisdiction of the CFTC. Quickly it was apparent they were using their well deserved prestige in efforts to usurp the jurisdiction of a new and controversial agency. While the committee bill, which was reported by a 40-to-0 vote, does not grant CFTU's jurisdiction to other agencies, it does provide for formalized and mandated consultations with the Federal Reserve Board, the Securities Exchange Commission and the Department of the Treasury on decisions which impact on their areas of responsibility. I feel it is a prudent and well founded step to require the CFTC to seek from these respected agencies their impact on such matters as futures contracts on Government-backed securities and financial instruments. But, Congress was aware, in 1974, when it passed the Commodity Futures Trading Commission Act that the industry was developing proposals for futures trading in financial instruments and Government securities. Congress then, as now, recognizes the uniqueness of futures trading—its primary functions of risk-shifting and price discovery—and determined that it required regulation by a single, expert agency; an agency without other conflicting mandates to serve.

Much has happened in the futures trading industry since 1974. The futures trading industry has become more accepted and credible, largely through acting responsibly and through the guidance of the CFTC. Last year, futures contracts valued at over $1 trillion were traded on our domestic exchanges. New contracts on new instruments have been developed and more will come. The period of growth is not halting. I feel it will grow even larger as diversified industries learn the benefits of risk-spreading and, for this reason, we must have a strong, independent, and competent Commission. The provisions of H.R. 10285 make some needed changes in that direction.

This bill recognizes one important fact of life that is slowly dawning on us here in Washington. The Federal Government cannot be all things to all men and cannot reserve to itself every task. The CFTC will never have the resources to adequately enforce this law in every community of the Nation. For this reason, H.R. 10285 grants some enforcement, not regulatory powers, to the States. I feel that if the CFTC had had the assistance of State officials in enforcing the act in the past 3 years, the "London Options" scandal might have been brought under control more quickly. H.R. 10285 reflects the attitude that the CFTC should continue to have sole authority for the development of a nationally uniform body of law and standards governing commodity futures trading, but that States have and should play an important role in protecting their citizens against fraudulent and illegal conduct.

Earlier I mentioned the London Options problem. Dealing with the options situation was one of the most time consuming issues we faced. Essentially, H.R. 10285 is an effort to backstop the CFTC suspension on options trading. It recognizes the magnitude of the abuses which have occurred and believes the Commission should have a period of time in which to evaluate fully the terms and conditions under which commodity options might be offered, if at all. The bill does provide that the Commission could permit options trading subject to rules and regulations which would themselves be subject to congressional review. Additionally, the Commission would be authorized to grant exceptions to the ban under certain circumstances to dealers in the physical commodities.

Reviews of the Commission's day-to-day operations have revealed shortcomings in management and administration which have affected the Commission's basic regulatory mission. It is inappropriate to address simple mismanagement through legislative remedy, but H.R. 10285 contains several provisions aimed at clarifying the division of responsibility and authority between the Chairman and the Commission. These four changes, including clarifying that the Chairman shall serve at the pleasure of the President, and deleting the Senate confirmation of the Executive Director should resolve some of the problems.

I recognize the CFTC has been faced with a monumental task in implementing its regulatory mandate and has many accomplishments to its credit. It falls short in the areas of management and administration, but rather than attempt inappropriate legislative solutions, the committee intends to continue to monitor the progress of the Commission in improving its performance in this area.

Mr. Chairman, I want to close by submitting to my colleagues that H.R. 10285 is an excellent, well-balanced bill and one which I urge them to support.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES) for his leadership in proceeding to bring this bill to the floor. I know it has been very difficult with so many demands on time to get a quorum of Members at committee meetings, but the gentleman's persistence permitted the committee to develop what I think is a very, very important extension of existing legislation.

The usual procedure in Washington in recent years has been to wait until a crisis develops and then try to deal with after much of the damage has been done. But in 1974 the Congress in its wisdom did not wait for either the administration to act or for a greater crisis to develop. It proceeded to pass this legislation, which I think prevented a very serious crisis from developing. Although some people may criticize some of the things that have occurred in the last 3 or 4 years, had it not been for the 1974 act, we would have had some very, very major commodity futures problems that reach right down to the local level. Those problems would have affected farmers who wanted to contract for the marketing of crops or hedge indirectly so as to qualify for a loan. But for this legislation, many producers might not have been able to find a decent hedge against adverse prices.

So, Mr. Chairman, I just want to commend the gentleman from Tennessee, the full committee chairman, Mr. FOLEY, and the ranking subcommittee member, Mr. MADIGAN for their persistence in developing and bringing this bill to the floor.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Iowa, for those remarks. I also want to take this opportunity to thank the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. NEAL SMITH, for the counsel and the advice that he gave the subcommittee.

Although the gentleman from Iowa is not a member of our subcommittee, he assisted us from time to time in the work that we did on the bill, and it was through his assistance and the hard work that the subcommittee did that we have been able to bring this bill into being.

Mr. Chairman, I will conclude by repeating that I believe H.R. 10285 is an excellent, well-balanced bill, and one which I urge each of the Members to support.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10285. In doing so, I wish to first take this opportunity to commend Chairman FOLEY and Mr. JONES, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Conservation and Credit, for their efforts in putting together a good bill which extends the Commodity Futures Trading Commission for 3 years and adds some needed amendments to the commodity Exchange Act, as amended.

In 1974, the Committee on Agriculture established a new independent regulatory agency, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission replacing the Commodity Exchange Authority, which was part of the U.S. Department of Agriculture—the new agency was vested with broad authority: To affirmatively approve contract markets, contract terms, and conditions as well as exchange rules and to oversee the exchange self-regulatory program; to check the fitness of floor brokers, futures commission merchants, associated persons, commodity trading advisers, and commodity pool operators; to have expanded enforcement responsibility with strong civil and criminal penalties to use in enforcement; to provide for reparations procedures for settlement of claims by customers against persons registered with the Commission; to supervise a reporting and recordkeeping program and undertake research in specified areas of concern. In addition to the foregoing, the CFTC was given oversight authority over other types of trading instruments such as commodity options and leverage contracts.

It was fortunate that the Congress acted when it did in establishing the new Commission, because the commodity futures industry has seen tremendous growth since early 1975. Volume of futures contracts traded has increased over 50 percent (to nearly 43 million in 1977), and the annual trading value grew to $1 trillion in 1977.

However, the CFTC, as might be expected with a fledgling agency, had trouble in organizing, managing, and regulating its industry during this period of substantial growth. As a result, the CFTC has been subjected to considerable criticism. The General Accounting Office raised a number of questions about the effectiveness of the management of the CFTC.

The default on the Maine potato contracts a couple of years ago, the litigation with the Hunt family over questions of exceeding the speculative limits in soybeans, and the domestic vending of "London" options by unregistered and "boiler room" type traders have all elicited criticism of the actions taken, or the lack of action taken, by CFTC.

The CFTC accomplishments—which also were significant—were overshadowed by some of these more highly publicized controversies which resulted in some CFTC criticism.

The hearings held on H.R. 10285 elicited considerable criticism of CFTC, some considerable praise for its ability to survive despite its many problems, and many suggestions for improvement which took the form of amendments to the Commodity Exchange Act. There were recommendations concerning jurisdiction, such as one to abolish CFTC and split its authority between the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Department of Agriculture. Others recommended a transfer of some of CFTC's authority to the Treasury Department. Indeed, and virtually at the last minute, the administration, through the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), recommended that the Commission structure of CFTC be abolished and replaced by a single administrator-type structure—to use the words of OMB, "a structure like the Environmental Protection Agency."

By far the great majority of testimony supported the CFTC in its current form and structure, but with some changes recommended in its authority, and enforcement powers. What our committee reported is, I believe, a balanced product. It recognizes CFTC can and should do a better job, and it provides what I believe is the legislative prescription to achieve a more effective Commission so that our tax dollars will pay for as much Government regulation as is needed to protect the public interest.

Let me illustrate some of the amendments to the Commodity Exchange Act which were added by the committee. In section 1, we redefined the term "commodity trading adviser" so as to exclude certain entities such as "nonprofit voluntary membership, general farm organizations" such as American Farm Bureau offices, which may provide advice on the sale and purchase of cash commodities.

There is also an amendment which prohibits Commission employees—classified as GS–16 or above—from making an appearance before the Commission or communicating with the Commission on matters before the Commission for 1 year from the date of his or her last service. I do not favor this piecemeal approach to the issue of the revolving door from Government to industry. Moreover, in my opinion the amendment prohibits appearances by former Commission employees whether they affiliate with Common Cause, the Consumer Federation of America, or other groups not identified as in the commodity industry. I believe the amendment goes further than some of those who voted for it intended.

Another amendment requires the CFTC to maintain communications with the Department of Treasury, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Securities Exchange Commission relative to matters before the CFTC that relate to the responsibilities of these other agencies.

On the issue of jurisdiction of States to prosecute violations of the Commodity Exchange Act or fraudulent transactions in futures or options transactions, the committee adopted an amendment that would give States the authority to investigate or initiate actions against violators of the act or section 217 of the CFTC Act of 1974 in Federal courts in which cases the CFTC could intervene as a party. Certain actions against contract markets or boards of trade were excepted from this authority. I believe the committee amendment finally adopted is preferable to other proposals considered and rejected by the committee.

On the issue of options trading, the committee had trouble arriving at a decision; and I am aware of floor amendments to be offered to section 2 of the bill regarding options. The committee adopted a compromise proposal which basically prohibited commodity options transactions "unless expressly permitted under rules or regulations that the Commission, in its discretion, may prescribe subsequent to the date of enactment * * *."

There was an exception written into this amendment which allowed the Commission to provide an exemption for dealer options without regard to the requirements of the Administrative Procedures Act and the procedural requirements of the Commodity Exchange Act—for those who on May 5, 1978, were in the options business and in the business of dealing in the commodity which was the subject of the option. Such option exemptions could not be terminated without a hearing.

I am not entirely happy with the exception on dealers options tied to companies that deal in the commodity, that is, actually have an inventory, if as I believe to be true it grandfathers in only a few companies. I do not favor writing private legislation into public laws.

There was also an amendment limiting public disclosure of information and reports by CFTC. Testimony elicited in the course of the hearings on the bill brought out the dangers of permitting CFTC to disclose market positions, business transactions, trade secrets, or names of customers unless such data had been previously disclosed publicly in a judicial or congressional proceeding. Obviously, such information can be extremely market sensitive; and in at least one case where information was brought out in a judicial proceeding, it had a depressant effect on the market and appeared to hurt the marketing situation for farmers and producers.

I had an amendment in subcommittee which deleted the authority of the Commission to publish full facts concerning any commodity transaction which in the judgment of the Commission disrupts any market or is otherwise harmful to the p blic interest at the time this information is communicated to committees or officers of contract markets. Section 13 of the bill, which amends section 8 of the Commodity Exchange Act, puts limits on disclosure of information which in my opinion could be dangerous to orderly transactions of commodity business.

There were also amendments in the committee to increase certain penalties under the act. One amendment was adopted which unrealistically increased criminal penalties to $500,000 for some infractions which might not be major in effect. This amendment was deleted in the full committee, but left standing in full committee were provisions which raised from misdemeanors to felonies violations of the Commodity Exchange Act which involve fraud and false reporting.

I believe the penalties in the commodity exchange laws are equal to or in most instances in excess of those imposed under the securities exchange laws, and I believe that the committee bill will serve as a deterrent to future violations without further floor amendment.

There are other amendments in the bill—some of which my colleagues Mr FOLEY and Mr. JONES of Tennessee have touched upon—which improve on existing law.

Mr. Chairman, I support the committee's bill as a well-balanced product encompassing considerable work and thoughtuful consideration. I urge you to support it.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADIGAN. I yield to my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add my commendation to members of the committee on both sides of the aisle for what I think is a job well done. It may be that some perfecting amendments can still be added during the amendment process which will make it even better, but I rejoiced when the Commission was first established.

I recognize that its record has not been unblemished, but I feel even more today than when the idea was first launched on Capitol Hill that the Commission fills a very important role. I think the legislation now before this body will improve the Commission; will enable it to serve more adequately the futures activities within this country.

There are people who are very disappointed with the Commission. They feel that its record has not been adequate. I think the basic legislation may be part of the problem.

In any case, I think the committee has done an excellent job in the quest for better regulation of a very vital part of the private sector.

Mr. MADIGAN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. Again, as I did in my statement, I say that there has been considerable criticism of the agency but, as the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. FOLEY), pointed out, the agency was organized and began its job at a time when considerably more interest was beginning to appear in this type of transaction which they were to regulate. The total dollar volume of those things which they regulate now has exceeded $1 trillion per year, and in the judgment of this Member the Commission is doing the best job it could under the circumstances. I think their record in the next 3 years will be even better.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. GLICKMAN).

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill to reauthorize the CFTC. In doing so, I would like to take a few minutes to point out to my colleagues just how important this legislation is, how important it is to the strength of our economy as a whole, and most particularly to the question of capital formation.

One of the things that is strange, being on the Agriculture Committee, to me was finding our authorizing an agency which now regulates perhaps as much as one-half of all capital being spent in this country. Just seeing the lack of Members on the floor indicates that most people probably consider this to be an agency which just deals with commodity issues, farm-related issues, but in fact this agency relates to the very heart of our economic strength and ability to form capital.

One of the things we discovered when we got into the hearings was how little information people really had as to how much money was flowing into the futures markets and flowing out of our securities markets. To be quite frank with Members of this body, we still do not know the answers to all of that information. Nobody seems to have the foggiest idea of how the development of futures on financial instruments which we are now finding developing will affect our capital markets, but the fact remains that commodities on which futures and options can be purchased has expanded so greatly in recent years that there is little doubt that this agency regulates a great matter of importance with respect to the economic strength of this country.

I am convinced that the 3-year authorization contained in this bill, based on an amendment which I offered in subcommittee, is needed to get a handle on just what is involved in terms of the economy in general. The Senate has passed a 6-year bill, and I think we should stick as close to that 3-year period as possible.

I might also mention, on the issue of David Gartner, the new Commissioner of the CFTC who is coming into controversy lately, because of the conflict of interest issue, that irrespective of Gartner's position on the Commission, he throws a further cloud of suspicion on the whole issue of credibility of this agency. That is all the more reason for a 3-year, rather than a 6-year authorization.

I compliment the chairman, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. FOLEY), and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Conservation and Credit, Mr. JONES of Tennessee, for conducting what I consider to be a very, very thorough set of hearings on oversight of the Commission.

I suggest the only way this Commission can go is up, because its credibility is so low, and investors and farmers all over this country need to have confidence in this Commission.

On another matter I strongly support the CFTU jurisdiction over futures on financial instruments as opposed to giving that jurisdiction to the Securities and Exchange Commission. I originally had supported the SEC retaining jurisdiction, but I have changed my mind, because I think there is a difference fundamentally and economically between futures and securities. I hope we will give that authority to the CFTC.

On another point, I think we need to take steps to enhance the enforcement of CFTC antifraud regulations. The bill we have before us was modified at the full committee level to remove language adopted by the Conservation and Credit Subcommittee to authorize the States to enforce the antifraud provisions of the Commodity Exchange Act. My colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BALDUS), will be offering an amendment to reinstate that language and thereby give the States the opportunity they want to protect their residents from fraudulent schemes within their States. As a former attorney with the Securities and Exchange Commission, I can attest to the fact that most of the fraud that occurs in these kinds of affairs occurs on a small-scale, localized basis, and I believe the citizens of this country would be best protected by giving the States the authority to enforce the antifraud provisions of the Commodity Exchange Act. That is the basis of the Baldus amendment. We will not have to continually be building up and beefing up the staff of the CFTC staff in Washington, because all of these agencies are clamoring for more and more money, and by making the States the people on top of the problems, it will eliminate the need for a significantly expanded CFTC staff.

I urge my colleagues to support the Baldus amendment and final passage of this legislation.

As I said before, this is a very complex piece of subject matter we are dealing with here. It relates to various sophisticated matters concerning the economy of this country. I believe the Commission needs to be reauthorized.

Again I thank the chairman of my subcommittee for his oversight on this matter.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. PANETTA).

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I have had the honor of working with the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Conservation and Credit, and we have worked on this legislation for a long period of time. We have had extensive hearings on this issue. It is a complex area of law relating to our commodities. It impacts on our agricultural community. It impacts on our trading community. It impacts on our securities community.

It is most important that we provide this extension and that we provide the necessary authority to the Commodities Exchange Commission so it will be able to deal with the problems in this area. The fact is that in the commodities area today we are talking about almost a trillion dollars that is being annually exchanged in commodities.

That is a fantastic sum, and it has increased and multiplied tremendously over the last few years. This has become the one area in our trading markets in this country where speculation is running rampant. The opportunity for fraud and abuse is prevalent.

It is for this reason that it is most important we give the Commission the power and authority to be able to do a good job. I think that the subcommittee and the full committee in the drafting work that went on in connection with this legislation have done a commendable job. I think the bill does provide the necessary tools. There is one area that I feel should be added which is the area of the distinction between misdemeanors and felonies committed in violation of the laws in this area. At the present time there is no distinction in the penalties provided for those committing misdemeanors and the penalties provided for those committing felonies.

It is my feeling that in violations which are serious and involve embezzlement and fraud, we ought to increase the penalties and bring into accord with the laws in the Securities and Exchange Commission and other commissions which provide a difference between violations for misdemeanors and violations for felonies.

I hope that during the course of the debate and during the course of the amending process, I will be able to offer an amendment in this area to increase the penalties that will be provided for those committing felonies. Otherwise, what happens is that when offenses that are of a serious nature are committed in this area, they are treated as a matter of business expense and nothing more. That is essentially what was testified to by the Commission and by the chairman of the Commission. It is an area that, hopefully, we can remedy on the floor of the House in the amending procedure.

I would conclude by saying that I believe the overall bill is an effective one and I would urge the House to adopt it.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BALDUS).

Mr. BALDUS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill and to call attention to an amendment which I will introduce.

H.R. 10285 is the product of extensive hearings by the Conservation and Credit Subcommittee and of many days of markup by both the subcommittee and the full Agriculture Committee. I intend to support the bill regardless of the outcome of my amendment, and I urge my colleagues to do likewise. Nonetheless, I think it is extremely important that the House act to reinstate my amendment, which was passed by the subcommittee but removed by the full committee by a narrow, two vote margin. I would add that before the subcommittee passed my amendment, the Commissioners voted to accept it.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to start the debate on my amendment today, but I would like to briefly explain what it would do and why it is being offered.

My amendment would allow the States to pass and enforce their own laws exactly identical to sections 4b, c, d, and o of the Commodity Exchange Act and section 217 of the CFTC Act. In order to avoid conflicting interpretations of the identical law, the State laws would also be required to contain the following:

In any such action, Federal law, including the decisions of the Federal courts and the decisions and published interpretations of the commission, shall be controlling.

In addition, the CFTC must be notified within 3 business days of any action taken, and the CFTC is given the right to intervene in any such action. These two factors put the CFTC in a position to utilize their limited enforcement resources and personnel to monitor and direct the interpretations of State enforcement personnel.

Finally, the majority of the activities of the legitimate futures trading industry are exempted from State enforcement as my amendment would preserve any actions committed on boards of trade or on designated contract markets for enforcement by the CFTC.

This amendment is needed because the CFTC Act of 1974 gave the CFTC exclusive jurisdiction over violations of the antifraud provisions of law. But the CFTC has never been given the resources and personnel which are required to effectively monitor the industry on a nationwide basis and seek enforcement, not is it likely that they ever will be given such resources. The CFTC has been content to rely on injunctive relief actions, a pattern of enforcement which has taken all of the deterrent value out of the antifraud provisions.

In the absence of effective Federal enforcement, the States have actively sought the right to pursue State enforcement. My amendment is supported by the North American Securities Administrators Association (representing all 50 States) and by the National Conference of State Legislators, as well as by the National Farmers Union and the NFO.

The States have demonstrated their capabilities in the enforcement of securities laws, over which they share jurisdiction with the Federal Government, and in the enforcement of insurance laws, over which they have exclusive jurisdiction.

The issue is one of State enforcement as opposed to no enforcement at all. I urge my colleagues to opt for State enforcement by voting for my amendment when it is introduced.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. EVANS of Colorado) having assumed the chair, Mr. WIRTH, Chairman pro tempore of the Commitee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 10285) to extend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, for 4 years, had come to no resolution thereon.

DEEP SEABED HARD MINERALS ACT

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3350) to promote the orderly development of hard mineral resources in the deep seabed, pending adoption of an international regime relating thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BREAUX).

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair designates the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SIMON) as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and requests the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH) to assume the chair temporarily.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 3350, with Mr. WIRTH (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BREAUX) will be recognized for 15 minutes; the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN) will be recognized for 15 minutes; the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) will be recognized for 15 minutes; the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. SKUBITZ) will be recognized for 15 minutes; the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) will be recognized for 15 minutes; the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FINDLEY) will be recognized for 15 minutes; the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. ULLMAN) will be recognized for 15 minutes; and the gentleman from New York (Mr. CONABLE) will be recognized for 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BREAUX).

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House today contains some of the most important and timely policy decisions which this body could make during this session. We are deciding the fate of issues today which can have a very positive impact on several critical domestic and international policy considerations.

I would first like to explain to you why I think that this bill is important. From an international perspective, the legislation would reiterate some major U.S. policy statements which I believe are necessary in order to correct the present confused status of international law. Among other statements, the bill would include clear statements—

That deep sea mining is a freedom of the high seas which can be conducted by any nation desiring to engage in exploration or exploitation.

That the resources of the deep seabed beyond the limits of national jurisdiction are the "common heritage of mankind," but this common heritage concept can only be properly defined by the text of a future Law of the Sea Treaty.

That any person desiring to engage in deep sea mining should do so in a manner which properly recognized other persons freedoms to also conduct activities upon the high seas.

That any future Law of the Sea Treaty should, at a minimum, contain terms which provide U.S. citizens assured and nondiscriminatory access to deep sea mining sites and that future treaty provisions do not impose substantially different restrictions on U.S. citizens which would materially impair investments made by such citizens.

These statements will put the Congress on record that this country intends to continue to operate under the terms of present internationally accepted law until and if that law is changed by treaty. These policies are consistent with those of our Government, but it is necessary to restate them to those nations of the world who would like to implement the common heritage doctrine as customary international law.

This country must let it be known that it is fully prepared to continue with the development and application of our deep sea mining technology whether or not there is a final Law of Sea Treaty.

We, in the Congress, must also tell our adversaries from the Third World and our own U.S. negotiating team that certain general principles must be maintained in any future treaty. Any treaty concerning the management of resources of two-thirds of the Earth's surface must contain provisions to adequately protect the present rights of U.S. citizens.

The United States has approached these negotiations at the LOS Conference in good faith for 10 years now. We have given concession after concession without receiving very much, if anything, in return. It is time that Congress indicated the type of treaty which would be acceptable. If we had done this much sooner in the Panama Canal Treaty negotiations, we could have had a treaty which would have been much more acceptable, rather than merely having to accept or reject the final terms. This important statement of congressional intent as to what the LOS Treaty should contain is included as title II of H.R. 12988.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before you today would also address some important domestic policy questions.

In light of this country's alarming dependence on foreign sources of supply for cobalt, nickel, and manganese, the bill would recognize the prudence and necessity for the United States to develop a domestic supply of such minerals—a supply which is abundantly available on the floor of our oceans in the form of manganese nodules.

In order to avail ourselves of this resource it is necessary to establish some legal framework under which domestic mining companies can conduct their exploration and commercial recovery operations. With the LOS treaty negotiations continuing to change the status of international law, these companies need to know the direction of U.S. policy with respect to their rights on the high seas. This bill would clarify some of these important questions, and, at the same time, establish a domestic licensing and regulatory program to begin implementing the necessary regulatory procedures to conduct seabed mining.

The bill requires extensive environmental safeguards to allow for the deep sea mining operations to proceed without creating any adverse effects on the marine environment.

As Chairman MURPHY stated, this amendment to the bill, H.R. 3350, is a consensus developed after extensive discussions with the Committees on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Interior and Insular Affairs, International Relations, and Ways and Means. It represents the best combined thinking of all these committees and I believe it is a responsible piece of legislation.

The administration supports deep sea mining legislation. Ambassador Richardson, head of the U.S. negotiating team, has personally reviewed the compromise bill and supports it. He stated at a hearing before our committee several weeks ago that the legislation should move forward in the Congress whether or not success is achieved at the Law of the Sea Conference.

The U.S. companies which have developed the expensive and complex technology to mine the seabeds are on the verge of determining their future investment actions. If no domestic legislation is adopted by this Congress, I believe that these companies will choose to invest in more secure ventures. This would allow those government-supported competitors in Germany, Japan, and Great Britain to proceed without U.S. participation, and I think that this would be a great loss for the mineral and economic future of the United States.

We are at a crucial stage in deciding on the future of deep sea mining, and this Congress needs to make the choice as to whether or not we should encourage these ventures or leave high seas resource development to the fate of the Third-World-controlled Law of the Sea Conference. The choice is clear to those of us who have observed this conference for years. I urge you to join with us in voting "aye" to H.R. 12988.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN).

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. MURPHY).

Mr. MURPHY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, 3 miles below the ocean's surface lies the most significant untapped source of minerals known to man. The deep seabed's nickel, cobalt, and manganese resources have a value greater than all of the lond-based deposits of these three mtals put together. In addition, the deep seabed holds an amount of copper that could significantly supplement land-based sources of this metal. We have not even begun to investigate the mineral treasures that might be found beneath the surface of the deep seabed.

Advancing technology—which is largely spurred by the rapidly growing offshore oil industry—has now made it possible to recover mineral nodules from the deep ocean floor at costs competitive with land-based sources, and to do this in an environmentally sound manner. Technologically sophisticated U.S.-led mining consortia have already invested over $150 million in the development of this new technology.

At the same time, the United States is now importing 100 percent of its cobalt and manganese—two metals critical in the steel making process. Eighty-three percent of our cobalt imports originate in Zaire—mostly in the politically troubled Shaba Province. We import over 70 percent of our nickel and 15 percent of our copper—a small but not insignificant percentage that is steadily growing.

Deep seabed mining could reduce our dependence on imports to zero for copper, cobalt, and manganese by as early as 1990. By the same date, we could substantially reduce imports of nickel, and reduce our balance-of-trade deficit by over $1 billion. If pursued, deep seabed mining will reduce the concentration of the international mineral market and stabilize world mineral prices. This would not only benefit the industrialized nations, but all the nations of the world who are counting on technology for their economic development. Given this situation, one may logically ask why industry is not vigorously pushing ahead with this new venture. What are we waiting for?

What we are waiting for is a conclusion to the U.N. Conference on the Law of the Sea (LOS), which has dragged on for 10 years with still no end in sight.

In deep seabed mining is to proceed, it is imperative that some degree of predictability about the mining industry's future rights in the ocean be established. Between now and the beginning of commercial recovery on the first few mine sites which will be located in the North Pacific Ocean between Hawaii and the west coast, the companies must acquire and commit more than $2.5 billion.

To the extent that a Law of the Sea Treaty could terminate industry's rights under existing international law, prohibit mining activities, limit production, fix prices, require transference to a new mining site, or raise costs prohibitively, lending institutions will not loan any substantial part of the risk capital needed to move toward commercial operations. The political risks involved in an international agreement must be addressed in legislation so that a reasonably secure investment climate will be created.

Without some clarification of their future access to the ocean, mining companies will be hesitant to proceed with the further technological development and capital investments that will soon be required. Unless this is done, we will stand a strong chance of losing the technological lead we have developed in ocean mining.

I might add that, after witnessing recent developments at the Law of the Sea Conference, I would hesitate, too, if I were on the board of directors of an American mining company. It is unfortunate to have to report that the lack of progress which has characterized a decade of LOS negotiations continues. Despite some inflated and exaggerated reports coming from that last session in Geneva, the fact remains that we are no closer to achieving an acceptable International Treaty than before. In fact, some extremely knowledgeable individuals have argued that the proposed compromise articles would leave us worse off than with no treaty at all.

I think it is highly significant that Richard G. Darman, former vice chairman of the U.S. delegation to the Law of the Sea, has called for a reexamination of the premises on which our position at the Law of the Sea negotiations are based. In his article published in the December 1977 issue of Foreign Affairs, he makes the point that almost any achievable LOS Treaty works to the strategic net advantage of major U.S. adversaries. Further more, he questions the generally unquestioned premise that a Law of the Sea Treaty is so vital to U.S. interests that we should be prepared to sacrifice a number of high seas freedoms we currently enjoy under customary international law in order to achieve its enactment.

From Caracas-to-New York-to-Geneva, I have always supported the fundamental goals of the LOS Conference in general, and the objectives of our U.S.

delegations, in particular. Clearly a balanced treaty with a seabeds article that assures equal and nondiscriminatory access to American citizens under reasonable terms and conditions would benefit the entire world. Such a treaty would help establish a framework of predictability in which investments would be made within a context of some security. It would also promote international institution building to deal with the complex problems of a high technology era.

Yet, the building of such institutions must be carried out within existing international and political realities. Certainly the United States must play an active role in the development of this institutional framework, but it cannot afford to establish precedents for the 21st century that jeopardize its fundamental economic interests.

We should all be aware that we are talking about more than the international structure for the recovery of manganese nodules. We are talking about a structure which could very well form the precedent for the development of other resources—below the seabed—particularly oil and gas, for which deep drilling technology may not be far off.

We simply cannot afford to set back the cause of international cooperation by permitting our diplomats to agree to a treaty that the American people will not support, and the American Congress will not ratify.

It is these potentially tragic consequences that are creating tremendous uncertainty for our mining companies. Therefore, it is imperative that we provide a strong legal framework within which the industry can operate.

At the same time, the Government must establish regulatory and environmental control over the activities of U.S. citizens in international waters. Both purposes—a sound legal framework and administrative control—are accomplished in the deep seabed mining legislation which we bring before you today.

H.R. 3350 is the product of the work of four committees. It represents a consensus on most of the major provisions in the bill, although a few irresolvable issues will be settled here on the floor.

In addition to the overwhelming need for the legislation and the consensus that has been developed by the committees of jurisdiction, I am pleased to note that, for the first time in the history of this issue, the administration supports deep seabed mining legislation. In response to direct questions on this matter upon his return from Geneva, U.S. Ambassador Elliot Richardson indicated that the administration continues to support such legislation and that, in his judgment, there is no linkage between the proceedings of the Conference and the need to establish a domestic legal framework for American mining companies.

Consideration of deep seabed mining legislation began with the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee in the 92d Congress. It has taken an extraordinarily long time for this bill to reach the floor of the House but, given the cooperation of many of my colleagues and now the administration, we are pleased to bring this legislation before the entire membership.

H.R. 3350 encourages the further development of a U.S. led technologically sophisticated deep ocean mining capability, creates an interim legal framework with strong environmental provisions which will operate in the absence of an International Law of the Sea Treaty, provides a strong statement of congressional intent that any such treaty should not materially impair the investments made by U.S. permittees in carrying out deep seabed mining operations prior to ratification, and establishes a deep seabed revenue sharing trust fund to be shared by the international community under the provisions of a Law of the Sea Treaty. It is a bill that has been subject to intense scrutiny by four committees, the administration, and the international community. It presents a rational and reasonable interim domestic program for ocean mining and its balance reflects the careful examination which it has received from many different sides.

Mr. Chairman, the international situation is too uncertain, our need for these essential minerals too acute, and the time for major investment decisions too critical, to allow us to delay this important legislation any further.

I urge this body to strongly support H.R. 3350.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. MURPHY) has expired.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MURPHY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I thank my very generous colleague, the gentleman from Maryland, for his indulgence.

Mr. SKUBITZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SKUBITZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if it is the intention of my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. MURPHY), at a later moment to substitute H.R. 12988 as the vehicle that we would consider for markup, or does the gentleman intend to stay with H.R. 3350?

Mr. MURPHY of New York. When we are under the 5-minute rule on amendments, the first amendment will be offered by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BREAUX), and at that time he will offer that legislation as a substitute for H.R. 3350.

Mr. SKUBITZ. That is the blended bill, so to speak, that the four committees have discussed.

Another question I woud like to ask my colleague: I believe I understood the gentleman to say that there are three times the amount of minerals below the sea which has been discovered, or is known outside of the sea area; is this correct?

Mr. MURPHY of New York. From all known land-based sources that are presently in mining, our reserve estimates on just the seabed floor, that is, the nodules that have been pushed up on the seabed floor, the estimate is that in 200 mining sites worldwide there are three times the known quantities of land-based sites.

Mr. SKUBITZ. Could the gentleman give me the source of that information? It is a rather startling figure.

Mr. MURPHY of New York. The American Mining Congress and the Department of the Interior.

Mr. SKUBITZ. The reason I asked the question is that I was reading from the report of the Commission on Marine Science, Engineering and Resources, and I found this statement which I think places this matter more into its real perspective:

> The hard mineral resources of the shelf and deep sea have assumed public prominence only recently, unlike oil and gas, which have been taken from the continental shelves for more than 30 years. Ocean minerals have been hailed by some as a nearly inexhaustible treasure trove. To others, the inaccessibility of most marine minerals and the expensive technology required for their recovery place them on the far horizon of the future in comparison with minerals from more conventional sources.

The Commission goes on to say this:

> The Commission finds that the truth lies somewhere between these extremes. There is no urgent necessity to develop subsea hard minerals with maximum speed regardless of cost. Nevertheless, an early start in offshore exploration and development of the required technology is warranted to determine reserves and to establish a basis for future exploration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. MURPHY) has expired.

Mr. SKUBITZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MURPHY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. SKUBITZ. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the point I am getting at is that really we do not know how much is there. Really we do not know how much we can actually recover. There is need for more exploration, but the problem that bothers us is in the exploration and the development of it: just how far this Government should get into that particular area.

Mr. MURPHY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would say in response to my colleague that, considering the costs I just outlined to the gentleman, it is probably fair to state that no more than four sites could be mined between now and the year 2000 based on technology and risk capital; and of the 200 sites which are estimated to be productive sites, I do not think that anyone is intimating that we are going to rush headlong into deep-ocean mining.

Mr. SKUBITZ. The point I am getting at, I say to my colleague, is that during the hearings before our committee and when considering some sections during markup, we were constantly being reminded that we get 90 percent of one mineral from this country and 70 percent of another mineral from another, as if to say that if we do not rush ahead with this bill there is going to be a tremendous shortage.

The fact is, although we do depend upon others, if we are going to mine only three or four ocean sites at this time, we are not going to actually meet the real requirements of this country overnight; and we ought to take it more slowly. We deliberately determine just how far we want to go in permitting some of the bills—and I think the gentleman's was one of them, as well as ours—to guarantee private interest against all losses if the State Department in some way or another decides that they will have to give up their rights to areas which they have staked out. I just want to make the point that I do not think we should be intimidated by scare tactics and I am pleased the blended bill takes a more reasonable approach.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the point I would like to address to the ranking member of the committee is that the information he is reading is from the Stratton Commission report, which was presented in 1969. Since then, the use of mineral supplies has drastically changed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. MURPHY) has expired.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to say first that I am here representing Chairman UDALL, who could not be in Washington today but will be present with us for the consideration of amendments on Wednesday.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has had an interesting legislative history, in fact, I think it has one of the most interesting histories that we have experienced under the change of the rules recommended by the Bolling Committee for multiple committee consideration of legislation. The bill was originally referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and then subsequently to the Committee on International Relations and to the Ways and Means Committee.

As the members have heard, there have been extensive negotiations as a result of which a compromise bill will be offered as a substitute. It is found in H.R. 12988, and it hopefully will resolve most of the controversies—not all the controversies, but most of the controversies—that remain. Let me take a couple of minutes to summarize the provisions of the substitute bill.

It would establish an interim licensing program to encourage and regulate mining of seabed minerals by U.S. citizens, pending a superseding international agreement. Part of the mining proceeds would go into a special fund to be shared with the international community under the Law of the Sea Treaty now under negotiation. Title I would prohibit any U.S. citizen from exploring or commercially recovering deep seabed minerals unless authorized by a license or permit issued by the United States or a reciprocating state or pursuant to an international agreement. Licenses would be issued only to applicants who: Have the technological and financial capability to mine the seabeds, will adequately protect the ocean environment, and will not unreasonably interfere with freedom of the seas or U.S. international obligations. No license or permit could be issued after an international agreement is in force unless it is consistent with such agreement.

Environmental impact statements for prospective ocean mines would be required. Existing licenses or permits may not be modified for environmental reasons if the national interest in obtaining minerals outweighs the potential injury to the environment. The President may designate any foreign nation as a "reciprocating state," whose mining licenses would be recognized by U.S. licensees, if that nation establishes restrictions similar to those of the United States and contributes to the special international community fund. This title would require antitrust review by the Justice Department and Federal Trade Commission. This is one of the proposals made by the Interior Committee.

Title II would express the intent of Congress that U.S. negotiators at the Law of the Sea Conference should obtain a final treaty that assures nondiscriminatory access to the seabed and does not materially impair the value of U.S. investments. Title III would provide for civil and criminal penalties and authorize necessary sums for administration.

Title IV, which will be handled by the Ways and Means Committee, provides for the funding of the deep seabed revenue sharing trust fund.

Now, the major amendment which was recommended by the Interior Committee and by the Committee on International Relations as well, was an amendment to remove the provision that the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. SKUBITZ) was just referring to, the so-called investment insurance or investment guarantee provision. The Interior Committee also, as I have said, recommended that applications for licenses or permits be referred to the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission for review as to the applicability of the antitrust laws and advice as to the effect such license or permit, if issued, might have on competition.

I think that is all I need say at this time, Mr. Chairman, except to note that one of the areas of controversy which I am sure will be debated at length on Wednesday is whether the Secretary in charge of this program should be the Secretary of Commerce or the Secretary of Interior. The Interior Committee of course feels strongly that because of its experience in the regulation of coal, oil, gas, hardrock minerals, and so forth, the responsibility should lie with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Chairman, now I would like to yield 5 minutes, and more if he needs it, to the chairman of the subcommittee concerned, the Mines and Mining Subcommittee, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. KAZEN).

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand I am being yielded to on the time of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and not the time of the Committee on International Relations?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct.

Mr. KAZEN. I thank the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, I support enactment of ocean mining legislation. It is needed now.

This Nation is not self-sufficient in many minerals which are critical to our economy. Four of these: nickel, cobalt, copper and manganese, can be mined from the deep ocean floor using technology which the United States now possesses.

Present events have demonstrated how fragile our supply of just one of these minerals—cobalt—may be. I need only to point out that we import 98 percent of our cobalt from Zaire.

The technology which our industry has developed has not been used for a very simple reason. As much as $500 million are required for a total mining and processing operation. In order to commit such amounts to a venture, the investment climate must be one which gives the industry some assurance that it will not be dislocated or have its investments endangered by some future international agreement. This type of investment climate does not exist today.

For over 10 years, the United States has been an active participant in the Law of the Sea Conference in which more than 150 nations are attempting to establish an international agreement to govern, among other things, the exploitation of the hard mineral resources of the deep seabed. Although the United States is the most advanced in deep seabed mining technology, it is disadvantaged at the conference by having only one vote.

The seventh session of the Law of the Sea Conference concluded in Geneva last month. The conference will reconvene in New York in August.

Proposals being given serious consideration at the conference would create an international organization to regulate deep seabed mining. The organization would have its own mining company called the "Enterprise." Private companies would be required to transfer technology to the Enterprise—with which they would be in competition—in exchange for a permit or contract to mine. Companies which agree to enter into joint ventures with the Enterprise would have a priority in the selection of mining sites.

I do not anticipate an agreement being reached this summer in New York. Indeed, in view of the history of the Law of the Sea Conference, agreement, if there is to be one at all, may be many years away. But, the very fact that an international agreement may be negotiated creates uncertainty. Such uncertainty stands as an impediment to development. Sound domestic legislation enacted now will help to remove that impediment.

In all candor, I cannot say that I am thoroughly satisfied with the compromise version of the bill which will be offered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for H.R. 3350. I would have preferred a bill which would have offered to citizens of the United States willing to invest the vast amounts of money required for the mining and processing of the hard mineral resources of the deep seabed some insurance against any loss they incur by reason of an international agreement to which the United States is a party.

The administration objected to an investment insurance provision on the ground that it would restrict our negotiators at the Law of the Sea Conference and would be an undesirable precedent.

In place of an investment insurance provision, the compromise bill contains a strong declaration of the intent of the Congress that any agreement entered into by the United States should provide assured and nondiscriminatory access, under reasonable terms and conditions, to the hard mineral resources of the deep seabed for U.S. citizens. It provides further that it should recognize the rights of the U.S. citizens who have undertaken the exploration for, or commercial recovery of, these resources to continue their operations under substantially the same terms and conditions as are imposed upon them by the act. Also, that such an agreement should provide for the continuation of operations by U.S. citizens in a manner that does not materially impair the investments made by them in such operations.

I hope that the House will approve this declaration of congressional intent without modification.

We must say to our own negotiators that they must protect the interests of our own citizens.

We must send an unmistakable message to the rest of the world that, while we will respect the rights of other countries, we will not be inhibited in employing the technology we have developed to our own benefit.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the bill we are considering contains many provisions for the regulation of U.S. citizens who engage in deep seabed mining. There are, for example, provisions for strict regulation for the protection of the environment. I would caution against the addition of provisions which might result in over-regulation. The deep seabed is not the same as lands owned by the United States, or lands over which it has unquestioned national jurisdiction, such as the submerged lands of the Outer Continental Shelf. The fact is, that our citizens and those of any other state could now mine the deep seabed without any regulation and that probably would be done were it not for the threat of an international agreement which might disrupt the activity and result in a loss of substantial investments. I hope, therefore, that the bill will not, during the course of our consideration, be encumbered with additional requirements which might discourage deep seabed mining by U.S. citizens. The bill is a good bill as it stands, and I urge its approval.

Mr. SKUBITZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada (Mr. SANTINI).

Mr. SANTINI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support, albeit perhaps less than ecstatic support, for both of the proposed legislative products, H.R. 12988 and H.R. 3350. I will share some preliminary observations with my colleagues who have decided to remain with us here to discuss this vital subject. I am absolutely convinced that to establish some sort of legislative expression is imperative if we are to provide any kind of constructive and informative impetus to the Law of the Sea Treaty. As one of the gentlemen observed, the treaty has been 10 years in the making. It is one of the ships that perhaps never got out of port and that is floundering on the shoals, or perhaps it is just too loaded down to ever get anywhere. The reason is, that we are dealing with one of the most unusual negotiation processes that it has ever been the privilege for this meager-minded Congressman ever to observe, and I am not referring to Alaska, but to the island of Manhattan, and I know there are certain differences with the quid pro quo bargaining, but now listen to what has been proposed in the treaty draft proposal in committee No. 1, dealing explicitly with the issue of recovery of mineral resources from the deep seabed. We, as a Nation, and our contemporaries, are considering giving complete control of these resources to the 150 or so nations alluded to previously by the other speaker, but we are not going to do so just willy-nilly, no, we are providing for certain price controls that would violate any antitrust provisions that this country has never sought to enforce, because it happens to relate to an international entity, and that international entity will protect the producers of the minerals in the emerging Third World nations. We are creating a super international institute, which, as I say, the antitrust division would probably take serious views concerning it if it happened domestically, but because it involves an international agreement it is not subject to antitrust procedures.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANTINI. I would prefer that the gentleman permit me to complete my statement since I have such little time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will be glad to give the gentleman additional time.

Mr. SANTINI. We are going to refuse to recognize any and all rights that existed prior to the treaty. Therefore we have to have some kind of legislative protection and I would suggest that the two bills under consideration at least afford some kind of protection, so that we can bring some sort of sanity to this situation before we do any investing in this billion dollar venture in the deep seabeds, and the privilege of giving all of our established technology away.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Nevada (Mr. SANTINI).

Mr. SANTINI. I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANTINI. Certainly I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM).

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me worth pointing out, and I know the gentleman is familiar with this, that the so-called draft treaty that the gentleman has been summarizing was labeled by the principal U.S. negotiator, and so considered, as totally unacceptable to the United States. That is one reason why negotiations are continuing, because unless the United States agrees to the treaty, there is not going to be any treaty. The provisions that the gentleman outlines are obviously unacceptable, and that has been stated to the other parties to the negotiations.

I am sure the gentleman would agree that that is the case.

Mr. SANTINI. I wish that I had the distinguished Member from New York's wholehearted optimism about the position of our negotiating team with reference to the specific 1 through 6 items contained in that treaty. Some have not been labeled unacceptable. Some have been said to be acceptable. Certain provisions have been rejected, it is true, but the difficulty I see is that we are at a posture now of trying to execute potentially a treaty at all costs, and one of the principal costs, it seems to me, relates to the deep sea mining issue. That seems to be a write-off or a sellout, if you will, in terms of the desirability of trying to establish this international negotiated instrument that is going to reconcile all of the dilemmas and debates of the sea. And committee No. 1, deep sea mining, it has seemed to me from the inception, is the biggest writeoff for the United States. It claims we can afford to give up our technology. We can afford to pay for all the developing world's prospecting costs. We can afford to turnover our future in terms of mineral resources of the sea entirely to the other 149 nations who do not have mutuality of interest in terms of the U.S.A.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. SKUBITZ).

Mr. SKUBITZ. Mr. Chairman, may I say, first, that I am very much in favor of the objectives of the bill before us. I am hopeful that we can get them into shape. I think there are a few amendments that are necessary to this piece of legislation. But the thing that bothers me, Mr. Chairman, is the manner in which we bring bills to the floor using scare tactics in order to try to force them through.

For example, I can recall how years ago we got the desalting bill through on the basis that we were going to make the desert bloom. We needed water to promote agriculture in the West.

Then we came along the other day with a coal slurry bill that was claimed to be a vital energy measure. It could not stand on its own as a transportation bill. I am happy that my colleagues agreed that it was really a transportation bill—and a bad one.

Now we come to a third one. Again let me talk about conditions in some far-off country. We get 92 percent of our cobalt or something from that country, and because of some situation that exists there today, it might endanger the national security of this country. I am sure that, because I think this bill can stand on its own, we do not have to use that sort of tactic in order to try to get supporters.

Mr. Chairman, as I say, I feel that I shall support this bill, but I would like to spend a few moments to clarify my position regarding the so-called investment guarantee section which was deleted by the Interior Committee.

In the minority views found on pages 34 and 35 of the Interior Committee report, which I signed, some Members might get the impression from the first paragraph that I support, guaranteeing private investment. This is not the case.

My reason for signing these views is found on page 35, which states:

"We do not contend that the formula outlined in the deleted section of H.R. 3350 for compensation of investment loss is inviolable. What we do deplore, however, is the committee's failure to explore viable alternatives." (Emphasis added)

I compliment the chairmen of all four committees concerned with this bill, Mr. UDALL, Mr. MURPHY of New York, Mr. ZABLOCKI, and Mr. ULLMAN, for giving to us the blended bill H.R. 12988 as an alternative.

In title II, we express our intent that the U.S. negotiators at the United Nations Law of the Sea Conference not negotiate away all legitimate U.S. interests, including the preexisting investments which private companies may have made.

This provision without making any guarantee's sends a clear signal that Congress does not want a treaty which allows the underdeveloped countries—the group of 77—to run all over U.S. interests.

In addition, this blended bill provides for a payment of three-fourths of 1 percent of the gross value of any minerals extract to an international fund. While I think the percentage should be higher, I think 10 percent is too high, but this provision at least does recognize the legitimate interests in seabed minerals of underdeveloped nations.

I believe these provisions provide a good balance between United States and international interests without giving anyone a guarantee.

I urge my colleague to support H.R. 12988.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GILMAN. Could the Chair inform us whether the Committee on International Relations will have separate time?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. The gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) will have 15 minutes, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) will have 15 minutes for the Committee on International Relations.

The Chair at this point will recognize the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. VANIK), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, for 15 minutes.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VANIK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the mineral resources of the ocean floor are immense, difficult even to quantify, and have the potential to meet much of the world's needs for such critical minerals as cobalt, manganese, nickel, and copper.

The United States is committed to the principle that the minerals of the seabed are the common heritage of all mankind. The right to explore and develop that heritage is the right of every nation.

The legislation before the House recognizes the tremendous potential of the seabed and the common right of all nations to the oceans' resources.

I support H.R. 12988, legislation which will enable development of the seabed to begin in an orderly, efficient manner with necessary safeguards for the ocean environment.

It is interim legislation designed to regulate the activities of American citizens in deep seabed mining until a treaty negotiated by the United Nations Law of the Sea Conference is ratified by the nations of the world.

This legislation has been an enormous undertaking: Hearings conducted over a period of several years, diligent and persistent efforts by the members of four House committees, and the cooperation of three Presidents, their administrations, and Ambassadors to Law of the Sea Conferences.

The leadership of both parties have done an extraordinary job in presenting for our consideration consensus legislation which provides agreement on most major issues.

Where agreement has not been possible, the committee leadership have appropriately presented these areas for resolution by the Whole House.

As an original cosponsor of H.R. 3350 and as a member of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Subcommittee on Oceanography, I am very pleased to rise in support of H.R. 12988.

I feel we are very appropriately and properly acting on this much-needed legislation to encourage orderly and efficient exploration and recovery of the mineral wealth of the ocean floor and to provide the proper legal framework for that activity.

No nation can claim exclusive rights or sovereignty over any part of the ocean floor.

All nations have the right to develop that resource.

The United States, however, is the leader among several nations which have the technology and the capability to exercise that right.

I know I speak for many of my colleagues in this House when I say I would have preferred an international agreement governing the development of the ocean floor to have preceded commercial recovery.

The United States has participated fully in the Law of the Sea Conference and has negotiated in good faith towards a Law of the Sea Treaty.

The conference has deadlocked, as it had in previous sessions. The seventh session concluded this March with the participants moving farther apart rather than closer to agreement.

It is unfortunate the conference has been unable to agree on a treaty to provide an international framework for the development of the minerals.

That failure, however, cannot postpone indefinitely the exploration and development of these minerals for which there is such a great need.

The United States is a net importer of 23 of 32 critical minerals to the extent of at least 50 percent of our total consumption. The Soviet Union imports only one mineral to that extent.

We now import more than 98 percent of the cobalt and manganese we use in this country.

We import 70 percent of our nickel and 10 percent of our copper.

As the Representative of a district which produces two-thirds of the Nation's iron ore, I know the critical importance of manganese to this Nation's steel industry.

Recent developments in Zaire underscored the vulnerability of our dependence on imported cobalt. Following the invasion of Zaire by Communist-backed troops, cobalt production in Zaire ceased, and the price of cobalt tripled in 1 month.

A GAO report released last month—"Deep Ocean Mining—Actions Needed To Make It Happen"—stated that the potential benefits to the United States from seabed mining include:

Reducing nickel and manganese imports by more than 50 percent and eliminating all cobalt and most copper imports by 1985, which could reduce mineral import costs by over $1 billion in 1985.

Ensuring U.S. independence of foreign suppliers in meeting national security needs for these metals.

Increasing U.S. employment through deep seabed mining, shipbuilding, the production of mining equipment and the construction and operation of minerals processing plants within the United States.

The benefits of ocean mining are enormous, but the impact of that mining on those resources will be minimal. The same GAO report indicates the deposits are so large that "the first commercial ventures are likely to mine less than 5 percent of the deposits presently identified."

The mineral content of the South Pacific bed is estimated to be between 10 and 500 billion tons.

Any development of these resources must be based on a legal framework which encourages development, avoids conflict with international law, provides a strong mechanism for avoiding negative environmental impacts, and establishes an orderly procedure for mining activities by American citizens.

The capital investment required for mining is enormous. The cost of developing one site ranges from $550 to $700 million.

That kind of commitment requires assurances that any future international agreement to supersede this legislation will recognize the validity of their operations.

H.R. 12988 offers an appropriate compromise between absolute Federal guaranty and development totally at the developer's own risk.

The financial investment involved requires the assurance that our Government will make the best effort possible in the law of the sea negotiations to ensure that implementation of the treaty will not affect the integrity of previous investments.

It is in our national interest to offer the incentive and make the commitment made in H.R. 12988.

This legislation represents a strong commitment to ocean mining without an abrogation of the principle that these mineral resources are the common heritage of all mankind.

Under this legislation, we remain committed to management of the resource under an international agreement.

We do not assert a claim of sovereignty which would undermine any law of the sea negotiations.

H.R. 12988 provides the reasonable framework within which American citizens may exercise the common right of exploration of the tremendous potential of the ocean floor.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, the Ways and Means Committee agreed to an amendment which has been incorporated as a separate title IV in H.R. 12988, the Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act. This provision imposes an excise tax on deep seabed mining. It also creates a trust fund into which the taxes are deposited. The amounts in the fund would be available for appropriation for revenue sharing under an international deep seabed treaty.

The excise tax is imposed on the value of the metals or minerals removed from deep seabed nodules containing at least one of the following—manganese, nickel, copper, or cobalt. The rate of tax is 3.75 percent of the imputed value of all commercially recoverable metals or minerals in those nodules. The "imputed value" is 20 percent of fair market value, so that the effective tax rate is 0.75 percent of fair market value.

The tax is payable at the time prescribed by the Treasury Department which generally can be no earlier than the time of commercial use or sale of the metals or minerals. If the taxpayer does not intend to process, use commercially, or sell a metal or mineral within 1 year, the tax on that metal or mineral is not payable unless and until the taxpayer later does process, sell or use the metal or mineral.

The tax is effective on January 1, 1980, and it terminates 10 years after enactment or earlier if an international deep seabed treaty which meets the provision's requirements is adopted by the United States.

Since there is not expected to be any deep seabed mining for at least 5 years, there will not be any tax revenues for that period. Once mining is in full production, it is expected that the tax will raise about $5 million of net revenues annually.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of title IV of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. CONABLE).

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Ways and Means Committee amendment to H.R. 3350, the Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act. It is an interesting measure. We are in virgin territory. We have tried to strike a balance that will bring about the development that is needed, that will give adequate recognition to the communal nature of the resources to be recovered and that will also reflect the current status of negotiations relative to the deep seabed.

The amendment imposes an excise tax on certain hard minerals extracted from the seabed. That is as opposed to the continental shelf. The excise tax is 3.75 percent; that is .0375 of the imputed value of the covered minerals, which in turn is defined as 20 percent of the fair market value of the recovered minerals. Simple arithmetic of 3.75 percent times a 20-percent imputed value figure yields an effective tax rate of 0.75 percent, or .0075, if you express it in decimals. This adjustment is made to approximate the value of the minerals themselves without the added value due to the extraction, handling, and transporting operations. The minerals subject to the excise tax are all commercially recoverable minerals contained in nodules which contain at least one of the following four minerals: manganese, nickel, cobalt, or copper.

The tax will take effect on January 1, 1980. It will terminate either when the United States agrees to an international treaty on this issue, or after 10 years, whichever is earlier.

The proceeds of the excise tax are earmarked for deposit in a Deep Seabed Revenue Sharing Trust Fund. The amounts in the Trust Fund will be available as part of any U.S. contribution to an international revenue sharing fund which may be required by the Law of the Sea Conference, but which has not as yet come to fruition in these negotiations. If there is no international agreement after 10 years, then Congress will determine the disposition of amounts in the trust fund. Remember, it terminates in 10 years, if there is no international agreement prior to that time.

Mr. Chairman, the excise tax and trust fund are straightforward in their operation. The specifics in the amendment address details such as the procedure for determining the minerals' value, the payment schedule of the tax, and certain conditions for suspending payments. However, the House should not lose sight of the more important aspect of this revenue measure. That is, it signals our willingness to share deep seabed revenues whenever an acceptable international treaty can be reached. It shows the world that we are backing up our words with action.

The level of the tax is sufficient to give credibility to our position but not so large as to stifle this emerging industry before it has a chance to get started. An excise tax significantly higher than that recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means will jeopardize the future of deep seabed mineral recovery. If it were lower than that, it would not give, I think, adequate recognition to the fact that this is a common property located on the deep seabed and not within the property of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means to this legislation is designed to strike a balance between collecting revenue and permitting a new industry an opportunity to establish itself. It is too bad to hold up the development of this industry and this important mineral resource simply because of an inability to bring the Law of the Sea Conference to a prompt conclusion.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the committee amendment as a sensible first step toward the optimum tax treatment of the deep sea-mining industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York (Mr. CONABLE) has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire to the gentleman from New York (Mr. MURPHY) whether he has any further requests for time.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) is recognized on behalf of the Committee on International Relations for 15 minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI).

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12988, which will be offered as a substitute for H.R. 3350 at the appropriate time.

The Committee on International Relations has had a long-standing interest in deep seabed mining legislation. It recognizes the implications that such legislation could have for U.S. foreign relations in general and the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in particular. Several members of the committee have been congressional advisers to the U.S. delegation to the Law of the Sea Conference, and the committee has held briefings and hearings on the status of the conference following each conference session.

We have closely followed the related legislation, such as the 200-mile fishery-management zone, and we continue to be interested not only in U.S. fishing and mineral rights but also in such questions as the unimpeded passage of our naval ships through the world ocean as well as a uniform-breadth of the territorial sea.

The world ocean, Mr. Chairman, is the last frontier. Therefore, it is imperative that there be orderly exploration of the deep seabed, and, to accomplish this, a deep sea treaty is necessary.

The Committee on International Relations has been particularly cognizant of the impact that unilateral legislation would have on the Law of the Sea negotiations. In the past the committee has been concerned that U.S. legislation on deep sea mining could impair prospects for the successful conclusion of a comprehensive agreement that is in our Nation's national interest.

However, the committee now believes that interim legislation could be useful. The committee is impressed by the broad support for this view expressed by witnesses from the Congress, the administration, the ocean mining industry, academia, nongovernmental organizations, and, Mr. Chairman, by past supporters and opponents of such interim legislation.

The committee concurs with the administration that the failure of the sixth session of the United Nations Conference held in the summer of 1977 to make progress on the proposed seabed authority makes its necessary for Congress to establish a legal framework within which U.S. companies can develop deep sea mining technology which is important to the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the substitute bill, H.R. 12988, represents a compromise of the three versions of H.R. 3350 reported from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and the Committee on International Relations. There were 19 issues of difference among the 3 versions, one of which was resolved by referral to the Committee on Ways and Means. A great deal of time and effort has been expended by these committees to reach acceptable conclusions, and I congratulate all the participants who have worked so hard to achieve a successful compromise.

Particularly, Mr. Chairman, I wish to pay tribute to the chairman of the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade of the Committee on International Relations, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM).

Mr. Chairman, I urge passage of the substitute bill before us.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the comments of the committee chairman.

The gentleman mentioned the lack of progress at the sixth session of the United Nations Conference, and I presume his statement refers primarily to that lack of progress. Is that accurate or not?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. That is accurate. There was, unfortunately, a lack of progress at the sixth session in the summer of 1977.

I wish to submit to the gentleman that passing this legislation would serve as an incentive for progress at the future sessions of the conference.

Mr. BEDELL. Through the sixth session the gentleman felt there was inadequate progress. Is that correct?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Yes, the sixth session was the one I referred to.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12988, a bill which will be offered as a substitute for H.R. 3350 and which will promote the orderly development of hard mineral resources, pending adoption of an international regime relating thereto.

Considered by four committees, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Interior and Insular Affairs, International Relations, and Ways and Means, this legislation has received careful and close scrutiny over a period of many months.

It is a measure enabling deep seabed mining operations to develop and apply necessary technology to the commercial recovery and processing of an abundant storehouse of minerals, particularly nodules of manganese, copper, cobalt, and nickel, all needed by an increasingly industrialized world, while at the same time clearly asserting that the bill is "interim" in nature pending the entry into force of a "superseding international agreement" governing such mining activities.

It is interim, transitional legislation because in 1970 the United States joined with 108 other nations in adopting a United Nations resolution declaring the seabed and the resources thereof beyond the limits of national jurisdiction as the "common heritage of mankind."

The United Nations Law of the Sea Conference, in which over 150 nations are participating, has made noteworthy progress toward, but has not as yet developed a working definition of this common heritage principle in terms of how the deep seabed's natural resources will be administered by an international regime and U.N. member states. Serving, during the last 4 years, as a congressional member of the U.S. delegation to the Law of the Sea Conference, I have joined with others in stressing the critical importance of giving meaning to this common heritage concept so that the deep seabed would be spared the debilitation caused by a modern day gold rush governed only by the rule of "first with the most."

I am confident that the basic framework of the compromise substitute bill, H.R. 12988, would prevent such chaotic exploitation of the deep seabed's mineral resources, and carefully effects a synthesis between the need to develop technology for commercial recovery and processing of the minerals, and the requirement that this Nation engage in ocean mining with the intent that principles of the common heritage concept to emerge from the Law of the Sea Conference will ultimately guide U.S. actions in this area.

Testifying on January 23, 1978, before the Committee on International Relations, Ambassador Elliot L. Richardson, head of the U.S. delegation to the Law of the Sea Conference, stated that "the orderly development of deep seabed mining should not only be continued but also be encouraged." Ambassador Richardson further indicated that "interim domestic legislation" composed of key elements now for the most part contained in H.R. 12988, "will not, as is often charged, negatively affect the prespects for reaching ageement at the Law of the Sea Conference."

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 12988, and while there remain several additional issues concerning ocean mining to be considered before final passage of this bill, I am hopefull that the House will approve a measure which will both promote in an orderly way the development of deep seabed mining, and maintain the integrity of the concept "common heritage of mankind."

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DERWINSKI).

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, after months of negotiation, we now have before us, a bill that will permit U.S. companies to mine manganese modules from the oceans seabeds. As a cosponsor of H.R. 12988, which my colleague from New York (Mr. MURPHY), will offer in the form of a substitute to the original text of H.R. 3350, I point out that what has finally emerged is the product of those who have taken an active interest in this legislation.

To get where we are today required significant concessions on the part of a number of us. Having made those concessions, we feel obliged to serve notice that we have compromised as much as we can and, therefore, must oppose last ditch efforts to make certain further changes adverse to U.S. interests.

I am naturally disturbed about reports that attempts will be made to alter two very important elements of the compromise bill, title II and title IV.

As Members know, the original bill reported out of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee provided for a federally administered investment insurance program as a means of protecting U.S. deep sea mining companies against the loss of their investments under the terms of any future international oceans accord. I originally favored this idea, primarily because I was impressed by testimony indicating that private insurers would not underwrite deep sea mining ventures at affordable rates. Such insurance is not attainable because private insurers foresee the possibility that some years hence a Law of the Sea Treaty may come into force which would create an international seabed entity with the authority to seriously harm U.S. sea mining investments.

Can anyone recall any previous situation where U.S. industry has been faced with the prospect of having its business activities and investments subjected to the dictates of an international authority comprised of a majority of nations that have a much different perception of the merits of the free enterprise system and what constitutes a fair return on an invested dollar? I think not—it is an unprecedented possibility. Given that reality, a number of us felt it was in the national interest to insure that U.S. companies mining materials vital to our national defense effort be given some kind of needed protection.

During the long negotiations between those most interested in this bill, an acceptable alternative to the investment guarantee proposal was worked out. That alternative has been incorported into title II of the Murphy substitute which stipulates, inter alia, that it is the intent of Congress that the United States will not accept a treaty which did not provide adequate protection for American mining investments and operations authorized by this legislation. I accepted this so-called grandfather rights compromise language after being satisfied that it would significantly minimize the risk of the United States becoming a signatory to a treaty that would jeopardize an operation's viability.

In view of the foregoing, any effort to weaken title II must be rejected. It would dilute a clearcut expression of congressional intent at a critical juncture in the Law of the Sea Treaty negotiations. The next round of talks is slated to begin in the latter part of August. Consequently, any congressional signal at this time that would encourage other countries to exact further adverse concessions from our negotiators could cause U.S. companies to terminate their plans for further deep seabed investments and operations. That is a turn of events all of us, I am sure, seek to avoid.

I would now like to turn to my concern about amending title IV which imposes a taxation system on deep seabed mining activities and provides for the establishment of a deep seabed revenue sharing trust fund. Evidently the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) will offer an amendment to this title that would raise the effective rate of the removal tax on deep seabed minerals from three-fourths of 1 percent to 10 percent of gross revenues.

I will have more to say about the demerits of the Stark amendment when we consider it later on in these proceedings. For the moment, however, I would like to leave you with these thoughts to ponder:

This amendment would preclude ocean mining by U.S. industry and thus insures that there will be no revenues in the international fund.

Leaving aside the question whether it is in the national interest to turn over substantial ocean mining revenues to an international seabed authority or the Third World, it is clearly not in the national interest to do so at the expense of prohibiting the development of a U.S. ocean mining capability.

In sum, Mr. Chairman, the Murphy substitute represents a practical political solution to a host of problems that not too long ago seemed irreconcilable. Thanks to the collective efforts of members from the four committees—Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Interior, International Relations, and Ways and Means—exercising jurisdiction over this legislation, those problems have now been resolved. Admittedly, it may not be the complete answer to everyone's concerns, but frankly—how many bills are?

In evaluating the Murphy proposal, Members should bear in mind its passage would accomplish two overriding objectives:

First. It significantly strengthens Ambassador Richardson's negotiating hand at the next session of the Law of the Sea Conference; and Second. It permits U.S. mining interests to extract resources from the deep ocean which are critical to the preservation of our national security.

In my estimation, these two objectives clearly transcend others. Passage of the Murphy alternative will cause us to realize both and, therefore, I urge its adoption.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, last November H.R. 3350 was subsequently referred to the International Relations Committee for consideration of those aspects of the bill which fall within the committee's jurisdiction. We worked very hard, in the short time available under the terms of the referral, to make the bill acceptable both to the committee and the administration from a foreign policy point of view. Our main purpose was to make the bill contribute to, rather than detract from, the chances for successfully concluding a Law of the Sea Treaty, and to make the bill consonant with the country's general foreign policy objectives. To that end, the amendments the committee reported out in February accomplished the following:

First. Deleted a provision which would have guaranteed the investments of U.S. mining companies against the effects of a treaty entered into by our own Government;

Second. Established a meaningful revenue-sharing provision based on the principle, to which this country has officially subscribed, that the resources of the deep seabed are the common heritage of mankind;

Third. Modified provisions, requiring documentation of mining vessels and location of processing plants exclusively in the United States, which would not only run counter to the principles of American foreign policy but would also actually hurt the mining operations themselves;

Fourth. Strengthened the reciprocating States and environmental protection provisions of the bill, and the disclaimer of extraterritorial sovereignty; and Fifth. Emphasized that this act is transitional pending the conclusion of a Law of the Sea Treaty, and will be superseded by such treaty to the extent that the bill is inconsistent with the treaty.

For 4 months after we reported the bill, we engaged in complex negotiations with the other committees involved in an attempt to reconcile the 19 differences among the three versions, and produced a substitute, H.R. 12988, which will permit orderly consideration by the House Managers for the three committees agreed that they would neither offer nor support any amendment to the substitute from the floor which would have the effect of altering the agreement we reached on any of the 19 points at issue, with two exceptions.

Mr. Chairman, no party to this agreement is entirely satisfied with it. I myself have some doubts about the wisdom of passing a bill at all, since we have received so much contradictory testimony about the possible effects of the bill on the law of the sea negotiations. But I sense that the will of the House and the administration is to have a bill. In a spirit of compromise, I have cosponsored the substitute, which I am pleased to say contains the substance of the International Relations Committee amendments. I urge the House to pass the substitute without loading it down with harmful amendments.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BEDELL).

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 3350, the Deep Seabed Hard Minerals Act. This bill has far reaching ramifications, and I do not believe we fully realize the potential consequences of passage of this legislation.

I would like to read for you from a declaration adopted by the U.N. General Assembly in 1970.

1. The Seabed and ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction (hereinafter referred to as the area), as well as the resources of the area, are the common heritage of mankind.

The area shall not be subject to appropriation by any means, by States or persons, natural or juridical, and no State shall claim or exercise sovereignty or sovereign rights over any part thereof.

This declaration passed by a vote of 108 to 0, with 14 abstentions. The United States voted for the declaration.

In May, our chief negotiator, Ambassador Richardson reported that:

When the Geneva phase of the Seventh Session ended last Friday, delegates could take deserved pride in the solid record of accomplishment they had built. By common agreement, success with respect to each hard-core issue being considered by the Conference was defined as a text sufficiently improved over the Informal Composite Negotiating Text that it offered a substantially enhanced prospect of consensus. Under this criterion, the list of successes is substantial.

Delegates from the developing world have told me that we should not expect their respective countries to continue to negotiate if the U.S. Government enacts unilateral legislation. Several representatives from landlocked States have stated that they are not concerned with many of the other issues involved in the LOS negotiations, such as right of passage through straits for example, because they do not have a navy. Their botton line is that they are tired of deferring to the neocolonial attitudes and policies of the United States and that passage of unilateral legislation will be the proverbial straw that breaks the camel's back.

Stated simply, many LDC's are tired of being pushed around.

It is important to understand that we are facing a very emotional situation. Many nations will be mad—and you and I would be too—if the United States professed to be negotiating in good faith and then went right ahead and licensed private companies to mine the deep seabed while negotiations were still in progress.

I believe that the delegates are sincere in what they have told me and that certain nations will indeed break off negotiations if unilateral legislation is enacted. But let us assume for the sake of argument that they are only bluffing and they will continue to negotiate at the U.N. I personally do not believe that such a development materially changes the argument.

Remember, the United States has agreed that the minerals on the ocean floor "shall not be subject to appropriation by any means by states or persons * * *"

Consider the following excerpt from the prepared report by the Congressional Research Service for the House International Relations Committee:

Since over 100 nations are committed to the principle that deep seabed minerals are part of the "heritage of mankind" and thus may be subject to the moratorium on mining, a unilateral decision by the U.S. Government to license mining operations would probably be challenged. These challenges might take the form of protests in international forums, lawsuits both in the U.S. courts and in the courts of foreign countries against the companies engaged in mining the seabed, support of political opposition within the United States against seabed mining on environmental or other grounds, economic or political sanctions, or resort to force. Since the linkage has been made at the Law of the Sea Conference between seabed mining and navigation rights, sanctions or resorts to force might be directed either against the miners themselves or against U.S. maritime commerce generally. Failure to respond appropriately to challenges would have the effect of abandoning the claim to the right to mine the seabed beneath the high seas.

There is no intent to imply that violence is the most likely form challenges to U.S. mining of the deep seabed may take. Legal or political challenges are, in fact, more likely because of the powerful retaliatory capability of the U.S. military establishment. But the history of development of customary law of the sea is filled with resorts to low level violence as a supplement to other measures. Prudence requires that the possibility of violence be considered although its intensity might be very low.

Current concepts for mining the deep seabed involve ships towing deep sea dredges, either bucket or suction operated, at speeds from 2 to 4 miles an hour. With gear working, these ships are vulnerable to various kinds of hostile actions. Few in number and operating in well defined locations, they could be subjected to harassment, seizure or even sinking. The sophistification of the hostile element might range from naval and air units of a Third World power or powers to ordinary commercial craft in the hands of terrorists or other subnational groups. Harassment, the most likely hostile actions, could take the form of close passes to the mining vessel, intended to obstruct movement, deliberate fouling of the dredging equipment, setting off explosive charges in the near vicinity of the mining vessel, deliberate collision and similar actions designed to impede operations. Seizure or sinking, though probably less likely, are equally feasible actions against undefended mining ships should the challenger decide on that course. Harassment and seizure are most easily accomplished from another vessel. Either ships or aircraft could carry out a decision to sink a mining vessel as a challenge to the claimed right to mine the deep seabed. Submarines, available in a number of Third World navies, could sink mining vessels anonymously.

Indeed, one representative from a developing country told me that if the United States unilaterally licenses private companies to start mining deep sea minerals which the world has agreed does not belong to any one nation, we should not be surprised if something happens to their operations.

Mr. Chairman, what would we do if a ship is sunk or damaged while exploiting minerals which we have agreed "shall not be subject to appropriation by any means by states or persons * * *"?

Or suppose Third World countries retaliate by imposing navigation restrictions on U.S. shipping in their economic zones. Let me again read from the House International Relations Committee report on this legislation:

Whether the U.S. Navy has sufficient capability to assert the right of navigational freedoms within the economic zones of dissenting coastal states has not been assessed in unclassified sources and is not further addressed here. It is a question that should be answered however, as a part of deliberations over whether to license U.S. companies to conduct seabed mining explorations or operations in the absence of an acceptable international agreement.

Or, suppose certain nations simply expropriate property of U.S. interests within their country in return for what they compute to be their share of the value of the minerals we have taken from the "common heritage."

What would the United States do?

The question is whether it makes any sense for the House of Representatives to pass legislation that could lead us toward these kinds of problems.

Does it make any sense for us, in effect, to say to those who have been trying to negotiate a treaty on the complex issues of the use of the world's oceans that:

Sure we promised that we would negotiate in good faith and after the last LOS session we agreed that "delegates could take deserved pride in the solid record of accomplishment they had built." But since the progress has not been as rapid as we had hoped, we have decided to go ahead on our own and license private firms to take from the common heritage. We have also decided that any future treaty will be expected to conform to the terms established by our domestic legislation. Regardless of what you may think, we believe it is negotiating in good faith for us to take this action.

The fact that most of you believe that unilateral legislation violates the 1970 U.N. Declaration we supported as well as international law doesn't concern us much because mining industry lawyers have assured us that it is OK.

Oh, by the way, we hope that you will negotiate a treaty that guarantees our ships the right of passage through straits and free navigation through your economic zones, because that is important to us. And we hope you will respect us for the good country we are and will continue to furnish us with all the other important raw materials we need from you.

Such rationale is neither rational nor tenable.

Mr. Chairman, I believe a satisfactory Convention on the Law of the Sea is very much in the public interest of the United States and that passing unilateral legislation is very much in the private interest of a handful of mining companies. The two goals are contradictory, not complementary as some have suggested.

There is little doubt that deep sea mining legislation will pass the House and that there will be great celebration in the offices of the mining companies and their lobbyists—and that the change for our children and grandchildren to live in a peaceful world will also be diminished by that vote.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BEDELL).

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BREAUX).

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Chairman, regarding the question of the common heritage doctrine that the gentleman referred to, does the gentleman agree that the proposed legislation clearly states and recognizes that the mineral resources are the common heritage of mankind and further sets up an international revenue sharing fund to distribute some of the moneys that are derived from mining by international concerns?

Mr. BEDELL. The nations of the world believe that whether we say we recognize it or not the passage of this legislation is not only a violation of the 1970 declaration, which we voted for and which was passed unanimously, it is also a violation of the intent of international law. And further, it is doubtful that much of the international community would consider the revenue-sharing provision of H.R. 12988 particularly generous. The mining company tax assessment—0.75 percent of gross receipts—is far too low when considered in comparison to the potential economic benefits which would accrue to private mining companies from exploitation of the ocean floor.

Mr. BREAUX. If the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman referred to the fact that the United States voted for the common heritage doctrine, and that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. LAGOMARSINO).

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12988, the Deep Seabed Mining Act. This bill, as presently before the House, represents a consensus of the Committees on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Interior and Insular Affairs, International Relations, and Ways and Means.

As a member of two of those committees, and former member of a third, I feel a certain sense of déjà vu regarding this bill. It has taken a long time to reconcile the various interests involved in this subject, stretching as they do from American board rooms and Government offices to literally the heart of Africa.

The implications of this measure are vast. A wealth of minerals awaits at the bottom of the sea, but it requires a massive investment of capital to recover. We are speaking of investments on the order of half a billion dollars and more before a profit is realized. Naturally, no one is going to invest that kind of money without at least some assurances that they will be able to keep a reasonable share of those profits.

Unfortunately, we find ourselves now in a chicken and egg situation. Do we pursue an international treaty in order to guarantee our rights, or do we go ahead in the hopes that our activity will stimulate movement toward a treaty.

Negotiations are now stalled in the U.N. Law of the Sea Conference. In a way, it is a situation similar to that of the 200-mile limit. Everyone argues over what to do until finally someone goes ahead and does it. Treaties usually ratify reality.

This bill expresses the intent of Congress that it will not accept a treaty, which imposes financially impossible conditions on development. It also lays the groundwork allowing U.S. companies to proceed. Without the participation of U.S. companies, it is doubtful whether deep seabed mining will ever become a reality. The "grandfathering" section contained in title II of the bill will assure this participation, and send a signal to the international community of our own conditions for participation.

Finally, in recognition of the principle that the minerals of the deep seabed belong to all mankind, the bill provides for a percentage of the revenues to be placed in a revenue-sharing fund, to be dispersed to the international community whenever a new treaty comes into force.

This bill has had a long genesis, but it is now at the point where a vital new industry can be born. I urge my colleagues to lend their vision to this undertaking and help it become a reality.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. FENWICK).

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I was disturbed to hear the mention of threats. We ought not in this country, it seems to me, act on account of threats or because we are afraid. We ought to act, because we think it is the right thing to do. If we are involved in negotiations then we should not, behind people's backs, take an arrogant and indifferent attitude and pass legislation that rides over the negotiations that are taking place, we hope, in good faith.

I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) if it is, indeed, part of our negotiating posture that, for example, the countries which are negotiative in good faith and in cooperation, would understand the spirit of such legislation. Does our Ambassador want a bill so that he can then use it in his negotiations with other countries, or would that, indeed, be regarded as an unfriendly and arrogant action?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. GILMAN. I yield 1 additional minute to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. FENWICK).

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. FENWICK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, our chief negotiator, Ambassador Richardson, has indicated publicly he feels Congress should proceed in an orderly fashion with legislation. I do not think he has made any statement publicly as to his position on the legislation. But to answer the gentlewoman's first statement, there is the view that the passage of legislation, particularly by the House, would help the U.S. negotiators.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlewoman will yield, as a congressional adviser to the Law of the Sea Conference I have talked to a number of delegates from the developing countries, and I can tell you that without exception those delegates look at this action as a violation of our agreement to negotiate in good faith. In all fairness, I am not sure that they look upon passage in the House as such, but if the bill is enacted by Congress, they absolutely would feel that to be the case. And, in my opinion, if the House passes this bill, we will be setting an ominous precedent and, we will be embarking on a dangerous course.

Mrs. FENWICK. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman has again expired.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. FENWICK).

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, would it be possible in this legislation, to indicate the mood of the House? Could we suggest, by passing in this House alone, a bill that shows we are awaiting, as a final matter, the decision of the Law of the Sea Conference and that we are putting this legislation forward only in that spirit?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the gentlewoman will find that there are various references to that effect in the legislation and in the committee reports. This is without question interim legislation, and it will have no impact beyond that. If a treaty comes into force, the legisation yieds to the treaty.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. FENWICK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BEDELL. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

The gentlewoman should also be aware, however, that the legislation clearly states that it is the intent of Congress that the treaty abide by substantially the same terms, conditions, and restrictions that we write into this legislation.

Mrs. FENWICK. Perhaps we could change that to read "hope" instead of "intent."

Mr. BEDELL. If the gentlewoman could, I think that would be agreeable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SKUBITZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. VENTO).

Mr. VENTO. I thank the gentleman from Kansas, my colleague on the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation before us deals with many complex and sensitive issues. H.R. 12988 successfully responds to international, economic, technological, and environmental concerns and when passed, will give our country a sound policy for the development of the mineral potential of the ocean floor. As a result of this policy, our country will have a valuable source of manganese, copper, cobalt and nickel and will make great strides in insuring our mineral independence. I congratulate my colleagues who have worked so long and so hard on this matter for successfully resolving the issues that they faced. But while H.R. 12988 does strike to address most concerns, it does neglect certain aspects that this Congress must include in its considerations.

Deep seabed mining is an untested process and the impacts that it could have on the ocean and marine life are mostly unknown. The wealth of the oceans belong to all mankind and we must seek to protect this marine environment as far as possible. For this reason, it is imperative that H.R. 12988 offer the maximum environmental protection.

A key to protecting the oceans is the role of the public in the decisionmaking process. The input of concerned citizens will provide the Secretary with a valuable source of information and will result in rules and regulations that balance environmental concerns with development needs. Public participation will also play a valuable oversight function and will help to insure compliance by the regulatory agencies.

Public participation is an important device for those who wish to develop the ocean's mineral resources. Through this vehicle, industry will be able to contribute to the development of a sound mining policy and will be able to appeal adverse executive decisions.

Mr. Chairman, public input has proven to be beneficial to the development of governmental policy. During this session, Congress has provided for citizen participation in such important legislation as H.R. 2, the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977, and H.R. 1614, the Outer Continental Lands Act of 1977. Such a provision must be included in this legislation of international significance.

During consideration of H.R. 12988, I plan to offer an amendment to provide for such public participation. I believe that this amendment will serve as a further safeguard for this valuable resource and will result in a sound policy for mining the ocean floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. SKUBITZ).

Mr. SKUBITZ. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take 1 minute to raise one question that has come to mind. I am sure there is an answer to it. We are trying to guarantee to the nations of the world, particularly the landlocked nations, as I understand it, their rights to participate in the benefits that may develop from this program by placing a certain amount of funds, whether it be three-quarters of 1 percent or 10 percent, into a special fund. Is this not correct?

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKUBITZ. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman is correct. We have a provision which the Committee on Ways and Means has presented which does provide exactly that international fund.

Mr. SKUBITZ. That leads me to my second point. Supposing a firm should develop an area, find the resources, and begin removing minerals. What in this bill is there to protect them against poachers from other countries?

Mr. BREAUX. If the gentleman would yield further, the same thing that would protect any fisherman on the international high seas catching fish.

Mr. SKUBITZ. I do not know of anything that protects them; does the gentleman?

Mr. BREAUX. That is the answer.

Mr. SKUBITZ. If one of our countries should develop an area outside of our limits and a ship from some other country says, That is fine. We are glad you found the ore for us.

Now we are coming in and taking over, what would happen?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKUBITZ. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

First of all, I say as a practical matter the technology required for this kind of an operation is very sophisticated, and the capital investment is very large. It is true, as the gentleman from Louisiana has just stated, and it cannot be otherwise, that we cannot declare unilaterally that a certain segment of the ocean is the exclusive province of an American company to develop. On the other hand, there is a provision in the bill for us to come to agreement with certain other countries, and they will agree not to license any operations in any areas that we have licensed, and we agree not to operate in any areas they license. But beyond those statements it is subject to the kind of problem that the gentleman raises, and which could not be otherwise because that land and those resources are international.

Mr. SKUBITZ. Mr. Chairman, if I may have back my time, I think I get the gentleman's answer, but that raises this question. Certainly the gentleman is not telling me that if private enterprise can go out and raise the money to develop this, that a nation of the world cannot get enough funds to develop the type of equipment that is necessary today. Any number of nations could develop the equipment, sit idly by and wait for somebody to find a nice rich spot and then find somebody to help develop it. If they reach agreement, from what my colleague says, the undeveloped nations are not willing to accept any agreement.

I am not sure the Russians or anybody else are so willing to accept an agreement that they will not do a little poaching if they see an opportunity to do it and are protected by the fact that the people of the United States have no part in the property they are developing.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I would say the gentleman has made a very excellent statement as to the reasons for a treaty and why we are trying to negotiate an international treaty to cover this.

Mr. SKUBITZ. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKUBITZ. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman misunderstood me. I think the gentleman thought the underdeveloped countries did not want this developed under any circumstances. On the contrary, I think they are most anxious to have this developed, because they want to see it developed so they can share in some of the profits.

The concern I have is what the gentleman has expressed, that is, that we should know if we license these people to go out and mine these minerals, which we agree do not belong to us, and somebody commits acts of violence against those operations, do we wash our hands of responsibility for whatever is done?

I hope this is settled before we pass the legislation, because I think it is a very important thing for the taxpayers of this country to know.

Mr. SKUBITZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the measure.

Mr. Chairman, we are to decide, this week, whether or not we need to set interim guidelines for American mining corporations to follow in mining the deep seabed while the United States and the other nations of the world negotiate an international agreement on the subject. To decide this issue we must answer two questions: First, do we need the minerals that lie at the bottom of the sea; and second, if we determine there is a need for the minerals, is there also a need for guidelines in mining them?

The answer to the first question, "do we need the minerals," is yes. The nodules lying on the floor of the deep seabed contain copper, nickel, cobalt and manganese. We are presently importing almost 100 percent of the cobalt and manganese we use, 71 percent of the nickel, and 15 percent of the copper. Given the fact that the world economy is moving from a buyer's market to a seller's market for most resources—a marketplace where supply no longer exceeds demand, but barely meets it—we must, at least, develop the technology necessary to pull these resources from the sea so that we will be prepared to meet our increasing demand for them, without being subjugated to a cartel similar to the oil cartel we must now deal with.

The answer to the second question, "do we need to establish guidelines for the mining operation " is also, yes. At present, our Government has virtually no control over the present exploratory and development activity of our ocean mining companies. The State Department has acknowledged the fact that the companies may continue to operate under the customary international law within the concept of freedom of the high seas. Consequently, there is no regulatory framework by which any nation may exercise any type of administrative or environmental control over high seas operations. We need such a framework. We need a framework in which the mining industry is provided reasonable investment security and the Government may monitor their practices in light of the international considerations of the situation. But the framework we establish here now should be, and is, interim in nature. The framework will exist only as long as there is no international agreement.

Once such an agreement is reached, ocean mining will then be carried out under the structure of the international treaty. Title II of the legislation we are considering today deals specifically with this transition. This title is essential to the legislation because it answers the argument that our legislation will damage the law of the sea negotiations. Rather than impeding the progress of the negotiations, this legislation will provide a much-needed impetus.

Our special representative at the U.N. Law of the Sea Conference, Ambassador Elliot L. Richardson, agreed with this stance in testimony before the Merchant Marine Committee last July.

Further, I was privileged to be one of several Members of Congress to participate in the Third Ocean Policy Seminar in Tokyo last November, where the Japanese delegates agreed, in our joint summary communique of the seminar, that the Japanese Diet would consider passing its own legislation authorizing deep seabed mining, similar to the legislation now before us. Since that time I have received further indications from the president of the Japanese Maritime League of Diet Members, Matsuhei Mouri, that the Diet seriously intends to deal with deep seabed mining and is following with great interest our progress on this legislation. This will undoubtedly bring additional pressure on the developing nations to come to a reasonable international deep seabed agreement by making clear the intentions of the United States and Japan to mine these resources with or without a treaty.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues to pass this legislation to set the parameters for U.S. corporations to begin mining in international seas.

● Mr. FRASER. Mr. Chairman, the Deep Seabed Hard Minerals Act to establish an interim legal framework for U.S. companies to mine manganese nodules in the deep seabed beyond national jurisdiction in the oceans has been of considerable concern to me for a long time. I was a Member of the House when such legislation was first introduced in 1971 and, since the U.N. Conference on the Law of the Sea officially opened in 1973, I have been a congressional adviser to the U.S. delegation to that Conference.

There is no question in my mind that a comprehensive treaty on the Law of the Sea is in the U.S. national interest as well as in the interest of the international community. The successful conclusion of negotiations to revise the rules governing the multiple uses of ocean space is critically important to a world of over 150 nation-states. Agreement on a uniform breadth of the territorial sea, on the legal status of the economic resource zone, on the rights of states in that zone, on transit through international straits and on measures to conserve fisheries, protect the marine environment, promote scientific research, and settle disputes all represent major achievements in these negotiations. The big difficulty, however, has been for the developing states and the advanced industrial states to define a mutuality of interest with respect to an International Seabed Authority to govern the exploration and exploitation of the manganese nodes on the sea floor in international waters.

The substitute bill being considered, H.R. 12988, is the result of long hours of consultation among and between four committees of the House that had jurisdiction on the deep seabed mining bill. I have participated in the deliberations of the International Relations Committee when it considered H.R. 3350 as well as in the discussions with those representing the other committees. My purpose all along has been to seek to modify the provisions so as to improve the substantive quality of the bill as well as to make those provisions as compatible as possible with the requirements of the continuing negotiations on the Law of the Sea.

In these respects, I want to make a few points about the substitute bill. First, the substitute provides that ocean mining and processing vessels are to be documented under the laws of the United States or the laws of reciprocating states, which are other industrialized states that have adopted legislation on seabed mining similar to that in the United States. The International Relations Committee approved this provision; I continue to support it for reasons outlined in a letter circulated last week by myself and by my colleagues, Congressmen BINGHAM, WHALEN, MCCLOSKEY, and UDALL. I would urge your favorable consideration of our language on this point.

Second, I have strongly advocated the inclusion in the substitute of a revenue-sharing provision (title IV) whereby companies that get a permit to mine the ocean pay a percent of their profits to an escrow fund to be set up in the Treasury and which in turn would provide U.S. contributions to an international seabed authority when it comes into existence. Such a provision is essential to demonstrate symbolically and substantively U.S. commitment to the principle of the common heritage as set forth in the 1970 U.N. Declaration of principles on the exploration and exploitation of resources beyond the limits of national jurisdiction.

Third, the substitute bill provides that companies are to pay an excise tax of two-thirds of 1 percent into the escrow fund. The source of this figure was the ocean industry. However, it should be pointed out that the U.S. negotiators have been discussing a higher percent in the conference. And U.S. mining companies follow the negotiations carefully and are wholly knowledgeable about the possibility that there will be an agreement internationally on a higher percent than presently exists in title IV of the bill. My point here is that if the negotiations result in an agreement on the higher percent than the three-fourths of 1 percent in this act, U.S. companies should in no way be able to make a claim against the U.S. Government for damages in the amount of the difference between the two percentages.

Fourth, and related to the third point, it is essential to establish a clear understanding of the intent of title II, sections 201 and 202, the so-called grandfather clause. In discussions with the other committees that resulted in the substitute bill, it was agreed that notwithstanding the present language in H.R. 12988 these sections impose no legal or moral obligation on the U.S. Government to compensate mining companies that have permits to mine for any loss of investment they may incur if and when an international agreement on the Law of the Sea comes into force for the United States. This understanding should be made explicit for purposes of the legislative history of the act.

Besides those parts of the substitute that the four committees dealt with, there are provisions of H.R. 12988 that should be improved. For instance, the administration some time ago proposed amending title I to require companies applying for a permit to submit a work plan. Such a plan would provide a useful management tool and I would support adoption of an amendment to incorporate this idea. In addition, the way the legislation now reads, the administering department has to develop regulations before any licenses or permits are issued. There is, however, no clear authority in title I of H.R. 12988 for the Secretary to revise regulations and apply them to existing licensees or permittees when he or she determines such regulations are necessary to protect the environment, to conserve mineral resources, or to insure the safety of life and property at sea. I would support an amendment that gave the Secretary such express authority.

Finally, I would reiterate my initial belief about the importance of a comprehensive treaty on the Law of the Sea. If this legislation is enacted, I am quite concerned that it will strengthen the hand of the antitreaty forces in this country. If the President considers that the industry is in any way obstructing or trying to obstruct the efforts of the negotiators to get agreement on a treaty, I will strongly urge the President to veto the legislation.●

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. EVANS of Colorado) having assumed the chair, Mr. SIMON, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3350) to promote the orderly development of hard mineral resources in the deep seabed, pending adoption of an international regime relating thereto, had come to no resolution thereon.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3350, the bill just under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY AND COMMUNITY SERVICES AMENDMENTS OF 1978

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7577) to amend the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ANDREWS).

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 7577, with Mr. OBERSTAR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ANDREWS) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ERLENBORN) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 7577, the Economic Opportunity and Community Services Amendments of 1978, was unanimously reported by the Committee on Education and Labor. It represents more than 1 year of work by many members of the committee and especially the work of many members of the Subcommittee on Economic Opportunity, including Congressman PERKINS, QUIE, GOODLING, HAWKINS, FORD, and CORRADA.

Mr. Chairman, poverty continues to be a persistent condition in the United States. In fact, the period 1974–75 represented the largest single-year increase of poor Americans since 1959, and there are more poor people in this country today than in 1973. Pockets of severe unemployment, substandard housing, and limited educational and vocational training opportunities, among others, are societal elements which perpetuate poverty. These barriers produce human frustration and despair for approximately 25 million Americans evidenced by increasing dependency on drugs and alcohol, the decline of the family structure, and an alarming proliferation of adult crime and juvenile delinquency.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 7577 would extend for 3 years the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 and is designed to improve the delivery of social services in the struggle against economic deprivation and strengthen the administration and management of the Community Services Administration, the Federal agency charged with the responsibility to combat the causes of poverty. This bill also extends two vitally important programs administered by HEW, those being the Head Start program administered by the Administration for Children, Youth, and Families, and the Follow Through program, administered by the Office of Education.

Basically, the present structure and philosophy of Federal aid in this area is retained in this bill. However, the bill does amend two important sections of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended. These amendments deal with the percentage of Federal aid permissible to programs under title II and the allocation formula for the distribution of Head Start funds among the States. The bill also proposes several amendments designed to strengthen the administration of these programs at the Federal level.

I would like to briefly sketch for the Members the basic provisions of this bill.

TITLE I

Title I of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended, provides authority to the Director of CSA to conduct research and demonstration projects designed to test the development of new approaches that will aid in the effort to alleviate the special problems of the poor. Unfortunately, due to the lack of a specific authorization for appropriations for title I, CSA has not been able to assume the leadership role in the development of innovative and experimental programs in this area. This bill specifically provides for the expenditure of funds for the commencement of an active research and demonstration program.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS

There are nearly 900 community action agencies providing services to the poor under numerous Federal poverty programs. These agencies administer about $1.6 billion in poverty funds and employ nearly 110,000 persons, many of whom are recruited from low-income communities. It should be noted that 79 percent of these employees earn less than $8,000 per year. For every CSA dollar allocated, community action programs mobilize almost $4 in other funds to serve the poor.

Originally, the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 provided for a 90-percent Federal share of financial assistance to community action programs. The Federal share was changed to 80 percent in 1967, when poverty programs had achieved significant local acceptance. In 1974 the formula was amended by requiring a reduction in the Federal contribution beginning in fiscal year 1975 with a Federal share of 80 percent declining to 70 percent in fiscal 1976, and finally to 60 percent in fiscal year 1977. A slightly higher Federal contribution was allowed to those agencies receiving financial assistance below $300,000.

It is the committee's judgment that the act should be amended to restore to 80 percent the permissible level of Federal financial assistance to community action agencies. This provision is in response to the overwhelming testimony before the Subcommittee on Economic Opportunity that the current financial assistance formula has created an unnecessary hardship on community action agencies and was forcing numerous agencies to cut back worthy programs and was diverting the time and attention of agency personnel from program development and administration. The fact that CSA granted 160 waivers in 1977 to community action agencies, because of inability to meet the current ratio, as compared to only two waivers in 1975, was further indication of the need to restore a more realistic financial assistance formula.

COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH SERVICES

The bill deletes title IV of the act which provides for comprehensive health services. This program was designed to develop and deliver health services for the poor. It is the committee's opinion that title IV is duplicative of other existing programs administered by HEW. Since title IV has never received an appropriation and has been dormant since its establishment the committee proposes its deletion.

HEAD START

Mr. Chairman, the major amendment reflected in this bill relates to Head Start. These programs of compensatory educational, social, health, and nutritional services for low-income children have proven to be highly successful over the past 12 years. Recent independent studies indicate that participation in these programs produces positive gains in intelligence and achievement of children and significant enthusiastic parental involvement in the education and social development of their children. It is imperative that the Congress continue its active support for Head Start.

The committee proposes a new formula for the allocation among the States of funds for the program. This new formula is the result of extensive and intensive review of the current formula and numerous options for new allocation provisions, and represents a desire on the part of the Committee on Education and Labor to insure that no currently operating program is adversely affected, while at the same time providing that there be an equitable distribution among the States of new money for the program.

Mr. Chairman, specifically, this new formula first provides that up to 13 percent of the funds appropriated for Head Start may be reserved by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for the territories and discretionary programs. Second, each State will be provided with the amount they received in the previous fiscal year plus 6 percent for cost of living, except for those States [1] which receive more than 200 percent of the amount to which such State is entitled under the formula for any fiscal year. Third, the balance of the funds [2] would be allocated so that equal proportions are distributed on the basis of AFDC recipients in each State as compared to all States and the other half on the basis of children ages 0 to 5 living with low-income families in each State [3] as compared to all States.

This new formula will permit 46 States to receive substantially comparable increases in fiscal year 1979 above their fiscal year 1978 allotment. Without this change, the Congress would be faced with the fact that only seven States would receive 76 percent of the additional $100 million for Head Start projected for fiscal year 1979. This result should be unacceptable, and the new formula represents a reasonable and equitable resolution of a difficult issue.

FOLLOW THROUGH

The committee also recommended a 5-year extension of Follow Through programs with an authorization of appropriations of $70 million for fiscal year 1979 and incremental increases of an additional $10 million for the succeeding fiscal years. These amendments clearly reflect the broad support for this program.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY

This bill provides for greater congressional review of the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity. While there is justification for the need of a presidentially appointed advisory council for the purpose of providing the President and the Congress with an independent citizen review of CSA and its programs, the past performance of the Council has been somewhat disappointing. The bill responds to this concern by limiting the budget for the Council and extending its life until the end of 1979, at which time the Congress can thoroughly evaluate its contribution to decide if the Council should be further extended. I am happy to add, however, that the Council has recently acquired new leadership, and the most recent report of the Council represents a thorough, and useful analysis of the current state of CSA and human services programs.

ADMINISTRATION AND COORDINATION

Mr. Chairman, CSA now has a new leadership team of qualified and dedicated individuals who appear to be truly exercising their considerable skills in the best interests of the poor. I might add that it has been a pleasure to work with these people over the past 18 months.

The history of CSA and its management difficulties made it imperative that the committee thoroughly review the administration of the agency working toward the goal of proposing amendments to the Economic Opportunity Act for greater efficiency and effectiveness of the delivery of services to the poor. I should point out that the committee relied heavily on oversight reports of CSA prepared by the Committee on Government Operations. The Committee on Education and Labor is particularly grateful to Congresswoman CARDISS COLLINS for her thoughtful contributions in this area.

The bill proposes a number of amendments to the act which relate to management improvement, administration of grant money, and the operation of regional offices.

Specifically, the bill encourages the Director of CSA to streamline and decentralize the management of CSA. I am pleased to report that Grace Olivarez, the Director of CSA, has recently completed a major review of the agency's organizational structure, personnel evaluation, and performance, and supervisory accountability. In support of this effort, amendments are proposed to encourage CSA to annually consult with community action agencies, State economic opportunity offices, and other relevant groups to review all CSA regulations for the purpose of cutting redtape and to simplify administrative rules for those individuals responsible for running programs at the local and State levels. Furthermore, the Director is encouraged to place greater responsibility in the regional offices to eliminate the undesirable dependency on Washington for all administrative and programmatic decisionmaking.

Finally, the bill proposes numerous amendments designed to eliminate duplication of many social service delivery systems, to consolidate CSA program report requirements to the President and the Congress, and to encourage valuable research and demonstration projects while at the same time providing for greater review of project evaluation.

COMMUNITY ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Title VII of the Economic Opportunity Act provides for the Federal funding of community economic development programs designed to stimulate small business ventures in areas of severe economic depression. Currently these grants are provided to community development corporations (CDC's) by the Office of Economic Development with CSA. There are 36 operational CDC's and 7 CDC planning grants in 29 States.

CDC's have proven to be unique institutional vehicles to stimulate economic improvement in depressed areas. They are representative of low-income residents banning together to alleviate special economic problems in their local communities.

While CDC's hold great promise, and while several CDC's have demonstrated remarkable success in stimulating successful business ventures, there is considerable concern over the management of most CDC's, the relatively high rate of unsuccessful business ventures, and the administration and monitoring of CDC's by CSA.

The current administration at CSA has recognized the serious weaknesses within the agency in this area and has stressed the importance of providing strong leadership and improving management guidance of CDC's. In support of this recognition the agency recently contracted with a nationally recognized business consulting firm to assist in developing criteria for the management of CDC's and to help them develop sound business practices.

The Economic Opportunity Act provides that CDC's may qualify for assistance and loans from several Federal programs; namely, the Small Business Administration, the Farmers Home Administration, and the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, and Housing and Urban Development.

CDC's have encountered problems with these Federal departments and agencies mandated to assist them. Consequently, this bill proposes several amendments designed to minimize these problems and provide greater financial stability for CDC's. First, the bill mandates greater coordination between CSA and SBA in the promulgating of regulations with respect to CDC's. More specifically, the section 8a contract program of SBA helps business concerns owned or controlled by socially or economically disadvantaged persons to obtain subcontracts from suppliers to the Federal Government. Because nonprofit organizations are not eligible for such subcontracts, SBA approves subcontracting to CDC subsidiaries only on condition that the CDC agree to divest itself of ownership and control within 2 or 3 years. The divestiture requirement is unrealistic. While autonomy is the objective for every CDC business venture once it is established as a successful ongoing enterprise, it may take substantially longer than 24 to 36 months to complete this process. This bill would provide that eligible business concerns will not be considered ineligible for these benefits simply because it is owned in whole or in part by a CDC.

Finally, the committee recommends an authorization of appropriations of $50 million for fiscal year 1979 and such sums as may be necessary for the two succeeding fiscal years.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Chairman, the Federal Government still has a vital role to play in supplying the necessary resources to combat the continuing problems of poverty. This bill will strengthen and improve the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 so that we can permit its full potential to be realized. It is a bill worthy of the support of my colleagues.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 7577 accomplishes four major things. First, it extends the Head Start program for 3 years, and introduces a new formula for distributing the funds. Second, it extends for 5 years the Follow Through program while increasing its appropriations incrementally and expanding eligibility. Third, it sets a termination date for the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity, what we might call a sunset provision for the authority for this counsel.

The one part of the bill, the fourth part, I want to address my remarks to primarily. It is, I think, the most important part of the bill. The other portions, I think, are quite noncontroversial.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation before us today is designed to "help" all community action agencies throughout the country. I would like to point out, however, that there is one change that will not help, but actually hurt these agencies, the change made by the Committee on Education and Labor, and may actually hinder the ability of the agencies to function.

As the community action agencies will be hurt, there is one more hurt which will be even greater. That is the hurt for all people that comes with increased Federal spending. Somehow, the taxpayers throughout the country, I believe, deserve better from this Congress. When we reach the amending stage my colleague from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) will offer an amendment to correct the problem that we see in this legislation. His amendment simply strikes the new formula for community action agencies and reverts back to the existing law for the Federal-State match.

The current formula in the act is 60 percent Federal-40 percent local, and in some circumstances under the existing law 70 percent Federal-30 percent local. The bill for all of the community action agencies will change this formula to 80 percent Federal-20 percent local.

Now, if the Members will looks at the figures, they will see that the facts clearly show that the formula change just is not necessary, and there is nothing, in my opinion, in the hearing record to justify this change. Of the 865 community action agencies presently receiving funds, 705, or 81 percent, were able to meet the full matching requirements of the current law. One may ask, what happens if a community action agency is unable to meet the match? Well, under the provisions of the existing law the Community Services Administration, the agency which administers the program, may grant waivers to any agency which proves it is unable to meet the matching part requirement.

In 1977, 160 community action agencies received such a waiver. I must stress that the Community Services Administration has total discretion as to how and to whom the waiver may be applied. Because of the tremendous flexibility, there is no overwhelming burden on community action agencies.

If we listen to the arguments presented, we get the impression that no program will survive unless the formula is changed. This is certainly not the case, and bears no relation to the facts. All the Members know human nature—if we ask anybody to operate a program or agency in our districts which is receiving Federal funds, I am sure they would certainly want to receive more money from the Federal Government than they now receive, and would ask for the formula to be changed. In reality, however, I am also sure that they would not be so anxious for this change if they understood that if the matching requirement is changed, although the Federal payment immediately increases slightly, most agencies will lose at least one-half of the support that they presently receive from State and local governments. This means that they will lose buildings, services, supplies, volunteers, called in-kind contributions, as well as money.

Since the Federal funds will not be adequate to replace those items, the community action agencies will have to find the money somewhere in order to purchase them. The net result will be that the loss will actually hinder the ability of the community action agencies to operate, and the poor these agencies serve will receive fewer services.

Possibly the best insight as to why the formula should not be changed comes from our colleague from North Carolina (Mr. ANDREWS), who is chairman of the subcommittee from which this legislation emerged, and manager of the bill today. In speaking to witnesses he described the reason why the formula should not be changed at a hearing in Atlanta last year.

He said:

But the matter of whether to put in 80–20, or 75–25—my point is that the Appropriations Committee probably has no interest * * * I expect what we are going to get for this program is pretty much already destined. I doubt there is much we can do about that. So if we change to 80–20 in this bill, you probably aren't going to get any more Federal money, you are just going to get less total money for the program * * * I believe most all of you are thinking if you get 80–20 you get more money for the program. I think you get less. The Federal share is going to be the same either way. And yet you are going to get less local so you get less total.

A few minutes later, he said:

But I just want you to understand that it is not as simple as some of you think. If you get 90–10, some of you think you automatically have more money. It may be that you have less. Because the Federal share is going to probably be the same, you may not like it, but if it is all you can get, so adding less local money to it means less total money. That's the way I see it.

The gentleman from North Carolina, who is handling the bill for the committee, gives an excellent justification for the Goodling amendment. I think he has analyzed the situation in the hearings extremely well, and in support of his reasoning I hope the Goodling amendment will be adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 7577, a bill to improve the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 and to extend the act for 3 additional years.

Initially I want to compliment the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Economic Opportunity, our colleague IKE ANDREWS. This is a well researched piece of legislation which is designed to strengthen and improve the administration of the Community Services Administration and to insure comprehensive and efficient delivery of social services in our continuing struggle against poverty. Chairman ANDREWS was ably assisted by the majority members of his subcommittee, our colleagues BILL FORD, GUS HAWKINS, and BALTASAR CORRADA, and I want to pay special tribute to them for their untiring efforts.

I would like to commend also the ranking minority member of the committee, the Honorable AL QUIE, and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the Honorable BILL GOODLING, for their contributions to and support for this bill. Legislation of this type has frequently been very controversial through the years. This year, however, H.R. 7577 has bipartisan support and Members on both sides of the aisle of the committee are to be commended.

We have worked together to resolve many difficult issues, and while there may be some disagreements with one or another provision of the bill, I am pleased to say that we have before us legislation which is for the most part widely accepted and strongly supported.

Seven days of hearings were held by our subcommittee on H.R. 7577. This bill reflects in many respects the major recommendations of the administration as well as the views of the many witnesses who appeared before us.

Key provisions of H.R. 7577 include the extension of the Economic Opportunity Act for 3 additional years. However, there are two exceptions.

First, the very successful Follow Through program is provided with a 5-year extension. This productive program, which has been enthusiastically received by schools, parents, children, and educational authorities, has frequently been under attack by those who wish to phase it into other educational programs. However, the Committee on Education and Labor has decided that Follow Through should continue on its own, and it is our desire to provide it with as much continuity and stability as we can. Hence a 5-year extension is proposed.

On the other hand, there is concern with regard to the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity. Because of our committee concerns and because we feel that greater congressional review of the Council is needed. H.R. 7577 extends the life of the Council only until the end of 1979, at which time the Council will be evaluated to determine if a further extension should be provided.

An important provision in H.R. 7577 is the return to the 1967 matching ratio of 80-percent Federal funding and 20-percent non-Federal funding for community action programs. This provision corrects action taken in 1974 which amended the formula by requiring yearly reductions in the Federal contribution beginning in 1975. The reinstatement of the 80/20 formula is in response to overwhelming evidence provided to the committee which has indicated that the 1974 reduction has caused extreme and unnecessary hardship in community action agencies.

A very strong concern of the committee has been to continue existing programs and to provide for reasonable cost-of-living increases, and provisions for Head Start in H.R. 7577 address themselves to these important concerns. There has been considerable controversy regarding the formula for the allocation of Head Start moneys. I will not discuss the history of this. I do want to point out, however, that this bill contains a new formula which is a reasonable and equitable resolution of the controversy. The new formula recognizes the history of the program and, unlike the current formula, provides for a distribution which will not seriously damage the programs of one State in order to benefit another. The new formula first provides that up to 13 percent of the funds appropriated for the program may be reserved by the Secretary for the territories and discretionary uses. Second, each State will be provided with the amount they received in the previous fiscal year plus 6 percent for cost of living, except for those States which receive more than 200 percent of the amount to which such State is entitled under the formula for any fiscal year. Third, the balance of the funds appropriated for Head Start programs would be allocated so that equal proportions are distributed on the basis of AFDC recipients in each State as compared to all States and the other half on the basis of children ages 0 to 5 living with low-income families in the States as compared to all States. Under this formula all areas of the country—not just a few—will share in any future increases in appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 7577 provides for the continuation and improvement of programs which have proven to be an effective and comprehensive weapon in the continuing battle against poverty in our Nation. It is a practical program which works, and which has touched and enriched the lives of many people of all ages who are disadvantaged and in poverty, enabling them in many instances to begin to extricate themselves from the bondages of substandard existences. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

● Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I take this occasion to express my support for the continuation of the Community Services Administration and for the legislation now before us. Unfortunately, a field hearing scheduled some time ago as part of my subcommittee's oversight responsibility for manpower training programs has kept me from attending this session. Because of my concern with this legislation, I have filed this statement.

That concern stems from two major causes. First, as a Representative from my district, I have seen firsthand both the devastating effects of poverty and the improvements in the lot of the poor that the local Community Action Agency can bring about. Perhaps more than most Members, I am aware that a few community action agencies are not as effective as they should be and I am also well aware of the instances of waste in the administration of poverty funds. Even so, the Community Services Administration remains the only designated advocate for the poor and the major source of support for hundreds of effective local agencies whose efforts have resulted in major gains for those whom they serve.

The second reason that this legislation is particularly important to me has been alluded to by the member from North Carolina, Mr. ANDREWS. My subcommittee has conducted a series of hearings on CSA operations, resulting in three committee reports dealing with this Agency over the past 3 years. These reports have pointed out that major reforms were needed in the Community Service Administration.

I summarized my own views at the Economic Opportunity Subcommittee's hearings as follows:

This national network of local agencies represents fusion of community control, including a voice for the poor, and Federal funding and oversight, which together can help break the cycle of poverty. Realization of the full potential of this economic network for service delivery and resource mobilization, depends, however, upon CSA—the Government's sole antipoverty agency—for guidance, oversight and training.

During the past year, the Community Services Administration, under new leadership, has made significant strides toward becoming an effective and efficient antipoverty agency. Many of the recommendations of our reports have been implemented in varying degrees. The long called for management reorganization of CSA is scheduled for completion by the end of next month. Training of agency staff and grantees, as well as review and evaluation of programs, have taken on new meaning at the Agency. Grantees are gaining a new respect for CSA administrators as no-nonsense leaders, and some, who had so openly abused the system, as well as the taxpayer's dollar, have been removed.

The legislation before us recognizes the need for more effective administration. It permits CSA to delegate more responsibilities and duties to its regional offices and thus reduce unnecessary backlogs in the funding process.

I take this occasion to express my appreciation to the gentleman from North Carolina for inviting me to testify at the hearing and for the close cooperation extended by his staff to my own subcommittee. As a member of the Committee on Government Operations and chairwoman of its Manpower and Housing Subcommittee, I am pleased to see that this legislation took careful consideration of our oversight work and I thank the Economic Opportunity Subcommittee for the cooperation we have received from them in our own work.

I support this legislation and the continuation of the Community Services Administration. Though the agency reorganization appears to be in place, it took much longer than our subcommittee or CSA initially anticipated and the improvements that it promises are thus delayed.

Though there is new respect for the agency, morale is still low and productivity still wanting. Though there has been some bandaging to the damaged credibility of this agency, it has not yet attained the status of an effective advocate for the poor. As long as the Inspector General bill remains a bill and not a law, there still remains a question as to whether the corrective effects of audits and inspections within the agency will be maximized.

Finally, violations of the regulations, fraud, and misuse of Government funds, though reduced, still exist within this agency. Consequently, as long as CSA operates below an acceptable standard of efficiency and effectiveness, there remains the need for ongoing congressional oversight and monitoring.

Therefore, though I support this legislation, it is with cautious enthusiasm. The Community Services Administration needs our support and passage of this legislation will provide that needed vote of confidence to spur it on to greater efficiency and effectiveness of operation. It also needs our guidance, our assistance, and our insight, which can only come from continued and ongoing observation and oversight.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.●

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 7577, the Economic Opportunity and Community Services Amendments of 1978. Although great strides have been made in our battle to eradicate poverty, over 25 million Americans today are deprived of the basic ingredients which constitute a meaningful existence: Health, housing, education, and employment. The rapidly accelerating cost of living, coupled with menacing unemployment, have served to classify an ever increasing number of individuals as poor.

This bill is an effort at providing a more efficient and effective delivery of services to local community agencies that can effectuate change. I am particularly supportive of the committee's decision to return to the 80/20 Federal-State ratio; which was based on repeated testimony from witnesses, recommendations from the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity, the fact that 266 waivers were granted in 1976, and evidence that the diminished Federal support was disrupting program services which were curtailed.

H.R. 7577 also extends the Head Start program, which is a proven program aimed at serving the social and development needs of our Nation's preschoolers who come from the disadvantaged backgrounds.

I urge my colleagues to support this piece of legislation, and to renew their commitment to provide a meaningful opportunity for our Nation's underprivileged to extricate themselves from the cycle of poverty.●

● Mr. LEGGETT. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the Economic Opportunity and Community Services Amendments of 1978, H.R. 7577. This bill contributes to alleviating poverty from our society and encourages greater program efficiency by providing additional funding for research and development programs, increasing the Federal contribution to local programs, consolidating reporting requirements, providing more authority to regional and local offices, and eliminating duplication of social service delivery programs. It also extends the very successful Headstart and Follow Through programs and provides a trial extension for the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity.

The war against poverty in 1964 was enthusiastically supported by the enactment of the Economic Opportunity Act. The Office of Economic Opportunity was established to coordinate and administer grants and programs at the local community level. Citizen participation was emphasized as well as involvement by local public officials.

However, in 1969 tackling poverty was not a popular adventure. During the Nixon administration many of the Office of Economic Opportunity programs were fragmented, leaving the responsibility of fighting poverty to the dedicated and committed local community action agencies without adequate Federal support.

The war against poverty began to look brighter in 1975 when Congress established the Community Services Administration (CSA) to administer and coordinate the surviving programs. However, because CSA was hampered by poor management, hostile administration support, and personnel dissatisfaction, poverty continued to increase and today affects 25 million Americans. Certainly, the stagflation the Nation has suffered in recent years has most adversely affected those Americans at the lower rungs of the economic ladder.

To advance the elimination of poverty and the detrimental and stifling effects it has on our economy, I urge my colleagues to support the Economic Opportunity and Community Services amendments as reported by the Committee on Education and Labor without crippling amendments.

This bill reauthorizes and makes numerous changes in Community Services Administration's program. In the past there has been no specific authorization for the appropriation of funds for research and development programs. This bill specifies that Federal funds be used to improve coordination with and prevent duplication of antipoverty research and development programs run by other Federal agencies.

Also, the committee bill would increase the amount of Federal financial assistance to the programs administered by the Community Services Administration from the present ratio of 60-percent Federal–40-percent local to the 1967 ratio of 80-percent Federal–20 percent local. I understand that my colleague, Congressman QUIE, would like to maintain the existing 60–40 ratio. I feel this would be detrimental as several constituent groups in my congressional district deeply involved in antipoverty programs have informed me that presently it is very difficult and sometimes impossible to raise the necessary funds to continue operating viable programs. Also I have received reports that the existing ratio requires devotion of an excessive amount of staff and organizational time to soliciting local funds and inkind contributions causing them to divert attention from the development and management of programs and the ultimate delivery of services to the poor. For these reasons, I urge my colleagues to support increased Federal financial assistance.

The bill would eliminate duplication of social service delivery programs such as in existing present health programs which duplicate HEW-administered activities.

In addition, it extends the Head Start program which has demonstrated remarkable success by producing positive gains in intelligence and achievement, improvement in health and nutritional practices of participating children, and significant enthusiastic parental involvement in the education and social development of their children.

The new Head Start formula provided in the committee bill would base the amount of funds a State receives on the number of families eligible for aid to families with dependent children and the number of children under age 5 who live with families below the poverty line. No State would receive less than it had received in the previous year, unless it received more than 200 percent of the amount it is eligible for under the new formula. In that case, it would receive the same level of funding it received in the previous year, plus a 6-percent cost-of-living increase.

The bill also extends the Follow Through program for 5 years, with authorization levels of $70 million for fiscal year 1979, $80 million for fiscal year 1980, $90 million for fiscal year 1981, $100 million for fiscal year 1982, and $110 million for fiscal year 1983. Eligibility would be expanded to include children in kindergarten and primary grades, including children enrolled in private nonprofit elementary schools, who were previously enrolled in Head Start programs.

Finally the bill provides a limited continuation of the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity. This action is warranted for two major reasons. The first is that there is little justification for the Council's existing operational budget of approximately $301,000. Second, the Council's purpose, value, and function does not support the necessity of the existing five full-time staff personnel at a cost of approximately $115,000 and the services of a professional consultant at a yearly compensation of approximately $5,700. Due to this unsatisfactory performance in the past, this bill provides the Council maximum annual budget of $100,000 to adequately fulfill its responsibilities and provides a trial extension of the Council.

In the past, programs which evolved from the Economic Opportunity Act have had some success in the effort to alleviate poverty. However, poverty continues to be a persistent condition in the United States and recently has been increasing. In fact, the period 1974–75 represented the largest single year increase of poor Americans since 1959, when poverty data was first compiled.

The perpetuation of poverty in the United States can be attributed to factors such as the economic recession of the last several years, as well as several societal elements. These elements include substandard housing, limited educational and vocational training opportunities, the displacement of revenue-generating enterprises from the central cities to the suburbs, and the remaining barriers of racism.

The effects of poverty are widespread, producing human frustration and despair. These effects are obvious in our society with the increasing dependency on drugs and alcohol, the decline of the family structure, and an alarming proliferation of adult crime and juvenile delinquency. The effects of poverty are evident in the home, the school, and the street.

As my colleagues know, the Comprehensive Education and Training Act (CETA), the other manpower training programs under the auspices of the Department of Labor, low-income housing programs administered by HUD, and a variety of social service programs sponsored by HEW are targeted to help that portion of our country's population suffering from the adverse effects of poverty. While it is widely accepted that the Federal Government must continue to play a vital role in supplying the resources needed to combat the continuing problems of poverty, the ultimate effort to reduce poverty must remain at the local level through viable community action, economic development, and innovative educational programs for the children and parents of low-income areas. The problems associated with poverty have not been, or will they in the future be easily cured. However, encouragement of innovation at the local level is an imperative step forward.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill to combat the unacceptable poverty that exists today in a country as wealthy as the United States. Passage of this bill will provide important focus for the Economic Opportunity Act and permit its full potential to be realized.●

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BRADEMAS) having assumed the chair, Mr. OBERSTAR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 7577) to amend the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just under consideration, H.R. 7577.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OBERSTAR). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE EDUCATION AMENDMENTS OF 1978

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 10569) to amend the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Act to extend the authorizations and appropriations for carrying out the provisions of such Act, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this Act may be cited as the "Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Amendments of 1978".

SEC. 2. Section 2(b) of the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1001 (b)) is amended—

(1) by inserting after "encourage" the following: "the prevention of alcohol and drug abuse; to stimulate";

(2) by striking out "curricula on" and inserting in lieu thereof "approaches to";

(3) by striking out "problems of" the first time it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "prevention of alcohol and";

(4) by striking out "curricula" the second time it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "approaches";

(5) by striking out "curricular materials" and inserting in lieu thereof "successful approaches"; and

(6) by striking out "on drug abuse problems", and inserting in lieu thereof "on alcohol and drug abuse problems".

SEC. 3. (a)(1) Section 3(a) of the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1002(a)) is amended—

(A) by inserting after "carry out" a comma and the following: "throughout the Nation in rural areas as well as urban areas,";

(B) by striking out "projects" the first time it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "programs, including programs of proven effectiveness";

(C) by striking out "projects throughout the Nation" and inserting in lieu thereof "programs to develop local capability to meet problems of alcohol and drug abuse"; and

(D) by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Commissioner shall seek equitable distribution of available resources among the various regions of the country and seek to ensure that the special needs of rural areas are appropriately addressed.".

(2) Section 3(b)(5) of such Act is amended by inserting "prevention" after "abuse".

(b) Section 3(d)(1) of the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1002 (d)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (C);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (D) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new clauses:

"(E) provides assurance that the applicant will coordinate its efforts with the appropriate State and local alcohol and drug abuse agencies, and educational agencies and organizations; and

"(F) provides a proposed performance standard to measure, or research procedure to determine, the effectiveness of the program or project for which assistance is sought.".

(c) Section (3)(e)(2) of such Act is amended by striking out "Labor and Public Welfare" and inserting in lieu thereof "Human Resources".

SEC. 4. (a) Section 3 of the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Act (21 U.S.C. 1002) is amended by redesignating subsections (d) through (f) as subsections (g) through (i), respectively, and by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsections:

"(d) In addition to the purposes described in subsections (b) and (c), from funds in an amount not to exceed 10 per centum of the sums appropriated to carry out this Act, the Commissioner is authorized to make grants to State educational agencies, local educational agencies, institutions of postsecondary education, and other nonprofit agencies and organizations to support projects, including projects of proven effectiveness, to demonstrate the most effective methods and techniques in alcohol and drug abuse prevention, and to develop exemplary alcohol and drug abuse prevention programs. To maximum extent practicable, funds expended under this subsection shall be used for grants and programs reflecting various services to individuals proportionate to relative numbers of individuals served within and outside of standard metropolitan statistical areas.

"(e)(1) In order to carry out the provisions of this Act, there is established in the Office of Education an Office of Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'Office'). The Office shall be headed by a Director.

"(2) The Director shall report directly to the Commissioner.

"(3) The Office of Education shall provide the Office of Drug Abuse Education with sufficient staff and resources to carry out its responsibilities under this Act.

"(4) In carrying out the provisions of this Act, the Director of such Office shall consult with the Directors of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism and the National Institute on Drug Abuse, and shall coordinate the activities of such Office with the activities of such Institutes to the extent feasible.

"(f) The Secretary shall assure cooperation and coordination between the Office of Education (acting through the Office of Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education) and the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration (acting through the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism and the National Institute on Drug Abuse) to identify and implement successful prevention programs and strategies, to identify research and development priorities, and to disseminate the results of such activities. The Secretary shall further assure that all such prevention programs and strategies which are school-based (assisted or conducted by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare) shall, to the extent feasible, be coordinated through the Office of Education (acting through the Office of Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education).".

(b) Section 3(h)(1) of such Act (as redesignated by subsection (a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "may" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall"; and

(2) by striking out "not exceeding 1 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof "of 3 per centum".

(c)(1) The first sentence of section 3(i) (as redesignated by subsection (a)) is amended by striking out "and", and by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: ", $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1979; $14,000,000 for the fiscal year 1980; and $18,000,000 for the fiscal year 1981".

(2) Subsection 3(i) of such Act (as redesignated by subsection (a)) is amended by inserting "(1)" after the subsection designation and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2) To the maximum extent practicable, of the amount appropriated in any fiscal year under this subsection, sums shall be allotted for alcohol and drug abuse education projects reflecting various services to individuals proportionate to relative numbers of individuals served within and outside of standard metropolitan statistical areas.

"(3) Funds appropriated under this subsection shall remain available for obligation through fiscal year 1981 in order to permit multiple year funding of projects under this Act.".

SEC. 5. Section 8(c) of the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1007(c)) is amended by inserting "the Northern Mariana Islands," immediately after "the Virgin Islands,".

SEC. 6. (a) Section 420(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 is amended by adding after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) With respect to any academic year beginning on or after July 1, 1978, and ending on or before September 30, 1980, each institution which has qualified for payment under this section for the preceding year shall be entitled during such period, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1)(A), to a payment under this section if—

"(A) the number of persons referred to in paragraph (1) equals at least the number which bears the same ratio to the number of such recipients who were in attendance at such institution during the first academic year in which the institution was entitled to payments under this section as the number of such recipients in all institutions of higher education during the academic year for which the determination is made bears to the number of such recipients in all institutions of higher education for the first such academic year; or

"(B) in the event that clause (A) of this paragraph is not satisfied, the Commissioner determines, on the basis of evidence presented by such institution, that such institution is making reasonable efforts, taking into consideration the extent to which the number of persons referred to in such paragraph (1) falls short of meeting the ratio criterion set forth in such clause (A), to continue to recruit, enroll, and provide necessary services to veterans.".

(b) Clause (1) of section 310(b) of the GI Bill Improvement Act of 1977 (91 Stat. 1446) is amended by inserting at the end of subsection (a) of the new section 246, which was conditionally added to title 38, United States Code, by such clause, a new paragraph as follows:

"(3) With respect to any academic year beginning on or after July 1, 1978, and ending on or before September 30, 1980, each institution which has qualified for payment under this section for the preceding year shall be entitled during such period, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1)(A), to a payment under this section if—

"(A) the number of persons referred to in paragraph (1) equals at least the number which bears the same ratio to the number of such recipients who were in attendance at such institution during the first academic year in which the institution was entitled to payments under this section as the number of such recipients in all institutions of higher learning during the same academic year for which the determination is made bears to the number of such recipients in all institutions of higher learning for the first such academic year; or

"(B) in the event that clause (A) of this paragraph is not satisfied, the Administrator determines, on the basis of evidence presented by such institution, that such institution is making reasonable efforts, taking into consideration the extent to which the number of persons referred to in such paragraph (1) falls short of meeting the ratio criterion set forth in such clause (A), to continue to recruit, enroll, and provide necessary services to veterans.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to payments to which institutions are entitled as of June 30, 1978.

Mr. BRADEMAS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the Senate amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

There was no objection

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the first request of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS)?

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS) for an explanation of the Senate amendment.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the two measures passed by the House and Senate which extend the authorizations for the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Act are, in many ways, similar.

AUTHORIZATIONS

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment to the House bill would extend for only 3 years—2 years less than the House bill—the authorizations for the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Act under the direction of an Office of Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education which would have responsibility for coordinating all Federal efforts in school-based alcohol and drug abuse education programs.

The authorizations of appropriations would be as follows: $10 million for fiscal year 1979—$4 million more than the House-passed bill, $14 million for fiscal year 1980—$1.6 million above the House-passed bill, and $18 million for fiscal year 1981—an additional $3.6 million over the authorization for that year in the bill as passed by the House. Mr. Speaker, although the Senate version provides authorizations above those in the House-passed bill for these 3 years, that is fiscal years 1979–81, I should point out that both the House and Senate versions authorize levels for these years that are more modest than those currently authorized.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, the authorization for the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Act in fiscal year 1978 is $34 million but only $2 million was appropriated. The authorization levels contained in the House and Senate bills simply reflect a more realistic expectation of the levels of appropriation. These lower authorizations in no way reflect a judgment that the need is any less great. Indeed, it is my hope that the administration will join Congress in our concern for more education on the dangers of the abuse of drugs and alcohol and request additional funds in this area.

PROGRAM EMPHASIS

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment recognizes the need to address abuse problems in rural areas, and mandates, to the extent possible, proportional funding for rural areas.

PROGRAM COORDINATION

Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment also requires applicants for assistance under the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education Act to coordinate their efforts with State and local alcohol and drug abuse agencies and educational agencies and to include an evaluation measure by which to determine the effectiveness of a program.

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

The Senate amendment also authorizes a maximum of 10 percent of the appropriations under the act for model projects to develop exemplary programs in alcohol and drug abuse prevention.

In addition, the Senate amendment also increases to 3 percent of appropriations the amount of funds for evaluation by the Federal Government of the effectiveness of the national alcohol and drug abuse education effort.

VETERANS COST-OF-INSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment includes an extraneous amendment to provide a hold harmless mechanism for the veterans cost-of-instruction program (VCIP). The VCIP provides payments to eligible colleges and universities to support educational and personal services to veterans attending those institutions.

Because of a reduction in the number of undergraduate veterans receiving educational benefits, many institutions participating in the VCIP are now unable to maintain the enrollments required by law.

In response to this problem, the Committee on Education and Labor adopted an amendment to H.R. 11274, the Middle Income Student Assistance Act, which would hold harmless any institution which the Commissioner of Education determines is making a "good faith" effort to enroll veterans in its programs. This was a stopgap measure until the committee would review the program in depth next year during the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act. The Senate, due to an oversight, failed to include a VCIP hold harmless amendment in the College Opportunity Act, a companion bill to H.R. 11274.

Discovering this oversight and realizing that immediate action was necessary to prevent a disruption of the VCIP, the amendment was attached in the Senate to the alcohol and drug abuse education amendments. The amendment is thus not related to the alcohol and drug abuse education amendments.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my appreciation to the distinguished chairman of our committee, Mr. PERKINS, for his support of our efforts with this measure.

I would also like to thank the distinguished ranking minority member of the Education and Labor Committee, Mr. QUIE, for his contribution to the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, both majority and minority members of the Subcommittee on Select Education, which I have the honor to chair, have worked hard on this legislation. I would like particularly to thank Mr. BIAGGI and Mr. JEFFORDS for their efforts.

I would be remiss if I did not also compliment the work done on this legislation by the distinguished junior Senator from Maine, Mr. HATHAWAY.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Members of the House to give their support to the alcohol and drug abuse education amendments as amended by the Senate. This bill would continue and strengthen an effective program of alcohol and drug abuse prevention.

Mr. BAUMAN. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Indiana for his detailed explanation of the Senate amendments. I wonder if the gentleman could tell me, does not this change also create a new Office of Drug Education in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare?

Mr. BRADEMAS. If the gentleman will yield further, yes, it does.

Mr. BAUMAN. I am just wondering whether the members of the White House staff could avail themselves, at some point of that educational expertise on the subject of drug abuse, if the President saw fit to direct them to do so.

Mr. BRADEMAS. I would hope, I may say to my friend, the gentleman from Maryland, that the programs made possible by this act would be available to all Americans.

Mr. BAUMAN. I think the gentleman has, then, by his definition included the White House staff in the coverage of this bill, and perhaps they will avail themselves of this service which they seem to need badly.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAUMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would just like to point out that the placing upon this bill of the amendment with respect to veterans and assistance to college veterans' programs makes it essential that this bill be brought up at this time. If this does not occur, serious disruption will occur in many of our schools as I will explain below. That is the reason for the urgency of this bill here today and the reason for not requesting a conference to deal with such things as attaching the drug abuse program to the Office of Education.

As further explanation of the veteran's problem I will add this:

An amendment was adopted by the Senate on May 23, 1978 which provides a hold harmless mechanism for the Veterans Cost-of-Instruction Program (VCIP). The VCIP provides payments to eligible institutions to support educational and personal services to veterans attending these institutions. Between 1966 and 1976, there was a continuing increase in the number of veterans receiving educational benefits in successive enrollment periods, thus the institutions could meet the maintenance-of-effort requirement established in the 1972 amendments.

With the arrival of the 10-year delimiting date on May 31, 1976, the number of veterans eligible for benefits began to decrease. This reduction in the number of undergraduate veterans receiving educational benefits now makes it impossible for many institutions participating in the VCIP to maintain the veteran enrollments required by law.

In response to this problem, the Committee on Education and Labor adopted an amendment to H.R. 11274, the Middle Income Student Assistance Act, which would hold harmless any institution which the Commissioner of Education determines is making a "good faith" effort to enroll veterans in its programs. This was a stop-gap measure until the committee could review the program in depth next year during the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act. The Senate, due to an oversight, failed to include a VCIP hold harmless amendment in the College Opportunity Act, a companion bill to H.R. 11274.

Discovering this oversight and realizing that the student aid bill would not become law in time to prevent a major disruption of the program, Senator CRANSTON offered the amendment to a noncontroversial bill that could be quickly enacted into law. The bill of course was S. 2539.

Immediate action on the bill is necessary because the cutoff date to qualify for this forward-funded program is June 30, 1978. The Office of Education received applications not later than June 19 which listed the number of veterans at the applying institution. Next week O.E. will determine which institutions are eligible based on these data. If Congress does not act in the next week to soften the impact of the maintenance-of-effort provision in the current law, according to a June 16 opinion by HEW legal counsel, O.E. could only distribute funds to those institutions meeting the more restrictive requirements.

Although the amount of money to be distributed would remain the same under the current law, approximately 53 percent of the currently participating institutions would not be eligible to receive these funds. The result would be to give the maximum $135,000 grant to many small colleges who should not receive that much money. Prior to the Senate consideration of S. 2539, HEW was asked what they would do with the VCIP money should the law not be amended. The bill passed before the Senate got a reply—in fact they still do not have a reply. Margaret Dunkle could not give me any more specific information either. She did say that the administration would not oppose the amendment, but stopped short of saying they would actively endorse the amendment.

The Senate amendment differs from the House amendment to H.R. 11274 in that it provides two methods for an institution to remain eligible for VCIP funds. They are:

First, if the institution has a ratio of decline in veteran enrollment equal to no less than the national decline in veteran enrollment from the period of time since it first became eligible to the present; or

Second, if the Commissioner of Education determines that the institution is making "reasonable efforts" to recruit, enroll, and provide necessary services to veterans. (Similar to House amendment.)

The effect of this additional method for determining eligibility would be to simplify OE's job; they could automatically certify many colleges, although I do not know how many, without using the more subjective alternate method.

Thus it is important, in fact necessary, that we thus accept the Senate bill today.

Mr. BAUMAN. I would say to the gentleman I have no doubt that this is the most propitious time to bring up legislation of this character, and I am sure the President will sign it into law expeditiously.

Mr. JEFFORDS. If the gentleman would yield further, also I would like to point out that this is one program where the administration came in and stated vigorously that this was a great program; it ought to be expanded; it was one of the finest programs that we had going; and then asked to reduce the funding—which was the kind of contradictory testimony we are getting used to today.

Mr. BAUMAN. I can assume we can say that is a new high in legislative activity.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

DOES SOMALIA HAVE A FUTURE IN THE WESTERN WORLD?

(Mr. SIKES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

● Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, a question which undoubtedly is troubling the Somalis is whether they have a future in the Western World. They have sought to be a part of the Western World. They have repudiated their ties with Russia, even ordered the Russians out of their major naval base at Barbera and broke diplomatic relations with that country. Russia had expended considerable funds on Somali armed forces. The Somalis gave up that source of support. They did these things on the assumption that the United States and other Western-oriented nations would provide them with essential assistance, particularly weapons for protection against Ethiopia. Ethiopia holds a part of the historic Somali territory, the Ogaden, on which the Somalis have never relinquished their claim. Ethiopia is 10 times as large in population as Somalia. Naturally, the Somalis are uneasy about the intention of their neighbor, particularly after recent incidents in which Cuban forces, Russian leadership and unlimited weapons defeated the Somalis in the Ogaden.

The United States promise to help Somalia has not been kept. The Somalis lived up to their part of the bargain. They got rid of the Russians. We have not lived up to our commitment. There still exists a promise of $15 million in defense weapons to help update the Somali forces and to replace losses incurred in the Ogaden war. The media report that the United States is now considering reneging on even that minor show of assistance. Apparently Ethiopia is threatening the United States. They say they will break diplomatic relations with us if we help the Somalis. So what? Ethiopa's course will be exactly what Russian and Cuba dictate. They will not be friendly to the United States while there is an overwhelming Russian and Cuban presence in that country, whether or not there are diplomatic relations.

Why we should be concerned at maintaining diplomatic relations at the cost of Somalia's friendship and the risk of losing the very important tip of the Horn of Africa is incomprehensible.

If ever there were a time the United States should show plain, simple guts in dealing with other countries, this is one of them. First, we have not kept our word. Next, we appear timid to the extent that we are willing to risk the loss of one of the most strategic countries in the world to accommodate a country which is formally in enemy hands.

The Russians would welcome an opportunity to return to Somalia and Barbera. Undoubtedly, they will be available at any time the Somalis despair of assistance from us. It must be presumed that only pressure by the Saudis is preventing progress toward a resolution with Russia from Somali at this time. The Saudis are very unhappy with U.S. dawdling, but they are urging the Somalis to continue to bear with us.

Sometimes I wonder whether the courage in dealing with foreign countries is becoming a lost art in the U.S. Department and the administration.●

REMARKS MADE BY U.N. AMBASSADOR YOUNG CLARIFIED

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, Andrew Young is my personal friend and I know him to be an honest, decent, deeply sensitive man who espouses strong beliefs and has the courage of those convictions. Most foreign affairs observers agree that he has made a profound contribution in service to his country as U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations. This is especially true on the continent of Africa.

Like most other Americans I was confused when my friend reportedly said that there were hundreds of political prisoners in the U.S. jails.

I was so concerned by this report that I picked up the telephone and called Andy. During the discussion he advised that the report was from a lengthy interview which he gave to a leftwing French newspaper; and, that his use of "political prisoners" may have been a poor choice of words, but that his reference originated from a personal experience when he was jailed as a civil rights worker only a few years ago.

I asked for and have received a full transcript of the interview with Le Matin, a Paris-based newspaper. After reading the full text of his interview during which he discussed a variety of contemporary issues, any one of which is subject to debate, it is now clear to me what my friend intended when he used the words that caused such a row.

I enclose the full text of that interview between Ambassador Young and Nina Sutton of Le Matin following these remarks and commend it to my colleagues in the Congress:

Following is transcript of Ambassador Young's interview July 10 with Nina Sutton of Le Matin:

S: How do you feel about the situation now about 18 months after you came into (office)?

Y: Well, I think that when I look at the fact the last nine permanent representatives all together didn't last for ten years, I think that 18 months in this job means that at least now I am beginning to know what it is and I look forward to another 18 months or more. I think that multilateral diplomacy is so complicated it not only depends on countries and events, it depends on knowing the United Nations system and it depends really on knowing the people within the system that make it work. I think in these 18 months, we have gotten to know the people, and I'm beginning to understand the system and how it works.

S: Optimistic, OK. One of your more striking features (as seen from here?) is that you want to be (???) more of the international projects. Now do you feel the situation today is more open, I mean the world situation, I don't mean just the U.N., I mean more especially the East-West relationship and the African situation?

Well, let me say that I wanted my country's foreign policy to reflect the morality and idealism that we think the American people stand for. I think President Carter campaigned on that: A foreign policy as honest and as decent as the American people. And so far, we have worked to make our foreign policy reflective of the wishes and ideals of the American public. I don't know that you ever get foreign policy in general totally subject to morals. The best I think you can hope for is a kind of enlightened self-interest. And maybe that's what we have too. On our Africa policy, on the Panama Canal, and our policies in the Middle East and in Vietnam, these are places in the past where we were under some cloud, not any more wrong than anyone else with their problems in the world, but the nations of the world expect more of America. The Russians can do almost anything, nobody criticizes and yet everybody wants America to be the moral leader of the world. The French can get away with almost anything but I think the world tends to hold us by a higher standard and we don't quite live up to it all the time, but it is the intention of this administration to try.

S: Would you resign if the U.S. Government got involved in something you considered immoral?

Y: I think I would. Well, let me say that I don't know that I'd resign. I think I'd raise so much hell about it, I'd be fired because I don't think I would just jump up and quit quietly.

S: You'd make a fuss about it?

Y: I'd make so much fuss about it that they would ask for my resignation.

S: That hasn't happened so far?

Y: No, it hasn't. But there have been some things that I made a fuss about. One of the things I have learned in the last few months is that it is sometimes necessary to make a public fuss just to get the people of a nation talking about an idea. Other times, it is much better to make a private fuss within the State Department and within the National Security Council.

S: This is new isn't it?

Y: Well, I always did that. But that never gets any publicity. But I frankly have had such a good working relationship with the Secretary of State and with the President and even with the National Security Council Adviser, that almost every time I have gone to them to sit down and say look there is something we need to talk over, we've worked it out.

S: Why did you say "even" with Mr. Brzezinski?

Y: Because everybody puts us in opposite camps, and yet we have a very good friendship. We don't always agree on everything, but we disagree as friends. I think it would be dangerous to have a foreign policy team that everybody was in agreement all the time. I also think that sometimes just for the sake of talking out all the problems, it's necessary to have disagreements, and those disagreements have always been friendly disagreements, but when they come out in the press, they are not.

Y: I think of all relationships that way. I've been married 24 years, but if you'd listen to me and my wife as we argue about something, you'd think that we were very unhappy, because she is a very strong-minded, independent woman, and I am a strong, independent man. The only way we could live together is talking out our differences frankly.

S: It's OK for a married couple to do that, but it's not OK for the U.S. Government.

Y: The U.S. Government has been in most trouble when it has not had a public discussion of ideas, when there was not enough discussion about the Bay of Pigs, or not enough discussion of the Gulf of Tonkin. And I am just determined that rather than have another mistake like that, where you realized it is wrong after 50,000 American men have died and $150 billion have been spent that I'll make a fuss in advance and let the chips fall where they may.

S: OK, let's take one instance of this. Who went to Senator Clifford and said the President would like to resume his aid, or would like the CIA to resume aid to the MPLA?

Y: Senator Clark. Dick Clark. I was in a meeting where everybody agreed that this was not good and where the people who were least enthusiastic and most critical of the idea were the representatives of the CIA. But, at the same time, there were twenty or thirty minor amendments that had been tacked on by Congress that limit the President in his conduct in some aspects of foreign policy. There was a study under review of these aspects including the Clark amendment even before Shaba. I really think that we had two things happening in sequence that were not necessarily related to each other.

S: That can explain what the President said to the Congressional Leaders at the White House, but it doesn't account for what Admiral Turner discussed with Senator Clark.

Y: Admiral Turner and David Aaron, I don't know what they discussed. As I understand it, they went to get a clarification of what Senator Clark thought were the limits of the amendment, what he thought was the continued effect and importance of the amendment. He could not have simply said: Well, I'm willing to drop the amendment. He could not have changed the amendment by himself; it had to be changed by a vote of the Congress. The other thing is Dick Clark is very much a member of the President's team. If you ask which Senators have the best voting record in relationship to the Administration, Senator Kennedy and Senator Clark would be right up at the top of the list.

S: Why did he go and talk to the press and say. . . .

Y: Because in the meantime it leaked out. At the same time, as I tried to track it down, the President, in talking about assistance to Angola, Mozambique, and others, I think that Angola and Mozambique generally want to be non-aligned. There generally are food shortages in Mozambique as a result of the flood. In Angola, because of their inability to get the agriculture sector reestablished and we have never been picayune about food supplies. Almost throughout the entire struggle with Ethiopia and Somalia, we supplied supplies under Public Law 480 to the Ethiopians and Somalians. We don't make food that political, but with some of the criteria, it was difficult to give food even to some of those places, and I think it was in that context in discussing possible ramifications of any kind of assistance to places in Africa that the phrase became public "The President feels his hands are tied". Now that did not come from the President, it came from Congressman John Rhodes, the Minority Leader. He came out of the meeting and said to the press, the President feels his hands are tied, and then a series of press reports emerged. Right in the middle of this, Kolwezi broke, and there was an emotional intensity which we had not had in our foreign policy for a long time. So, how we got that all straightened out was a matter of straightening out in the press. I was in the policy meetings around that period, and there was never any discussion of resuming covert aid to the opponents of MPLA.

S: Nobody asked for it?

Y: No.

S: Not even Brzezinski?

Y: Not even Brzezinski. And during that same period, during the Special Session On Disarmament, we were talking directly with Angola about settling Namibia. And I was instructed by the Secretary of State and the President to meet with the Angolan Prime Minister who was visiting. It was a period where news coverage were speculating as to what we could do and what we should do.

S: You mean it eame more from the press?

Y: I think so, there was also an immediate assumption which we made that the Cubans were to blame. The President said that he thought the Cubans had to share responsibility for the invasion of Shaba. And I agreed with that because they had been involved in that region, they have assumed obligation of military advisers to the govt. of Angola and as such must share some responsibility.

S: Did Castro call Mr. Lane?

Y: But I am saying that before that Castro could have gone to some of the people that were involved in the raid and said "Don't do it" and he didn't do that. One of the reasons is that while I'm not sure the Cubans actually planned and conducted this raid; I think probably the East Germans did.

S: You think so?

Y: Yes, always have.

S: On what sort of information do you say that?

Y: More and more the East German role in Africa while smaller, you don't have any large numbers of East German troops, you do have quite a few East German technical advisers. East Germans are training and equipping people in situations like that. The Germans had a reason. East Germans were worried about missile development project that was going on in Shaba. There is a private West German corporation that leased almost half the land in Shaba to develop low cost and the East Germans are very disturbed about West Germans' capability to have a low cost missile system. And it seems to me they had a vested interest in upsetting things in Shaba in a way that I'm not sure anybody else had.

S: And you mean the Cubans kept quiet because of the East Germans?

Y: Yes.

S: Even though they were not interested in . . .

Y: Yes, they could not betray the East Germans but they tried to make clear to us that they were not the ones.

S: The strongest part of what you say is we don't have to compete with the Russians, we're better, have more to offer so let's not worry about what they do. What if you're right? Aren't you afraid that could lead to a very dramatic confrontation?

Y: No, I think we have been able to successfully avoid the confrontation because our restraint and our reasonable approaches to things have prevailed everywhere so far.

S: But precisely, isn't that dangerous?

Wars have always started by people who are with their back at the wall.

Y: But their backs are not at the wall, except insofar as their own failures. For instance, they were in Somalia and they couldn't handle Siad Barre so they moved out of Somalia and into Ethiopia. Two years ago, they were in Sudan and because of tensions between Sudan and Libya, which they didn't understand, they got thrown out of Sudan.

S: Well exactly.

Y: But it is kind of hard for them to blame that on anybody but themselves.

S: Within the eastern camp, East Germans are doing them in commercial markets. With their traditional allies, they are losing ground. That's obvious with Algeria for instance, since Kissinger signed those contracts, Algeria asked to be paid in dollars by the Russians. In Asia, they had to do what happened recently to make sure their influences remain in control.

Y: I think what they are learning is that they cannot control. And they have also learned that they can compete fairly. I think right now the largest trading partner with Russia in North Africa may be Morocco.

S: Really?

Y: Yes, and it's strictly on the basis of mutual needs. Morocco has large phosphate deposits, the Russians need for fertilizer and it's not as though we are limiting them in any way. What I hope we are doing is limiting the results of their military encounters any time the Russians want to participate in peaceful trade and development assistance. I don't think we have any problem with that. We would encourage that, in fact.

S: But the U.S. has more to offer.

Y: Not necessarily. The truth of it is in terms of natural resources yet to be developed, Russia has a tremendous amount. I think Russia's problems that we don't have are weather, and I think they haven't learned to master their bureaucracy as yet. And I am no authority on Russia, but I think for all the things that are wrong with the free enterprise system, one of the things that is right about it is it provides for rapid changes in producing things more efficiently.

Our system maximizes efficiency and their system, I guess, gets encumbered with bureaucracy.

S: OK, what you are telling me is the Russians will be OK once they understand our way of doing things and they can catch up with us peacefully, but that in other words, they have to destroy their own society in order to be competitive.

Y: No, they don't have to destroy it because I think that there is a kind of bureaucracy in the Japanese too and the Germans have been very rigid and bureaucratic in the past. They've got to find a healthier mixture just like I think we've got to find a healthier mixture to provide more government response to the problems of unemployment and inflation and more particularly, I think there has got to be more government involvement in our economy as we become more and more export-oriented.

Y: Our free market system was perfectly adapted for the continental United States. But as we start having to compete with the Japanese and the Germans and everybody else, we are going to have to do a little more for our businesses to help them function abroad. We're going to have to do a little more for American citizens working abroad. I resist this competition between systems. The United States as it was prior to Franklin Roosevelt just doesn't exist any more. The trade union movement in the 1930s and 1940s made a radical revolution in American lifestyle. And without the trade union revolution, we wouldn't be able to produce approximately nine million cars. In the 1950s and 1962s, we had a civil rights revolution and that has produced another whole qualitative difference in the American life and politics. In the 1970s, you had women becoming much more aggressive and involved in our economy. We have not yet been able to see the changes that that is going to produce. So, our system is constantly evolving just as their system is constantly evolving. I think the present Soviet dissidents may turn out to be the salvation of Russia.

S: But listen, they are all going on trial, they are being dismantled.

Y: It was just ten years ago that I was on trial. I was on trial in Atlanta, Georgia, for organizing garbage workers and ended up spending fortunately not long in jail. And three years after that, I was the Congressman from the district. Now, in Russia things don't move that fast. In Russia, the dissidents are an intellectual and cultural elite who just happen to be Jewish.

S: What about the trade unions?

Y: They haven't emerged yet as far as the dissident movement. Down South in the 1950s, they used to try to say that we were Communists and that everything the civil rights movement did was communist inspiration. And the Russians are saying it's the influence of the Capitalists and the CIA. That's ridiculous. It's a natural progression in development of Russian society that they don't have sense enough to understand.

S: So, in other words, the present Russian policy is one being pushed against the wall and possibly leading to some very, very big conflict.

Y: I don't think so. Our relations are too good.

S: On what level?

Y: On almost every level except publicly. Vance and Gromyko meet every month.

S: Yes, but what about? Decide to judge Scharansky the day before they meet?

Y: Yes, but judging Scharansky is one thing that is probably an act of defiance and independence on their part but they will continue to negotiate arms limitations and there's no telling what's liable to happen. We still have hundreds of people that I would categorize as political prisoners in our prisons. Maybe even thousands, depending on how you categorize them. During the war in Vietnam, whenever there was domestic pressure, most of these young people who went to jail for conscience were political prisoners. Where they had good legal assistance most of the time they got free. Our political system, especially our court system, does have a great deal more flexibility in it, but you still have to fight for it.

S: OK, but let's say that the American system is much better equipped to deal with changes and to integrate changes. So far, no Marxist regime has proved that it could do that.

Y: Well, I'm not sure. To do that, you have to keep alive the strain of humanism in the revolution and I would say that the Cubans tried to do that.

S: But you would disassociate Cuba from Russia?

Y: Yes, I think even in Poland they try to do that and Romania too. Now and then those things begin to work.

S: But don't you think that's dangerous? When President Carter goes to Warsaw, speaking on human rights and underlines the possibility of Poland leaning more to the West.

Y: I think you shouldn't call it more to the West. I think Poland is going to become more free. But it will probably still remain within the orbit of Soviet influence, but people will be happier.

S: But you think Moscow is going to see its own satellites take their independence?

Y: It depends, I think. It really does.

S: You are not afraid of a World War III?

Y: No.

S: Why did it take so long to make an official gesture toward the Angolan government?

Y: In February of 1977, I met with Neto.

S: But in the US.

Y: Well, I was in the US. I was in Nigeria and I was officially a representative of the US Government. Don McHenry has met with Neto on two occasions prior to this publicly announced one. This is the first time it has been publicly announced. Our Ambassador to Nigeria has been to Angola (Garble) and I think it has taken a long time to get to the point where we thought we could do something, has been as much their problem as it has been ours. I think they would have welcomed normalization of relations but they didn't want to talk about any kind of political settlement of their differences with Savimbi.

And what we have talked about essentially is something we have in common—a need that we have in common—and that is the independence of Namibia. Independence of Namibia would help us in our relationship with South Africa and in our relationships with liberation movements generally. It would help Angola in relationship to its future. And so, by talking about the things that are our common interests, maybe we can evolve toward other things.

S: Is a normal diplomatic relationship feasible in the near future?

Y: I don't know what you call the near future, but I would say that it is certainly something that has to be considered. If you don't have stability in Angola, you don't have stability in Zaire. It doesn't matter whether we want it that way or not. It's just going to be that way.

Y: Tribal groups overlap so much that either those countries will work together to solve their internal problems or their internal problems will spill over into the other country and we have more to lose as a result of that than we do as a result of some working relationship with them.

Y: I would say that Mobutu was just on the verge of beginning to put together some kind of reforms, economic meetings which were scheduled for the 13th of June. They had been scheduled for about six months and Shaba came in between that. That put everything back to where it was.

S: In other words, you are saying that Mobutu could possibly evolve into a decent leader of Zaire?

Y: All I am saying is that he is the leader of Zaire and that the United States Government does not involve itself in replacing or undermining any existing leader.

S: Even propping them up?

Y: Even propping them up. We've been able to give assistance to people. If there is some question as to whether that props up a leader or not when its people are well fed . . .

S: OK, let's be more precise about it. Don't you think that Shaba is a direct consequence of the Franco-Morocco intervention of last year?

Y: No, I don't.

S: You don't?

Y: I think Shaba this year is a direct result of continued attacks on Angola from Zaire territory along with the concern of East Germans and Katangan hostilities. I think that the Luanda tribesmen in Angola are probably as close to being African mercenaries as anything we've had. They fought with the Belgians first, they fought with the Portuguese, then they switched, they fought with the MPLA. They have been on every side.

S: In defense of their own territory?

Y: I don't know what it's in defense of? It might be in response to whomever paid them. Their move into Shaba the way they did wasn't necessarily a sustained guerrilla attack to overthrow the government. Other guerrilla movements that are fighting to claim the land fight all the time. The Katangans seem to fight and then go sleep for a year. And then they rise up again in 18 months and they do one incident again.

S: So what do you put down?

Y: I don't know. I am saying that it could be they fight when somebody else pays them and make it worth their while.

S: You mean in this case, the East Germans?

Y: Possibly.

S: But it's a known fact that the people of Shaba support them, or at least a great majority.

Y: You don't even know that. They do speak the language, they are from that area, they would normally be welcome, but the people of Shaba haven't been conducting any kind of undercurrent against the government. Nothing has happened.

S: They cant' afford to.

Y: Sure, you can always afford to. There's nothing like the repression in Shaba that there is in South Africa and yet there is a constant reaction on the part of even school children. So, I'm saying it's hard to make—hard to know what really is going on in Shaba. Or to blame it all on Mobutu. And say this is just a liberation movement that's trying to overthrow Mobutu. It may be, I don't know. But their patterns don't act like the Patriotic Front, or SWAPO, or any other liberation movement I know. I don't know of any liberation movement that's taken 18 months off and then fought another campaign.

S: Do you really distrust them?

Y: I do. I don't know them and I don't know anything about them. My inclination is to be suspicious of anything I don't know.

S: Six months ago when I spoke to Anne Holloway, she seemed to say that whatever the French had done in Africa since you came into office was with total approval from Washington.

Y: Oh, I don't think she said that.

S: Well totally complimentary she said.

Y: It depends on what you are talking about. If you are talking on our airlifting troops in to preserve order, to give humanitarian relief to the missionaries and the business people that were there, I would say that's true. I don't know what else the French are doing though.

S: Would you say our goals in Africa are the same as the French?

Y: No, I can't.

S: Why not?

Y: Because I think the French are pursuing French economic interests and I think we're not pursuing US economic interest to the same degree. I think the tension between the French and the Belgians in Zaire indicates that I would say we are much closer to the Belgians. The Belgians had a humanitarian concern for what was going on in Zaire; they were concerned about life and the future of their own people, they were of the mining infrastructure.

S: What were the French concerned with?

Y: I don't know. I think the French were concerned with their balance of payments deficit and are having difficulty competing with the Germans and the Japanese, the Swedes and everybody else. The way they have done it traditionally is by developing very successful neocolonial relations. I think some of the most successful countries in Africa are from French-speaking countries.

I would say the classic example would be Ivory Coast and I like Ivory Coast and I think that when you have a leader like Houphcuet—Boigny who consciously decides that the future of his people and the advancement of his country is best accomplished with a close relationship with the French, then I welcome that and I would do anything I could to support it. I think the same thing is true to some extent of Senghor.

S: Don't you think he is going a bit far now though?

Y: I don't know.

S: With the Pan-African Force?

S: What do you think of the Pan-African Force?

Y: I don't think it will ever happen so I never worry about it. There was a lot of talk and what does he come up with—300 Senegalese and 300 from Gabon and maybe 1000 Moroccans. There is too much English-speaking opposition to that. They don't see it as a Pan-African Force at all; they see it as a French-African Force.

S. Right.

Y: So, There is no question in my mind that that will be a big topic of discussion at the Organization of African Unity. I think though that there ought to be some way for countries in Africa to come to each other's assistance.

S: But through the Organization of African Unity?

Y: Well either the Organization of African Unity with some recourse to the UN through the Security Council.

S: But that would involve other countries.

Y: Yes, but it would put a freeze on the military situation and give you a possibility—the Security Council is not going to fight any wars—it's going to freeze the situation in place and push political solution, and where the African states would have the most to say about the politics, about the kind of solution that comes about.

S. What do you think of the French operations in Chad?

Y: I tend to approve the French operations in Chad. The other way to turn that around is what do I think of the Libyan operation in Chad. When somebody else is being an outside aggressor, I don't think you can blame the country for coming to or getting somebody to come to its aid to help them. I think it is very clear what is happening in Chad.

S: Is being stirred by the Libyans? They only came in afterwards. They are using the situation.

Y: In the first place nobody knows where that border is up there. Nobody knows what it is. I would say that all those wars are tragedies in that there is a whole lot of killing and destruction and nobody is winning anything, because there's nothing up there to win.

S: But the French are decimating all those Chadians. I mean that there is no Chadian army, we know that.

Y: We don't get reports on that.

S: Well, I can tell you, we do.

Y: But the thing that has got to happen in Africa and places like that or in places like the Ogaden or in places like Angola and Zaire is people have got to come to their senses and realize that military solutions make matters worse for all sides.

S: But today there are more conflicts, more armed conflicts in Africa than there were two years ago.

Y: Yes, but the conflicts have always been there. People have decided to put in sophisticated weapons, and I think what we have got to try to do at the UN is see if we can't find political solutions to those problems. Now the OAU wants to settle its own problems itself. But there is not the machinery in the Secretariat, the travel problems are too great, and Africa after all is not apart from the rest of the world. That's like saying, for the OAU saying they settle their problems alone, is like the Middle East saying we'll settle our problems alone. Nobody would let the Middle East do that, nobody is going to let Africa do that, but by bringing Middle East problems into the context of the UN, the Arabs and the Israelis, East and West argue them out and I think we've contained somewhat the violence in the Middle East, say in the last few years as a result of pushing for political solutions. And that is what we are going to have to have and one of the things I hope to do when I leave here is spend some time in Algeria, Morocco, Mauritania, the North African areas where you've got problems. I don't know enough about what's going on in Chad and Libya or what the French are doing really.

S: So you are going to see it?

Y: I'm going to try and find out because I think that the Russians should have learned. And the Cubans, I don't know what they lost or how much it cost them to drive the Somalis out of Ogaden but the Somalis aren't gone. And the geography is another factor. I think the big problem that Europeans and Americans have with war in Africa is they tend to conceptualize it in a European sense where in a European sense if you advance a hundred yards from French territory into German territory, you've done something. You can go a hundred miles in the Ogaden and not hit anything worth fighting for. And it's almost not worth the gasoline that you've used up to go the distance. And the Sudan will tell you, somebody can come into our country and they can come 250–300 miles and they can stay 2 or 3 days and we don't worry about it. That gives us time to see what they are up to. And then when we decide what they are up to, we can either cut their supply lines and strand them or we can drive them out. I mean war in Africa is quite different than anything Europeans have thought of before. And one of the reasons we have over-reacted to 20,000 Cubans in Angola is we think that that's a lot but Angola is twice the size of France, and 20,000 anything can't run a country that size.

S: You still think they have a good influence in Angola?

Y: Some, yes. I think in Southern Angola all that group, about 7,000 or so, are given technical assistance. They are providing educational opportunity, they are running the hospitals, they are keeping the plumbing working and the water supplies operating, and they are the only ones who can repair any motors. They keep the fishing fleet going to some extent. All of that is healthy. I think when they go out on search and destroy missions to try and destroy other Angolans who also have a right to be part of the government, I think that has to be condemned.

S: What do you think of the very privileged relationship that France entertains with Savimbi?

Y: Well, I happen to like Savimbi.

S: Yes. So does John Stockwell, but——

Y: But I don't know if it is in anybody's interest to make war on behalf of Savimbi against a government that is involved. I think that insofar as there could be some kind of political rapprochement, I would certainly encourage that.

S: But that's not what the French are doing.

Y: No, and I think their left hand may be destroying in Angola what their right hand is trying to do in Zaire.

S: You mean their left hand is the clandestine hand? Are you trying to do anything, are you trying to put any pressure on the French government against it?

Y: No, because I think that our position is that Savimbi is an authentic Angolan leader and that somehow in the context of Angolan politics there ought to be a place for those forces. Our position about Angolan leadership is pretty much like our position about Rhodesian leadership. We think that Mugabe, Muzorewa, Sithole, all of them have a right.

S: Since we are on Rhodesia, how much chance do you give them for a peaceful settlement?

Y: It depends if we can have a settlement in Namibia in the next month, which is likely. The Western members of the Security Council are in Luanda today. If they are successful in their negotiations and if South Africa withdraws troops and UN troops go in there, I'd say the chances for a similar thing happening in Rhodesia in a few weeks is——

S: In a few weeks?

Y: Yes, it's just going to go one way or the other before the end of the summer, both of those places.

S: Really?

Y: Yes, either we'll make the settlement in Nambia in which case violence will stop in Nambia and the UN troops will move in. When the white Rhodesians and South Africans see how it is working (garble). UN troops have survived and maintained some order in Lebanon where they are located and UN troops have an outstanding reputation.

S: But look what's happening in Lebanon now.

Y: Not where the UN troops are. The UN troops are down along the border; that's happening up around Beirut. There was never a mandate for the UN to occupy all of Lebanon.

S: So you think peaceful solution in Namibia may incline Ian Smith to . . .

Y: Very definitely.

S: But Nkomo and Mugabe will never sit with Ian Smith.

Y: They have been sitting with Ian Smith all the time.

S: What do you mean? Not physically at least.

Y: There is one thing I learned about the Rhodesian situation which is everybody talks to everybody else.

S: Really?

Y: Muzcorewa and Mugabe, Sitole, Nkomo. Smith is always sending messages to everybody. It's a family feud, much more than anybody realizes and it has been for the last five years.

S: But what about the recent massacres?

Y: I don't know that anybody knows who is responsible for those massacres. It raises questions with me because I know the missionaries. For instance, one of the places that was attacked was the Salvation Army Training School. Almost everybody on Nkomo's Central Committee went to school there.

S: So it couldn't be them?

Y: No. It just doesn't make sense. The other thing is, I know that the missionaries have been of great humanitarian assistance to the guerillas. They have given them food, they have operated on them when they have been wounded. When somebody saves your life you don't come back and kill them. I am awful suspicious of the charges that the guerillas are attacking the missionaries. Mugabe is a devout Jesuit school teacher. When the talks were here in Geneva, Mugabe used to go off on weekends to a monastary. There's nobody at the top of his organization—many of whom are products of Catholic missionary schools. Mugabe taught in the Jesuit schools. At one point you could say that their rebel bands of . . .

S: Of provocateurs from the other side?

Y: I didn't want to charge them with that yet, but the rebel bands that might have gotten out of hand and attacked one missionary operation was pretty soon rounded up by the guerillas. And so I would think that if it's a planned operation to attack missionaries, which it seems to have been in the last few weeks, then it has to be coming from Smith's side.

S: But that shows that even though it may be a family feud it could turn into a massacre.

Y: Oh, it is very definitely. Except there is still a great deal of restraint. Tongogarro who is Mugabe's military commander told me that his mother worked on Ian Smith's plantation.

S: Really?

Y: And that his mother would never forgive him if something happended to Ian Smith's parents because Ian Smith's parents had sent for a doctor when his brothers were sick. He is very careful not to say Ian Smith but it's sort of like the Old South in the United States. There are hostilities along a racial class level but there are some very strong individual ties. And he was saying that Ian Smith's parents put his brother in a wagon in those days and got his mother and his little brother to a hospital. And his mother wouldn't let anybody . . . and those kinds of family ties are still very strong.

S: What do you feel is the change of atmosphere in the U.S.? It seems like a new conservatism.

Y: On the basis of what?

S: Bussing, Bakke.

Y: No, the Bakke case came out perfect considering it was brought by a young man who I think was discriminated against because of his age, frankly. He was 33. But nothing the court did overthrew the affirmative action programs. In fact it probably contributed to further clarifying affirmative action. A couple of days later in a case in relationship to jobs and trade unions, it affirmed everything except quotas. For a Nixon court that was a tremendous victory. Now the Proposition 13 is a California halucination. They think California is heaven. They repeal taxes this year and next year they are going to try to have a referendum repealing death.

S: You are not afraid it could spread?

Y: I think that it's going to spread, but the consequences are going to be felt so quickly that it won't go far.

S: So generally you don't think there is a new mood of (conservatism)?

Y: Not anything that's lasting.

S: What do you feel of Carter's loss of popularity and what do you feel when people say you are Carter's token Liberal or token black?

Y: I don't worry about Carter's loss of popularity because I think he took over when lots of things had been left undone. We had four Presidents trying to get a Panama Canal Treaty for the last fourteen years. He could have put it off another four years until it got more popular. But in the meantime he would have run the risk of a complete breakdown in Panama. So what he's done is do what has to be done regardless of the political consequences. I started in Congress under Nixon trying to pass an energy bill and three years in a row in Congress we couldn't get one passed. He's not doing too much better but at least he is fighting it out and we will get an energy bill. He's taken on all the unpopular causes and by doing it the first two years of his administration he has a chance to succeed. And by the time he comes up for re-election people will be very appreciative of the fact that he did these hard things back when he did. We had a governor in New Jersey, Brendan Byrne, ran on a platform that he would not increase taxes. When he got in the school system was about to close so he introduced an income tax and everybody started calling him one-term Byrne. But he was just re-elected by almost 60 percent of the vote a couple of months ago because by the time people got around to it and they realized had he not done what he did the whole educational system of the state would have fallen apart. So people don't like courageous leadership in the beginning but they appreciate it after a little while.

S: So it's better to get it all over with at the first?

Y: Yes. And in terms of my being the token Liberal and the token black it just isn't true. Just before I left, I asked the White House if they could pull together a list of the black political appointees. There were over a hundred that were in pretty high-level jobs—Assistant Secretary of Labor, in fact two Assistant Secretaries of Labor, the Under Secretary of the Interior, Under Secretary of the Treasury top level assistants in the Office of Management and Budget, Secretary of the Army, the Assistant Secretary of the Civil Rights in the Justice Department. There were so many, I didn't know them. I get maybe too much publicity, but what I was saying to them was that they ought to speak up more and not let me take all the flak by myself.

S: What about the token Liberal, the ideological, LIJE the speech of the administration?

Y: I don't think I'm that much more Liberal than Vance.

S: Why didn't you say Brzezinski?

Y: Brzezinski, on the economic issues, the North/South issues, I would say we agree on that. Brzezinski and I might disagree on Cuba, but even with that it's a healthy one. We would have a tactical disagreement on what to do about Cuba.

S: But not a fundamental one?

Y: No, not really. When I am in a meeting, I am never the only Liberal voice, I don't care what meeting it is. And usually I'm not the most liberal voice on any given issue. I just talk out loud sometimes.

H.R. 12052—TURNING DREAMS INTO REALITIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OBERSTAR). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, a critical problem facing our economy is homeownership. The cost of home financing has risen so rapidly that ownership is beyond the reach of many Americans. This is especially true of young families trying to buy their first home.

Another equally serious problem of homeownership concerns our Nation's older Americans. How can senior citizens, the majority living on fixed incomes, afford to continue living in their homes? Due to increasing costs in real estate taxes, utilities and other maintainance costs, and no rise in their income, millions of senior citizens are being forced to sell their homes. And the most ironic aspect of this is that, in many cases, the mortgage on the home is paid in full.

It has always been the American dream to own your own home. And the culmination of that dream is a comfortable and secure retirement, relatively free of financial concerns. But, for many Americans, that dream is moving farther from rather than closer to a reality.

Mr. Speaker, in January of this year I introduced a bill which addresses the problems of these two groups, a bill I call the American Dream Act. The legislation would allow federally chartered savings and loans to offer two new mortgage plans, the graduated payment mortgage (GMP) and the reverse annuity mortgage (RAM).

The graduated payment mortgage allows monthly payments to begin at a low level and to gradually increase over the life of the loan. Both the rate of increase and the interest rate are fixed throughout the life of the loan. This type of mortgage would be especially beneficial to young couples whose income is not high enough in their early years of marriage to enable them to afford large monthly payments. But, with reduced payments in the earlier years of the mortgage, and subsequently increased payments as the homeowner's income level increases, homeownership would be possible.

The reverse annuity mortgage is designed to allow senior citizens to draw equity from their homes in the form of cash, without being forced to sell their homes. The homeowner retains ownership and draws a monthly check based on the value of their home. When the homeowner dies or decides to sell, the amount, of those monthly checks, is merely deducted from the proceeds of the sale and returned to the lender.

Since I originally introduced this legislation in January, the positive response to the loan plans has been overwhelming. Sixteen members of the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee have cosponsored the bill. Hearings began last week in the Financial Institutions Subcommittee and will continue throughout this week.

I have received letters from all parts of the country urging passage of the Dream Act. The majority of this mail has come from senior citizens. Many older Americans see this legislation as their only hope of keeping their homes. Many have said they will be forced to sell in the upcoming year, if this legislation is not passed.

The letters are heartbreaking in their simplicity. A man from Lewistown, Pennsylvania sums up the frustration of these citizens. He writes: "Why save all your life for your property and do without, and then die and give it all away? I am behind your bill 100 percent."

A couple from Indiana sum up another reoccurring theme in the letters I have received—the senior citizens' desire for independence. They write:

This is the first piece of legislation that is favorable for the financial plight of the older citizens and will be reward for their years of saving and investment in property. Further, it can make us all less dependent on the government for handouts or the fraud of social security.

Consider the plight of these citizens. Years ago, they bought a home as an investment for the future. The theory was—get the house paid for while you are working and when retirement comes, sit back and relax. Of course, there will be taxes, but these can be handled out of social security or pension plans.

But, inflation and property taxes have played a cruel joke on these citizens. It may be nice to know that your home has tripled in value if you plan to sell your home. But, for the retiree, all this increased value means is more taxes. Combine real estate taxes with increased utility costs, and quite often payments exceed the monthly mortgage payments these citizens struggled to make for so many years.

A man from Pipersville, Pa., illustrates how desperately this legislation is needed:

If this bill passed, you will have earned the undying gratitude of thousands, if not tens of thousands, of old people and should deserve a monument as one of the truly great benefactors of the elderly. Only by selling can we keep from eventual disaster and that would be the final blow, since most of us have been living in our houses the best part of our lives.

Another senior citizen writes:

My husband and I are living on Social Security with a paid up home. We do not want to sell, yet we need more income to maintain living in it. Your bill sounds like the answer to all our problems. We do not intend to leave an estate, but would like to be able to afford a few necessities. Please work on it.

Mr. Speaker, the potential for the reverse mortgage is tremendous. It is estimated that homeowners 65 years and older have a net equity of $90 billion in their homes. Why should they have to wait until death to realize the economic fruits of 30 years of mortgage payments.

And, as for the young family trying to buy a first home, the graduated mortgage loan would enable up to 11 percent of current renters under the age of 35 to own their own homes. It is estimated that 2½ million families could afford homes under the GMP loan.

Because this legislation grants permissive rather than mandatory authority to make these loans, I see no reason why we cannot deal with this legislation in a speedy manner. The sooner we get these mortgages on the books, the sooner we can help both the young families and the retired citizens of our country.●

LEGISLATION AUTHORIZING POSTHUMOUS AWARD OF THE CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR TO WILLIAM JAMES TSAKANIKAS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. OTTINGER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill authorizing the President to award the Medal of Honor posthumously to William James Tsakanikas in recognition of heroism displayed in World War II.

Mr. James, as he was called after the war, was instrumental in stalling a crucial advance by the Germans. Nineteen years old at the time, he warned his platoons of an imminent attack by German paratroopers. Although his selfless deeds saved his platoon, he was captured and nearly killed, spending 5 months in German prison camps before returning to his home in Westchester County, N.Y. By the time of his death last year, he had undergone 36 operations, but the pain of his severe facial wounds never left him.

James' heroism is described in two books by John S. D. Eisenhower, son of former President Dwight Eisenhower. Eisenhower describes James as "one of the most aggressive soldiers in the platoon * * * always anxious to do more than his part in every kind of action, the kind one could count on for any job * * * he was proud of the platoon and even more proud of the confidence Bouck (his lieutenant) had in him. He had resolved to do more than his best to serve his country.

This is the type of courage he continually showed, unwilling to sacrifice the safety of his service buddies for his own. In his last battle he was wounded: "The right side of his face had been shot away, and his right eyeball was hanging limply in the cavern where his cheek had been."

The pain of his wounds never ceased. He was in constant agony yet, upon returning to civilian life, he continued to display the same spirit of self-sacrifice he showed in the war. After earning a bachelor's degree in economics from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania and an engineering degree from Tarleton State University in Texas, he went to law school, worked for the State unemployment office, and was an Oldsmobile salesman. He became active in civil affairs in the Town of Rye, N.Y., and was a deacon in the Presbyterian church and a volunteer in the Port Chester school system. He died, still suffering from his wounds, July 27, 1977.

It is proper that this courageous individual receive the Medal of Honor so many years after his service, for this man indeed performed above and beyond the call of duty.

The text of the bill follows:

H.R. 13580

A bill authorizing the President to award a medal of honor posthumously to William James Tsakanikas

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of Amercia in Congress assembled, That, notwithstanding sections 3744(b) and 3752(a) of title 10, United States Code, the President is authorized to award in the name of the Congress a medal of honor posthumously to William James Tsakanikas for valorous acts performed at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty while serving as a private first class in the United States Army during World War II, and to present such medal to his family.

A PLEA FOR ACTION

(Mr. PRICE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I invite the attention of my colleagues to an important and interesting article by Hon. Paul H. Nitze which appeared in the New York Times Magazine of May 7, 1978.

A PLEA FOR ACTION

(By Paul H. Nitze)

It is characteristic of the American political system that candidates for public office deal with ends rather than means—and, to some extent, continue to do so after being elected. One can always be warmer, more human and more sympathetic when discussing ends than when dealing with the allocation of the scarce means necessary to achieve those ends.

But there is an additional problem if the ends are inherently contradictory. One can't simultaneously favor the young, the old and the middle-aged of both sexes; the blacks, the whites, the Indians, the Mexicans and all other racial minority groups, the Jews, the Catholics, the Protestants and the nonbelievers; the workers, the farmers, the white-collar workers and the business managers. One can't both achieve a rising standard of living and take environmental measures that deny one the means to achieve that standard. By the same token, unless one makes wholly unrealistic assumptions about the nature of Soviet policies, one cannot simultaneously favor abolition of all nuclear weapons, a substantial cut in the defense budget and a national defense second to none.

It was therefore a foregone conclusion that President Carter would not be able to achieve some of the contradictory ends he set for himself during the campaign. But that has been true of many Presidential candidates. The more serious question is whether, since his inauguration, he has adapted his position to a more realistic approach to an imperfect world—whether he has plotted courses of action designed to get some specific and necessary things done for the country as a whole. I will not attempt to deal with the choices he faces on inflation, energy, the environment or the unemployed young; my subject is President Carter and the Russians.

It was Mr. Carter's original intention, in comparison with the preceding Administration, to be firmer with the Soviet leadership, more understanding toward our allies and more successful in negotiating equitable agreements with the Soviet Union. These agreements were to cover a wide range of subjects, including a new strategic-arms treaty (SALT II), an agreement on mutual, balanced force reductions in Europe, a comprehensive nuclear test-ban treaty, a new codification of the Law of the Sea and an agreement concerning the Indian Ocean. At the same time, he proposed to put less emphasis on East-West relations and more emphasis on North-South relations and the global issues of food, population, energy, economic development and the environment. All this was to be carried out against the background of a vigorous campaign to foster respect for human rights throughout the world, including the Soviet Union.

Today, this agenda looks far less practicable than it did on Jan. 20, 1977. What have been the causes for disappointment?

In my opinion, the principal cause is the President's misreading of the Russians. He shared the view of his chief arms-control negotiator, Paul Warnke, that the Soviet drive for greater military power was a reaction to our programs—limited to catching up—and that it would be reversed if we did not take steps to challenge it. He thought it possible to find solutions that the Russians would find "fair" to themselves and that would also be "fair" to us. His March 1977 SALT proposal went so far to be "fair" to the Russians as actually to be unfair to the United States. As his advisers now concede, the proposal would have guaranteed that, under no circumstances, could we gain from initiating an attack on the Soviet Union's fixed land-based missile silos, while leaving us without any guarantee that the Russians could not gain from such an attack on our silos.

However, the proposal would have also placed restraints on modernization and technological developments that the Russians were not prepared to accept. They were confident that they could improve their position vis-a-vis the United States without such restraints, and subsequent developments have proved them right.

President Carter was shocked by the force of the Soviet rejection. He is still in search of a "fair" solution. But the concept of "fairness" to a potential opponent is simply not seen by Soviet negotiators as a serious approach; they believe that opponents should strive to gain as much as possible from the other side, and give as little as possible.

Mr. Carter had hoped to be able to concentrate on the defense of the NATO front in Europe and the security of Japan, and to downgrade areas of lesser danger such as the Middle East, Africa and Korea. He had also hoped to separate the North-South issues from the East-West issues and give them greater priority. On both counts, he ran up against a reality that did not conform to his hopes.

He found that an important line of Soviet strategy was to outflank the NATO center by putting pressure on Norway and Turkey—particularly Turkey, which is now the largest single recipient of Soviet aid. He also found that the Soviet Union was working toward a position of hegemony in the Middle East designed to outflank Europe and Japan, and a position in Africa designed to outflank the Middle East.

The President thus found that it was not possible to separate North-South issues from East-West issues. It was the North-South issues that were being exploited by the Russians to upset the East-West balance in their favor—and this exploitation was fostered by the Soviet Union's growing strategic nuclear capabilities and its increasing power to project military force, either directly or through client states, to positions distant from Soviet borders. Although Mr. Carter announced that we would "compete" with the Soviets for influence in the third world, he found that the tools of American influence needed for that competition were not strong. Our ability to grant economic assistance is not what it once was. Military aid has been limited both by the Carter Administration's policies and by Congressional restraints. And there is a limit to what words and diplomacy, not backed by the more substantive aspects of power, can accomplish.

With respect to the human-rights part of his program, he has found the world more responsive to this initiative than might have been expected. Those who have suffered under Soviet domination, and who, therefore, know the Soviet regime well, received the White House appeals on behalf of human rights with renewed hope. This audience includes the people of Hungary, Poland and East Germany, among many others. In the Soviet Union itself, the regime has found it necessary to tighten the measures of repression. The regimes in Egypt, Somalia and China have also known the Russians well, but have other reasons for being opposed to the Soviet Union, and emotionally so. But those emotionally opposed to the Kremlin's policies do not, separately or together, command organized power adequate to make their opposition effective. They tend to look to us for more support than we are in a position to give.

In short, I believe President Carter misjudged the current state of the world and the Soviet Union's role in it. It seems evident that he is now having to reassess his policy, and that the issues sketched out above are causing divisions among his advisers.

Clues to the opposing viewpoints may be found in statements being made available to the press. In the New York Times of April 17, for instance, a high-ranking State Department official is quoted as saying that Zbigniew Brzezinski, the Presidents national-security adviser, "believes that only by displaying backbone can the Administration achieve its goals with Moscow," whereas "most people around here [the State Department] think that tough talk and a threatening posture could ruin the chances for working out a more stable relationship."

That comment seems to me to miss the point. It is undeniable that tough talk and a threatening verbal posture not backed by the tools to make it stick are not going to accomplish much; they may, in fact, expose us to the humiliation of a rude rebuff (as the Russians say) or force us into dangerous actions for which we are psychologically or materially unprepared. But neither, in dealing with Moscow, can we achieve our goals without displaying backbone. Accommodation without backbone leads to appeasement. We should talk not "tough" but with constructive reason and with an eye to correcting the continual stream of erroneous and deliberately deceptive propaganda issuing from Moscow. And while speaking quietly, we should urgently be doing those things that need to be done to reverse unfavorable trends in the underlying practical factors of power and influence.

The New York Times news story also reports the suggestion of a close aide to Secretary of State Cyrus Vance that Mr. Brzezinski's unhappiness with second-level State Department officials resulted from "a lack of clear policy direction from the top down." "We don't have a consistent policy toward Moscow," the official is quoted as saying, "and when this is the case, people get into trouble. It's not that the State Department is trying to undercut policy: we are only trying to carry out what we think the policy is."

Normally, a President would replace a Secretary of State whose close aide tells the press that Presidential guidance is so unclear as to lead to serious confusion. Perhaps Mr. Carter does not do so because he himself finds the fundamental issue in Soviet-American relations confusing and difficult to resolve.

What is the fundamental issue? George Kennan, the author of the "containment" doctrine, has in recent years asserted with increasing conviction that our policy must be one of "accommodation" to the Soviet Union's growing new imperial position in the world. Others, including myself, believe that the United States, with backing throughout the world from the host of potential supporters of independence from Soviet direction—if not of national and personal freedom as we understand these concepts—can maintain an effective base for continued widespread autonomy from Soviet pressures. These pressures take the form of propaganda, political action, psychological warfare, K.G.B. operations and moves and threats of a military nature. Despite the rhetoric of détente and accommodation, I believe these pressures will continue to grow if we continue on our present course.

However one interprets it, there can be no doubt about the continuing and mammoth buildup of Soviet military capabilities. Every recent Administration, including the present one, has testified to the magnitude of this buildup, and most Government agencies with competence in the field have stated that it exceeds any imaginable defensive need. Some people, mostly those who were national-security advisers to Senator George McGovern during the 1972 Presidential campaign, assert that this buildup springs from Soviet anxiety, in response to American initiatives, and is basically defensive in character. My own view is that the situation is not that simple, and that one should give weight to what the Soviet leaders themselves say on this subject to their own people.

Their doctrine, which they take most seriously, is that "scientific socialism," as they call their system, will inevitably triumph throughout the world; that they are dutybound to assist this historically determined process by every available prudent means; and that, before succumbing to this inevitable outcome, others will defend themselves and strike back. From that vantage point, everything the Soviet leaders do is basically defensive. As Clausewitz puts it, the aggressor never wants war; he would prefer to enter your country unopposed; those who could defend their independence appear to the aggressor to be the warmongers.

To one who is doctrinally dedicated to achieving world hegemony, anyone else who has or may have the capability to resist that hegemony is a cause for anxiety. In that sense, the United States is a cause for Soviet anxiety. And the shift in the military balance, particularly in the strategic nuclear balance, over the last 15 years, gives the Soviet leaders increased confidence in the validity of their doctrine—confidence that 10 or 15 years ago was badly eroding.

The Soviet leaders do not want a nuclear war with the United States. They do, however, want strategic nuclear superiority (they call it "preponderance"). If at all possible, they would like to have the capability to fight a nuclear war—and to win such a war, in the military sense of ending up in undisputed command of the battlefield and being in a position to dictate the peace. They also propose to survive such a war, whatever the personnel and property losses they suffer, and to emerge as the predominant state in a world of Communist states. I don't think they have, as yet,, the capability of achieving those objectives, but it is my view that unless we take urgent measures at once—not next year or the year after—to reverse current trends, the Russians will have such a capability in a few years' time. At a minimum, the disparity between our force and theirs will be such that we will have no grounds for confidence that the capability is not theirs.

In the Soviet view, preponderance of capability at the highest level of potential violence is the best way to prevent a confrontation at a lower level from escalating to the strategic nuclear level. However, it is also their view that preponderance at the strategic nuclear level can be exploited at lower levels in many forms of political pressure and violence. Strategic nuclear preponderance, they believe, is the fulcrum on which all other levels of pressure and influence depend.

One of their underlying concepts is the "correlation of forces." By that they mean the balance of political, economic, ideological, propaganda and organizational forces, as well as the military balance, at any given time. When that correlation is favorable, their doctrine calls on them to exploit their advantage. When it is unfavorable, it calls on them to be cautions, to retreat if necessary, to buy time in order to regroup and improve the balance so that it again moves in their favor. Associated with this doctrine is the idea that all the forces they control—political, psychological, diplomatic and economic—should be coordinated against the background of the relevant military balance, so as to optimize their gains and minimize their risks and potential losses.

Regarding themselves as being on the historical offensive, the Soviet leaders believe they should use the minimum amount of pressure or violence necessary to achieve their immediate aims. In their view, tactical caution is necessary to assure that, over time, grand strategic aims can be achieved. They follow strategies and tactics aimed at achieving a world controlled by regimes fashioned on the "scientific socialist" model—a world in which they, because of their longer experience, their years of effort and sacrifice on behalf of the Communist movement, and their preponderant power, will be the unchallenged hegemonic leaders.

Their attitude toward the United States has not been one of hatred. They have viewed the United States as being the central power among those nations and peoples who have a different view of the future; who believe that cooperative international arrangements can be made to work, that one country's gains are not necessarily another country's losses, that the actions of government should be responsive to the public will, and that the elemental rights of individuals should be fostered and not suppressed.

They believe the United States must of necessity oppose their basic aims. Therefore, the power and influence of the United States must be diminished by whatever prudent means come to hand. All measures taken must be aimed, directly or indirectly, at assuring that the United States, as the strongest of the Soviet Union's potential opponents, is denied any realistic possiblity of frustrating their ultimate goals.

The Soviet view of the United States has, therefore, been one of cold and respectful opposition. In recent years the component of respect appears to have diminished. Why should this have been so? In part, the reason may be found in President Carter's very virtues.

President Carter has a way with words. His special talent tends toward simple formulations expressed in brief sentences. The results are akin to homilies. His press conferences, for which his skills are superb, abound with sayings fit to be embroidered for a bedroom wall. A companion trait is self-assurance. He is warmed by inner confidence. A third and closely related quality is determination. His amazingly successful thrust for the Presidency two years ago was an object lesson in perseverance, a quality that grows by being used.

Each of those characteristics, favorable as they are to success in politics, has its obverse side. Words, for example, can become addictive. At Notre Dame University a year ago, the President revealingly offered the thought that, "in the spiritual realm, words are deeds." If that were all there is to it, we could all attain salvation on the basis of our New Year's resolutions. A capacity to deal with practical matters, not merely with words, is vital—a point no policy maker should ever forget.

Even self-assurance can become a bad habit. In an extreme form, it may induce political leaders to attribute transformative powers to their own personalities—as if some mysterious radiation of their presence could resolve human differences in the way kings in ancient times were said to be able to alleviate physical infirmities by touch of hand. Many a political project has been undone by this delusion.

One must take pains to be precise. The faith that moves mountains is indispensable; I question only the attitude that classifies all mountains as movable objects, the perseverance that only redoubles its efforts when finding itself on the wrong course, the aspiration that indulges itself by defining every impediment out of existence.

To those of us who entertain more and more doubts about President Carter on these grounds, his shortcomings appear as virtues carried to excess. Has his way with words led him to confuse strength with occasional strong utterances on the necessity of being strong? Has he unconsciously translated equations of power in world affairs into terms more applicable to personal relationships—relationships susceptible of being improved, redeemed, and resolved by his setting an example of patience and grace? Is he too devoted to an array of moral equivalents? Does the President find the ideal ends of policy too congenial to his spirit—to the prejudice of the obdurate factors of means? Has he imaginatively reconstructed the Soviet Union with hypotheses that fit his own hopes?

The Russians appear to believe that they face a confused man; a man who, on the one hand, would like to see a world wholly without nuclear weapons, but who, on the other hand, knows that the Russians are not going to give them up. The Russians are determined that so long as anyone in the world has nuclear weapons, or even the possibility of acquiring them, they are going to have them, too, and more and better ones than anyone else. The President, on the other hand, does not seem to be clear in his own mind whether we can or should fully hold up our end of the nuclear deterrent. I regard that attitude as dangerous, and believe it is high time the United States got on with reversing current trends and assuring that we maintain a strategic posture that can give us confidence in our ability to deter the Soviet Union and avoid nuclear war.

It is my view that the position of that part of the world not dominated by Moscow is more precarious today than it has been for some time. We must move forward with great caution and prudence, but to make "accommodation" the touchstone of our policy is, as Peking never ceases to remind us, the road to appeasement.

This issue—whether our policy toward the Soviet Union is to proceed from accommodation leading to appeasement, or from a rallying of our forces for prudent resistance to any Soviet purpose of world hegemony—must be resolved by the President, and resolved correctly. It must be resolved in that direction of prudent resistance, and without delay.●

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

MEMORIALS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII,

461. The SPEAKER presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, relative to the funding of a national earthquake hazards reduction program; jointly, to the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs, and Science and Technology.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII,

520. The SPEAKER presented a petition of the council of the city of New York, N.Y., relative to grants to fund local programs to improve housing and prevent neighborhood deterioration, which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 10285

By Mr. AUCOIN:

Page 12, after line 10, insert the following new section:

PROCESS FOR APPROVAL OF BYLAWS, RULES, REGULATIONS, AND RESOLUTIONS OF CONTRACT MARKETS

SEC. 10. Section 5a(12) of the Commodity Exchange Act (7 U.S.C. 7a(12)) is amended by—

(1) inserting after the first sentence the following: "Along with such bylaws, rules, regulations, and resolutions, such contract market shall submit to the Commission projected economic and statistical analyses of any effects such proposed bylaws, rules, regulations, and resolutions would have, including effects on persons who would be subject to such proposed bylaws, rules, regulations, and resolutions and on accounts, agreements, and transactions subject to regulation under this Act. Upon receipt of such bylaws, rules, regulations, and resolutions, the Commission shall publish in the Federal Register a copy of such bylaws, rules, regulations, and resolutions and the accompanying economic and statistical analyses. For a period of 62 days after such publication, the Commission shall give interested persons an opportunity to participate in the approval process through submission of written data, views, or arguments with opportunity for oral presentation at public hearings to be held by the Commission." and

(2) striking out "The Commission shall approve, within thirty days" and inserting in lieu thereof "After consideration of the relevent matter presented, the Commission shall approve, at a public hearing within ninety days".

Redesignate the subsequent sections accordingly.

SENATE—Monday, July 24, 1978

(Legislative day of Wednesday, May 17, 1978)

The Senate met at 11:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. EASTLAND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Edward L. R. Elson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

"Thanks to God whose Word was spoken
In the deed that made the earth.
His the voice that called a nation
His the fires that tried her worth.
God has spoken;
God has spoken;
Praise him for his open Word".
—R. T. BROOKS.

O God our Father, help us to hear and understand Thy Word spoken in the movement of history, in the written Word and in the person of Thy Son. Watch over the President, the Congress, and all in authority in our Government that we may fitly "serve the present age our calling to fulfill." Move us to live more nearly after the pattern of Thy Son, in whose name we make our morning prayer. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF LEADERSHIP

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules and Administration be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, July 26, beginning at 10 a.m., to conduct a hearing on Senate Joint Resolution 142, Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial, and consider other legislative and administration business, including a printing resolution and Senate Resolution 487, providing supplemental funds for the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no further need for my time.

RECOGNITION OF LEADERSHIP

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes of my time under the order to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

BREAKTHROUGH ON PROLIFERATION RESISTANT NUCLEAR FUEL CYCLE

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, most Members of the Senate are aware of the Barnwell nuclear fuel plant in South Carolina and the fact that the facility has not been allowed to operate because of President Carter's indefinite deferral of commercial reprocessing. Because the Department of Energy and the administration are now exploring optional uses for Barnwell that are consistent with the President's nonproliferation policies, the highly skilled technical staff has been retained under contract to DOE conducting research and development on proliferation resistant fuel cycles and nuclear safeguards.

I am very happy to announce that this research, as a part of the fiscal year 1978 program at Barnwell, has produced a significant breakthrough. The technical staff at Barnwell has developed a nuclear fuel cycle that is highly resistant to diversion for nuclear weapons purposes. Preliminary analysis by the Department of Energy indicates that the new fuel cycle is indeed a significant step forward and the proposal will be studied further as a part of the international nuclear fuel cycle evaluation (INFCE), a 40-nation, 2-year study to develop more proliferation resistant fuel cycles.

Mr. President, I would briefly like to describe what this new, more proliferation resistant fuel cycle is:

Nonproliferation studies to date have focused on development of methods to complicate the diversion of commercial plutonium by dilution with low enriched uranium, the addition of highly radioactive "spikes" such as cobalt, and partial retention of fission products. In recognition of the fact that the plutonium product from each of these methods can be chemically purified, the staff at Barnwell thought it desirable to evaluate methods by which a denaturant might be added to the fuel cycle which could not chemically be removed and would at the same time render the plutonium unattractive for weapons purposes. What evolved from this evaluation was a fuel cycle which involves using Plutonium-238 ($Pu^{238}$). Because of high heat generation rate of $Pu^{238}$, a level in the range of 5 to 10 percent in spent reactor fuel would add a measure of deterrence such that subnational and national groups would be discouraged from considering reactor spent fuel and the plutonium therein as a source of weapons material. The high heat conduct will prevent the plutonium in spent fuel from being removed and concentrated to the degree necessary to fabricate a crude nuclear explosive. In addition to the heating effect, $Pu^{238}$ cannot be chemically removed from the other plutonium in spent fuel. This nonremoval feature combined with high heat concentration will assure that reactor spent fuel will not be a target for terrorist groups and others interested in seizing and using weapons grade materials.

Allied-General Nuclear Services (AGNS), owners of the Barnwell plant, are putting the details of the new process into the international nuclear fuel cycle evaluation (INFCE) a 40-nation, 2-year study to develop more proliferation resistant fuel cycles. By doing this, it is assured that the process can be examined and used by other nations to control nuclear proliferation.

I am proud that the U.S. Senate, under the leadership of Senator JACKSON and Senator CHURCH, has made the wise decision to use this very talented technical team at Barnwell. That decision has paid off and will continue to pay off.

NEW FOREIGN POLICY ANNOUNCED BY PANAMA

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, just as many of us here in the Senate warned, Panama has fired the first shot to mobilize world opinion for the United States to leave its naval base in Guantanamo Bay.

This position by Panama is hand in glove with the shouts of Fidel Castro, the longtime dictator in Cuba.

I ask unanimous consent that an article headed "Panama Urges U.S. To Quit Guantanamo" in the July 20, 1978, issue of the Washington Star newspaper be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star, July 20, 1978]

PANAMA URGES U.S. TO QUIT GUANTANAMO

PANAMA CITY, PANAMA.—Panama called yesterday for the United States to give up its Guantanamo naval base in Cuba, self-determination for Puerto Rico and return of all occupied Arab lands by Israel.

The government made the points in a 14-page document intended to lay the basis for its future foreign policy.

"The centerpiece of our foreign policy has been the canal. Now that an agreement has been reached with the United States, we felt we needed to redefine our foreign policy," Foreign Minister Nicolas Gonzalez Revilla said in an interview.

The document also supports respect for human rights and condemns all intervention in the affairs of other nations. Gonzalez Revilla said it "also recognizes Panamanian support of some independence struggles that exist in the world."

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, Mr. JAVITS be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that my time be restored to my control.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the current economic recovery is one of our longest postwar expansions. This achievement owes much to the major economic stimulus program which was proposed by the administration and perfected and enacted last year by Congress to spur consumer demand and business investment.

Real economic growth last year was a healthy 4.9 percent—one of the strongest performances by any of the major democratic industrial powers. The overall level of unemployment dropped to 5.7 percent in June. Since January 1977, almost 6½ million Americans have been added to the jobs roll. Furthermore, the percentage of our population gainfully employed now stands at a record high level.

Recently, I asked the administration to provide me with information regarding the impact of the economic stimulus package. According to preliminary estimates supplied by the Department of Labor—which I am advised have not been previously released, and which are rough figures subject to future revision—the economic stimulus program created over 270,000 jobs in calendar year 1977 and is expected to generate over 1.1 million jobs this year. These figures correspond with the reduction of the unemployment rate by two-tenths of a percentage point in 1977 and an expected additional nine-tenths of a percentage point in 1978.

These accomplishments on the employment front are impressive. Nonetheless, much remains to be done. According to most analysts, we are now at an economic crossroad.

Continuing high rates of inflation and rising interest rates can choke off growth. Indeed, the Congressional Budget Office currently forecasts a slower rate of real growth for the next 18 months.

Prices, as measured by the GNP chain price index, rose at an annual rate of 8.6 percent in the first half of 1978. Consumer prices rose 0.9 percent in May, and the prices of finished goods rose 0.7 percent in June. Clearly, these rates are too high; we must reduce them or risk a slowdown in business expansion and consumer spending that may well turn into a recession.

In order to put our economic house in order, we must take action on a wide range of economic issues, including energy, inflation, and tax reduction.

I. THE ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

The consensus of economists on inflation is summarized by the recent statement made by Barry Bosworth, Director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability: "If inflation keeps up, we're headed straight for another recession." In short, the wage and price spiral must be wound down if we are to maintain the forward momentum of the economy.

I recognize that the administration's anti-inflation program has been in place only for a relatively short time. The success of the program depends upon the pricing and wage decisions that will be made in the coming months by labor and business and by the Government itself.

In the interim we must continue to explore innovative approaches to winding down inflation. I, like other Members of Congress, am ready to give a variety of proposals careful scrutiny. For example, there is the tax-based incomes policy (TIP). Several versions of this policy have been proposed, all of which call for use of the tax system as a carrot or stick to induce—not force—moderation in wage increases.

II. INTEREST RATES

I am concerned that economic growth and expansion will be endangered if the Federal Reserve continues to tighten credit in an attempt to curb inflation. Raising the cost of money to slow inflation is a double-edged tool, because it makes all other products more expensive, thus contributing to inflation.

In setting the preliminary revenue floor and spending ceiling for fiscal year 1979 in the first concurrent resolution on the budget, Congress opted for a moderate tax cut that would not overheat the economy. It is now important that the Federal Reserve not err in the opposite direction by putting on the monetary brakes too quickly and risking a recession.

III. THE TAX CUT

The first concurrent budget resolution assumes a net tax cut of $15 billion starting in January 1979. A tax cut on this order will allow for improved economic performance both in real growth and employment.

The Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board of Governors strongly concurs that we need a moderate tax cut this year. He has said that a larger tax cut could well require a further tightening of monetary policy to offset inflationary pressures. This would endanger the continuation of the current economic expansion.

I believe that this may well be the year in which less is more. The consensus of economic judgment is that we would err seriously if we were to support a deeper tax cut such as is proposed under the Roth-Kemp bill. Indeed, only if we continue to act with fiscal restraint, with an emphasis on holding down the deficit, will we be able to continue to steer our economy on an anti-inflationary course.

The American people want lower taxes and reduced inflation. It would be a cruel hoax if we were to give them a large tax cut which would set off inflationary pressures in the economy, thus reducing the purchasing power of the dollar.

IV. INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

In order to realize our domestic growth objectives, continued international economic cooperation is essential. This was exemplified by the recently concluded Bonn Summit. As economies have grown more interrelated, consultation and cooperation have become all the more necessary in areas such as domestic programs, trade, monetary matters, and energy. The United States, Japan, and Western European countries share responsibility for helping to insure continued world economic growth.

Most importantly, these nations must continue to work to achieve a freer and fairer trading system in order to bolster the interdependent world economy. Since freer trade can adversely affect sectors of any country's economy, any international trade agreement must come to terms with this problem.

With regard to energy policy, I have long maintained that any revenues raised by energy taxes should be used for the development of alternative energy sources, for spurring an increase in the supply of traditional energy sources, and for promoting fuel-efficient mass transit.

Each step that we take—to combat inflation, hold down interest rates, pass a moderate tax cut, foster international economic cooperation, and to develop our national energy policy—will play an important role in moving us along the path that is economically sound.

Following this path requires that we achieve a balance in Federal monetary and fiscal policy so that growth will not be impeded. The Federal Reserve, the Congress, and the administration must work cooperatively to insure that the specific policies they pursue do not—separately or collectively—overdo restraint and tip the country back into recession. In short, we need moderation—not fiscal or monetary overreaction to inflation. Moderation should be the watchword for fiscal year 1979.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the table, "GNP and Employment Impacts of the Economic Stimulus Package 1977–78, Preliminary Estimates," which was prepared for me by the Department of Labor, and the accompanying notes be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GNP AND EMPLOYMENT IMPACTS OF THE ECONOMIC STIMULUS PACKAGE 1977–78, PRELIMINARY ESTIMATES [1]

| | Budgetary impact [2] (billions) | 1977 change in GNP (billions) | Change in employment (thousands) | Budgetary impact [2] (billions) | 1978 change in GNP (billions) | Change in employment (thousands) | Totel change in employment (thousands) |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| A. CETA—PSE [3] | $0.7 | $1.5 | 83.7 | $3.5 | $7.4 | 410.8 | 494.5 |
| B. CETA—Youth and training grants [4] | 0 | ---------- | ---------- | 1.3 | 2.9 | 321.6 | 321.6 |
| C. Personal tax cut | 3.3 | 5.0 | 112.2 | 7.4 | 11.1 | 233.1 | 345.3 |
| D. Employment tax credit [5] (and other business tax incentives) | 1.6 | 2.4 | 54.4 | 2.6 | 3.9 | 81.9 | 136.3 |
| E. Local public works [6] | 0 | ---------- | ---------- | 1.6 | 3.5 | 57.1 | 57.1 |
| F. Antirecession fiscal assistance [7] | .5 | .9 | 19.9 | .6 | 1.0 | 21.9 | 41.8 |
| Total | 6.1 | 9.8 | [8] 270.2 | 16.9 | 29.8 | [9] 1,126.4 | 1,396.6 |

[1] Estimates are based on a spending muliplier of 2.2 and a (personal and corpoarte) tax multiplier of 1.5. Unless otherwise affected by specific program characteristics, the percentage change in employment was equal to 7/15 of the percentage change in real output. Yearly GNP and employment date were used to make these calculations.

[2] Source: Economic Report of the President, January 1978, table 3, p. 52.

[3] Assumes a 20-percent displacement rate and a job slot cost of $8,900. Assume 65 per cent of displaced funds are used for tax reduction, 35 percent for non-PSE expenditure.

[4] Assumes a job slot cost of $4,500.

[5] Assumes that the labor substitution effect was minimal and that the corporate tax multiplier is the same as the personal tax multiplier.

[6] Assumes 1 round employment effects are 50 percent of the usual initial employment effects of Government spending.

[7] Assume revenue sharing funds are distributed as follows: 35 percent goes toward increased expenditures; 65 percent toward tax reduction.

[8] Assuming a 1-percent change in employment lowers the employment rate by 0.71 percentage point; this number corresponds to a 0.22 percentage point lowering of the unemployment rate.

[9] Using the same relation as in footnote 8, this number corresponds to a 0.89 percentage point lowering of the unemployent rate.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that until the hour of 12 noon, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business only for the purpose of the entry of statements by Senators into the RECORD, the introduction of bills, resolutions, petitions, and memorials and committee reports.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into recess until the hour of 12 noon.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The assistant legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. ALLEN). Objection is heard.

The assistant legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Madam President, regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Regular order is called for.

The clerk will call the roll. The regular order is for the clerk to call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

The second assistant legislative clerk continued with the call of the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Use that microphone so that they can hear you.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The objection was made by Mr. ABOUREZK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I accept credit for that.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The Senator is forgiven.

The second assistant legislative clerk continued with the call of the roll.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Madam President, it is 12: 27. May I ask what was the last name that was called?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order during a quorum call.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I did not hear that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order during a quorum call.

Mr. ABOUREZK. SARBANES, was it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A parliamentary inquiry is not in order.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Debate is not in order, but I want to compliment the gracious lady from Alabama for her excellence in presiding over the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There does not seem a lot to preside over.

[Laughter.]

The second assistant legislative clerk continued and concluded the call of the roll.

OLDER AMERICANS ACT OF 1978

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 2850, which the clerk will state by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2850) to amend the Older Americans Act to provide for improved programs for the elderly, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Human Resources with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Older Americans Act of 1978".

(b) Except as otherwise specifically provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Older Americans Act of 1965.

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO THE OLDER AMERICANS ACT OF 1965

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 101. (a) The second sentence of section 201(a) is amended by striking out "Except for title VI and" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except".

(b)(1) Section 202(a) is amended by redesignating clauses (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10), (11), (12), (13), (14), (15), and (16) as clauses (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10), (11), (12), (13), (14), (15), (16), and (17), respectively, and by inserting immediately after the dash the following new clause:

"(1) serve as the effective and visible advocate for the elderly within the Department of Health Education, and Welfare and with other departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Government by maintaining active review and commenting responsibilities over all Federal policies effecting the aging;".

(c) Section 203 is amended to read as follows:

"FEDERAL AGENCY CONSULTATION

"SEC. 203. (a) The Commissioner, in carrying out the purposes and provisions of this Act, shall advise, and consult and cooperate with each Federal agency or department either proposing or administering programs or services substantially related to the purposes of this Act, with respect to such programs or services. Each Federal agency or department proposing to establish programs and services substantially related to the purposes of this Act shall consult with the Administration on Aging prior to the establishment of such programs and services. Each Federal agency administering any program substantially related to the purpose of this Act, particularly administering any program set forth in subsection (b) of this section, shall, to achieve appropriate coordination, consult and cooperate with the Administration on Aging in carrying out such program.

"(b) For the purposes of subsection (a) of this section, programs related to the purpose of this Act shall include—

"(1) the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act Act of 1973,

"(2) title II of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973,

"(3) title XX of the Social Security Act,

"(4) sections 231 and 232 of the National Housing Act,

"(5) the United States Housing Act of 1937,

"(6) section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959,

"(7) title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974,

"(8) section 222(a)(8) of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964,

"(9) the Community Schools and Comprehensive Community Education Act of 1978; and

"(10) sections 3, 5, 9, and 16 of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964.".

(d) Section 204(c) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the purposes of this section for fiscal year 1979 and fiscal year 1980, such sums as may be necessary.".

(e) Section 205(a) is amended by adding "rural and urban" after "of" the first time it appears.

(f)(1) Section 205(g) is amended to read as follows:

"(g) The Council shall undertake a thorough evaluation and study of programs conducted under this Act. Such study shall include—

"(1) an examination of the fundamental purposes of such programs, and the effectiveness of such programs in attaining such purposes;

"(2) an analysis of the means to identify accurately the elderly population in greatest need of such programs;

"(3) an analysis of numbers and incidence of low-income and minority participants in such programs;

"(4) an exploration of alternative methods for allocating funds under such programs to States, State units on aging, and area agencies on aging in an equitable and efficient manner, which will accurately reflect current condition and insures that such funds reach the areas of greatest current need and are effectively used for such areas;

"(5) an analysis of the need for area agencies on aging to provide direct services with the planning and service area;

"(6) an analysis of the special needs of rural elderly;

"(7) an analysis of the number of nonelderly handicapped eligible for services under part C and the number of nonelderly handicapped receiving services under such part; and

"(8) an analysis of the need for a separate program of legal services under this Act and of factors which may prohibit the funding of legal services under this Act without such a separate program.

The Council shall make an interim report to the President and to the Congress not later than nine months after the date of enactment of this Act and shall make a final report thereto not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act, on the result of its study under this section. Each such report shall contain such findings and recommendations, including recommendations for changes in the programs studied and for new legislation as the Council deems appropriate. Such reports shall not be submitted to any review outside of the Council before their transmittal to the President and the Congress, but the Commissioner on Aging may make to the Congress such recommendations with respect to the contents of the reports as he deems appropriate.".

(2) Sections 205 (h) and (i) are repealed.

(g) Section 211 is amended by inserting "(a)" after the section designation and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) No part of the costs of any project under any title of this Act may be treated as income or benefits to any participant in any program under any title of this Act for the purpose of any other program or provision of State or Federal law.".

(h) Title II is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"REDUCTION OF PAPERWORK

"SEC. 212. In order to reduce unnecessary, duplicative, or disruptive demands for information, the Commissioner, in consultation with State agencies designated under section 304(a)(2)(A), and other appropriate agencies and organizations, shall continually review and evaluate all requests by the Administration on Aging for information under this Act and take such action as may be necessary to reduce the paperwork required under this Act. The Commissioner shall request only such information as the Commissioner deems essential to carry out the purposes and provisions of this Act.".

GRANTS FOR STATE AND COMMUNITY PROGRAMS ON AGING

SEC. 102. Title III is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE III—GRANTS FOR STATE AND COMMUNITY PROGRAMS ON AGING

"PART A—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 301. (a) The Congress finds that—

"(1) approximately 3 per centum of the eligible population is presently served under community services programs authorized under this Act, 17 per centum of whom are minority group members;

"(2) approximately 1 per centum of the eligible population is presently served by the nutrition program authorized under this Act, 21 per centum of whom are minority group members;

"(3) there is program fragmentation at the National, State, and local levels which inhibits effective use of existing resources; and

"(4) coordination and consolidation of services allowing greater local determination to assess the need for services will facilitate achieving the goals of this Act.

"(b) It is the purpose of this title to encourage and assist State and local agencies to concentrate resources in order to develop greater capacity and foster the development of comprehensive and coordinated service systems to serve older individuals by entering into cooperative arrangements in each such State with State and local agencies, and with the providers of social services, including nutrition services and multipurpose senior centers, for the planning for the provision of, and for the provision of, social services, nutrition services, and multipurpose senior centers, in order to—

"(1) secure and maintain maximum independence and dignity in a home environment for older individuals capable of self-care with appropriate supportive services;

"(2) remove individual and social barriers to economic and personal independence for older individuals; and

"(3) provide a continuum of care for the vulnerable elderly.

"(c) It is the further purpose of this title to combine within a single title, subject to the modifications imposed by the provisions and requirements of this title, the programs authorized by this title, title V and title VII of this Act in fiscal years prior to fiscal year 1979, and funds appropriated to carry out this title shall be used solely for the purposes and for the assistance of the same types of programs authorized under the provisions of such titles.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 302. For the purpose of this title—

"(1) The term 'comprehensive and coordinated system' means a system for providing all necessary social services including nutrition services in a manner designed to—

"(A) facilitate accessibility to and utilization of all social services and nutrition services provided within the geographic area served by such system by any public or private agency or organization;

"(B) develop and make the most efficient use of social services and nutrition services in meeting the needs of older individuals; and

"(C) use available resources efficiently and with a minimum of duplication.

"(2) The term 'information and referral source' means a location where the State or any public or private agency or organization (A) maintains current information with respect to the opportunities and services available to older individuals, and develops current lists of older individuals in need of services and opportunities, and (B) employs a specially trained staff to inform older individuals of the opportunities and services which are available, and assists such individuals to take advantage of such opportunities and services.

"(3) The term 'legal services' means legal advice and representation by an attorney (including to the extent feasible, counseling or other appropriate assistance, under the supervision of an attorney, a paralegal, or law student) to elderly individuals with economic and social need.

"(4) The term 'planning and service area' means an area specified by a State agency under section 305(a)(1)(E).

"(5) The term 'State' means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the Northern Mariana Islands.

"(6) The term 'State agency' means the State agency designated by the State under section 305(a)(1).

"(7) The term 'unit of general purpose local government' means—

"(A) a political subdivision of the State whose authority is general and not limited to only one function or combination of related functions, or

"(B) an Indian tribal organization.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 303. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated $467,200,000 for the fiscal year 1979, and $527,200,000 for the fiscal year 1980, for the purpose of making grants under part B (Social Services) of this title.

"(b) There are authorized to be appropriated $375,000,000 for the fiscal year 1979, and $425,000,000 for the fiscal year 1980, for the purpose of making grants under part C (Nutrition Services) of this title.

"ALLOTMENT; FEDERAL SHARE

"SEC. 304. (a)(1) From the sums appropriated under parts B and C for the fiscal year 1979 and the fiscal year 1980, each State shall be allotted an amount which bears the same ratio to such sums as the population aged sixty or over in such State bears to the population aged sixty or over in all States, except that (A) no State shall be allotted less than one-half of 1 per centum of the sum appropriated for the fiscal year for which the determination is made; (B) Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands, shall each be allotted not less than one-fourth of 1 per centum of the sum appropriated for the fiscal year for which the determination is made; and (C) no State shall be allotted an amount less than the State received for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973. For the purpose of the exception contained in clause (A) of this paragraph only, the term 'State' does not include Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

"(2) The number of persons aged 60 or over in any State and in all States shall be determined by the Commissioner on the basis of the most recent and satisfactory data available to him.

"(b) Whenever the Commissioner determines that any amount allotted to a State under part B or C for a fiscal year under this section will not be used by such State for carrying out the purpose for which the allotment was made, he shall make such allotment available for carrying out such purpose to one or more other States to the extent he determines that such other States will be able to use such additional amount for carrying out such purpose. Any amount made available to a State from an appropriation for a fiscal year pursuant to the preceding sentence shall, for purposes of this title, be regarded as part of such State's allotment (as determined under the preceding provisions of this section) for such year, but shall remain available until the end of the succeeding fiscal year.

"(c) From any State's allotment under this section for a fiscal year—

"(1) such amount as the State agency determines, but not more than 8.5 per centum thereof, shall be available for paying such percentage as the agency determines, but not more than 75 per centum, of the cost of administration of area plans; and

"(2) the remainder of such allotment shall be available to such State only for paying such per centum as the State agency determines, but not more than 90 per centum in fiscal year 1979, and 85 per centum in fiscal year 1980, of the cost of social services and nutrition services authorized under parts B and C provided in the State as part of a comprehensive and coordinated system in planning and service areas for which there is an area plan approved by the State agency.

"ORGANIZATION

"SEC. 305. (a) In order for a State to be eligible to participate in programs of grants to States from allotments under this title—

"(1) the State shall, in accordance with regulations of the Commissioner, designate a State agency as the sole State agency to—

"(A) develop a State plan to be submitted to the Commissioner for approval under section 307,

"(B) administer the State plan within such State,

"(C) be primarily responsible for the coordination of all State activities related to the purposes of this Act,

"(D) serve as an effective and visible advocate for the elderly by reviewing and commenting upon all State plans, budgets, and policies which affect the elderly and providing technical assistance to any agency, organization, association, or individual representing the needs of the elderly; and

"(E) divide the State into distinct areas, in accordance with guidelines issued by the Commissioner, after considering the geographical distribution of individuals aged 60 and older in the State, the incidence of the need for social services, nutrition services, and multipurpose senior centers, the distribution of older individuals—

"(i) who have low incomes, and

"(ii) who are members of minority groups, residing in such areas, the distribution of resources available to provide such services or centers, the boundaries of existing areas within the State which were drawn for the planning or administration of social services programs, the location of units of general purpose local government within the State and any other relevant factors; and

"(2) the State agency designated pursuant to paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) determine for which planning and services area an area plan will be developed, in accordance with section 306, and for each such area designate, after consideration of the views offered by the unit or units of general purpose local government in such area, a public or private nonprofit agency or organization as the area agency on aging for such area;

"(B) provide assurances, satisfactory to the Commissioner, that the State agency will take into account, in connection with matters of general policy arising in the development and administration of the State plan for any fiscal year, the views of recipients of social services or nutrition services, or multipurpose senior centers provided under such plan;

"(C) develop a formula, in accordance with guidelines issued by the Commissioner for the distribution within the State of funds received under this title, taking into account, to the maximum extent feasible, the best available statistics on the geographical distribution of individuals aged sixty and older in the State, the incidence of such low-income individuals, and the number of such individuals who are members of minority groups, and publish such formula for review and comment;

"(D) submit its formula developed under paragraph (C) to the Commissioner for review and comment; and

"(E) provide assurances that preference will be given to providing services to older individuals with the greatest economic and social needs and include proposed methods of carrying out the preference in the State plan. In carrying out the requirement of clause (1) of this subsection, the State may designate as a planning and service area any unit of general purpose local government which has a population of one hundred thousand or more. In any case in which a unit of general purpose local government makes application under the preceding sentence to the State to be designated as a planning and service area, the State agency shall, upon request, provide an opportunity for a hearing to such unit of local government. A state may designate as a planning and service area pursuant to clause (1) of this subsection, any region within the State recognized for purposes of areawide planning which includes one or more such units of general purpose local government when the State determines that the designation of such a regional planning and service area is necessary for, and will enhance, the effective administration of the programs authorized by this title. The State may include in any planning and service area designated pursuant to clause (1) of this subsection such additional areas adjacent to the unit of general purpose local government or regions so designated as the State determines to be necessary for, and will enhance the effective administration of the programs authorized by this title. The Governor of each State in which a planning and service area crosses State boundaries, or in which an interstate Indian reservation is located, may apply to the Commissioner to request redesignation as an interstate planning and service area comprising the entire metropolitan area or Indian reservation. If the Commissioner approves such an application, he shall adjust the State allotments of the areas within the planning and service area in which the interstate planning and service area is established to reflect the number of elderly within the area who will be served by an interstate planning and service area not within the State.

"(b) An area agency on aging designated under subsection (a) of this section shall be—

"(1) an established office of aging which is operating within a planning and service area designated pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, or

"(2) any office or agency of a unit of general purpose local government, which is designated for this purpose by the chief elected official of such unit, or

"(3) any office or agency designated by the appropriate chief elected officials of any combination of units of general purpose local government to act on behalf of such combination for this purpose, or

"(4) any public or nonprofit private agency in a planning and service area which is under the supervision or direction for this purpose of the designated State agency and which can engage in the planning or provision of a broad range of social services, or nutrition services within such planning and service area, and shall provide assurance, determined adequate by the State agency, that the area agency will have the ability to develop an area plan and to carry out, directly or through contractual or other arrangements, a program pursuant to the plan within the planning and service area. In designating an area agency on aging within the planning and service area or within any local unit of government designated as a planning and service area the State shall give preference to an established office on aging, unless the State agency finds that no such office within the planning and service area will have the capacity to carry out the area plan.

"AREA PLANS

"SEC. 306. (a) Each area agency on aging designated pursuant to section 305(a)(2)(A) shall, in order to be approved by the State agency, prepare and develop an area plan for a planning and service area for a two-year period with such annual adjustments as may be necessary. Each such plan shall—

"(1) provide through a comprehensive and coordinated system, for social services, nutrition services, and, where appropriate, for the establishment, maintenance, or construction of multipurpose senior centers, within the planning and service area covered by the plan, including determining the extent of need for social services, nutrition services, and multipurpose senior centers in such area (taking into consideration, among other things, the number of older individuals with low incomes, and minority older individuals residing in such area), evaluating the effectiveness of the use of resources in meeting such need, and entering into agreements with providers of social services, or nutrition services, or multipurpose senior centers in such area, for the provision of such services or centers to meet such needs;

"(2) provide assurances that at least 50 per centum of the amount allotted to the planning and service area will be expended on the delivery of (A) services associated with access to services (transportation, outreach, and information and referral), (B) in-home services (homemaker and home health aide, visiting and telephone reassurance and chore-maintenance), and (C) legal services, and that some funds will be expended for each such category of the services;

"(3) designate a focal point for comprehensive service delivery in each community to encourage the maximum collocation and coordination of services for older individuals;

"(4) provide assurances that preference will be given to providing services to older individuals with the greatest economic and social needs and include proposed methods of carrying out the preference in the area plan;

"(5) provide that the area agency on aging will—

"(A) conduct periodic evaluations of activities carried out pursuant to the area plan:

"(B) render appropriate technical assistance to providers of social services, nutrition services, or multipurpose senior centers in the planning and service area covered by the area plan;

"(C) take into account in connection with matters of general policy arising in the development and administration of the area plan, the views of recipients of services under such plan;

"(D) serve as the advocate and focal point for the elderly within the community by monitoring, evaluating, and commenting upon all policies, programs, hearings, levies, and community actions which will affect the elderly;

"(E) where possible, enter into arrangements with organizations providing day care services for children so as to provide opportunities for older individuals to aid or assist on a voluntary basis in the delivery of such services to children;

"(F) where possible, enter into arrangements with local educational agencies, institutions of higher education and nonprofit organizations, to use services provided for older persons under the Community Schools and Comprehensive Community Education Act of 1978;

"(G) establish an advisory council consisting of older individuals who are participants or who are eligible to participate in programs assisted under this Act, local elected officials, and the general public, to advise continuously the area agency on all matters relating to the development of the plan, the administration of the plan and operations conducted under the plan;

"(H) develop and publish methods by which priority service is determined, particularly with respect to the delivery of services under clause (2); and

"(I) establish effective and efficient procedures for coordination between the programs assisted under this title and programs described in section 203(b).

"(b)(1) Each State, in approving area agency plans under this section, may, for the fiscal years 1979 and 1980, waive any particular requirement relating to the delivery of services or the establishment or operation of centers which such agency cannot meet because of the consolidation authorized by the Older Americans Act of 1978.

"(2) Each State, in approving area agency plans under this section, may waive the requirement described in clause (2) of subsection (a) if the area agency on aging can demonstrate that the agency is already meeting the service needs described in such clause (2).

"(c)(1) Subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, an area agency on aging designated under section 305(a)(2)(A), or, in areas of a State where no such agency has been designated, the State agency, is authorized to enter into agreements with agencies administering programs under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and titles VI, XIX, and XX of the Social Security Act for the purpose of developing and implementing plans for meeting the common need for transportation services of individuals receiving benefits under such Acts and older individuals participating in programs authorized by title III of this Act.

"(2) Pursuant to an agreement entered into under paragraph (1), funds appropriated under this title may be used to purchase transportation services for older individuals and may be pooled with funds made available for the provision of transportation services under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and titles VI, XIX, and XX if the Social Security Act.

"STATE PLANS

"SEC. 307. (a) Except as provided in section 309(a) each State, in order to be eligible for grants from its allotment under this title for any fiscal year, shall submit to the Commissioner a State plan for a two-year period with such annual revisions as are necessary which meets such criteria as the Commissioner may by regulation prescribe. Each such plan shall—

"(1) provide that the State agency will evaluate the need for social services, nutrition services and multipurpose senior centers within the State and determine the extent to which existing public or private programs meet such need;

"(2) provide for the use of such methods of administration (including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, except that the Commissioner shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, or compensation of an individual employed in accordance with such methods) as are necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the plan, and, where necessary, provide for the reorganization and reassignment of functions to assure such efficient administration;

"(3) provide that the State agency will afford an opportunity for a hearing upon request to any area agency on aging submitting a plan under this title, to any provider of a service under such a plan, or to any applicant to provide services under such a plan;

"(4) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form, and containing such information, as the Commissioner may require, and comply with such requirements as the Commission may impose to insure the correctness of such reports;

"(5) provide satisfactory assurance that such fiscal control and fund accounting procedures will be adopted as may be necessary to assure proper disbursement of, and accounting for, Federal funds paid under this title to the State, including any such funds paid to the recipients of a grant or contract;

"(6) provide that the State agency will conduct periodic evaluations of activities and projects carried out under the State plan;

"(7) provide that each area agency on aging designated pursuant to section 305(a)(2)(A) will develop and submit to the State agency for approval an area plan which complies with the provisions of section 306;

"(8) provide for establishing and maintaining information and referral sources in sufficient numbers of assure that all older individuals in the State who are not furnished adequate information and referral sources pursuant to section 306(a)(3) will have reasonably convenient access to such sources;

"(9) provide that no social services, including nutrition services, will be directly provided by the State agency or an area agency on aging, except where, in the judgment of the State agency, provision of such service by the State agency or an area agency on aging is necessary to assure an adequate supply of such service;

"(10) provide that subject to the requirements of merit employment systems of State and local governments, preference shall be given to persons aged sixty or over for any staff positions (full time or part time) in State and area agencies for which such persons qualify;

"(11) provide assurances that the State agency will—

"(A) establish and operate, either directly or by contract or other arrangement with any public agency or other appropriate private nonprofit organization which is not responsible for licensing or certifying long-term care services in the State, a long-term care ombudsman program which will—

"(i) investigate and resolve complaints made by or on behalf of older individuals who are residents of long-term care facilities relating to administrative action which may adversely affect the health, safety, welfare, and rights of such residents, monitor the development and implementation of Federal, State, and local laws, regulations, and policies with respect to long-term care facilities in that State,

"(ii) provide information as appropriate to public agencies regarding the problems of older individuals residing in long-term care facilities;

"(iii) provide for training volunteers and promote the development of citizen organizations to participate in the ombudsman program; and

"(iv) and such other activities as the Commissioner deems appropriate,

"(B) establish procedures for appropriate access by the ombudsmen to long-term care facilities and patients' records, including procedures to protect the confidentiality of such records and ensure that the identity of any complainant or resident will not be disclosed without the written consent of such complainant or resident, or upon court order; and

"(C) establish a statewide uniform reporting system to collect and analyze data relating to complaints and conditions in long-term care facilities for the purpose of identifying and resolving significant problems with provision for submission of such data to the Commissioner on a regular basis.

"(12) provide that with respect to nutrition services—

"(A) each project providing nutrition services will be available to individuals aged 60 or over, to their spouses, and, with respect to home-delivered meals, to home-bound nonelderly handicapped individuals to the extent feasible, and such services to the home-bound nonelderly handicapped are financed to the extent feasible from sources other than funds made available under section 303(b);

"(B) each project providing nutrition services will provide meals in a congregate setting, except that each such project may provide home-delivered meals based upon a determination of need made by the recipient of a grant or contract entered into under this title;

"(C) a site for such services and for comprehensive social services is furnished in as close proximity to the majority of eligible individuals' residence as feasible with particular attention upon a multipurpose senior center, a school, a church, or other appropriate community facility, preferably within walking distance where possible, and where appropriate transportation to such site is furnished or home-delivered meals are furnished to eligible individuals who are homebound;

"(D) each project will establish outreach activities which assure that the maximum number of eligible individuals may have an opportunity to participate;

"(E) each project will provide special menus, where feasible and appropriate, to meet the particular dietary needs arising from the health requirements, religious requirements, or ethnic backgrounds of eligible individuals; and

"(F) each area agency will give consideration, where feasible, in the furnishing of home-delivered meals to the use of organizations, such as meals on wheels groups, which (i) have demonstrated an ability to provide home-delivered meals efficiently and reasonably and (ii) furnish assurances to the area agency that such an organization will maintain efforts to solicit voluntary support and that funds made available under this title to that organization will not be used to supplant funds from non-Federal sources;

"(13) provide that with respect to the acquiring, altering, or renovation of existing facilities (or the construction of new facilities where, as determined by the State agency, there are no suitable structures available to serve as a focal point for the delivery of services assisted under this title) to serve as multipurpose senior centers—

"(A) the plan contains or is supported by reasonable assurances that (i) for not less than ten years after purchase or construction, the facility will be used for the purpose for which it is to be purchased or constructed, unless for unusual circumstances, the Commissioner waives the requirement of this subclause, (ii) sufficient funds will be available to meet the non-Federal share of the cost of purchase or construction of the facility, (iii) sufficient funds will be available, when purchase or construction is completed, for effective use of the facility for the purpose for which it is being purchased or constructed, and (iv) the facility will not be used and is not intended to be used for sectarian instruction or as a place for religious worship;

"(B) the plan contains or is supported by reasonable assurances that there are no existing facilities in the community suitable for leasing as a multi-purpose senior center;

"(C) the plans and specifications for the facility are in accordance with regulations relating to minimum standards of construction, promulgated with particular emphasis on securing compliance with the requirements of the Act of August 12, 1968, commonly known as the Architectural Barriers Act of 1968;

"(D) the plan contains or is supported by adequate assurance that any laborer or mechanic employed by any contractor or subcontractors in the performance of work on the facility will be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing for similar work in their locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Act of March 3, 1931 (40 U.S.C. 276a–276a–(5); commonly known as the Davis-Bacon Act), and the Secretary of Labor shall have, with respect to the labor standards specified in this paragraph, the authority and functions set forth in reorganization plan number 14 of 1950 (15 F.R. 3176; 64 Stat. 1267), and section 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934 (40 U.S.C. 276c); and

"(E) the plan contains assurances that the State agency will consult with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development with respect to the technical adequacy of any proposed alteration or renovation; and

"(14) provide that with respect to legal services—

"(A) the plan contains assurances that area agencies on aging will (i) enter into contracts with providers of legal services which can demonstrate the experience or capacity to deliver legal services; (ii) include in any such contract provisions to assure that any recipient of funds under division (i) of this subclause will be subject to the restrictions of and regulations promulgated under the Legal Services Corporation Act (other than those governing eligibility for legal assistance thereunder and those governing membership of local governing boards); and (iii) attempt to involve the private bar in legal services activities authorized under this title, including the provision of subsidies to groups within the private bar furnishing services to older individuals on a reduced fee basis;

"(B) the plan contains assurances that no legal services will be furnished to individuals eligible for legal assistance under the Legal Services Corporation Act, unless the provider of services is a recipient of funds under the Legal Services Corporation Act or unless there is no project funded under such Act in the area concerned in which case service may be furnished to such individuals as part of a program designed to provide legal services to all elderly individuals with social and economic need; and

"(C) the plan contains assurances, to the extent practicable, that legal services furnished pursuant to the plan will be in addition to any legal services for older individuals being furnished with funds from sources other than this Act and that existing levels of legal services for older individuals will be maintained.

"(c)(1) The Commissioner shall approve any State plan which he finds fulfills the requirements of subsection (a) of this section.

"(2) The Commissioner, in approving any State plan under this section may, for the fiscal years 1979 and 1980, waive any particular requirement relating to the delivery of services or the establishment or operation of centers which such State agency cannot meet because of the consolidation authorized by the Older Americans Act of 1978 or because meeting such requirement would reduce or jeopardize the quality of services under such Act.

"(d) The Commissioner shall not make a final determination disapproving any State plan, or any modification thereof, or make a final determination that a State is ineligible under section 305, without first affording the State reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing.

"(e) Whenever the Commissioner, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency, finds that—

"(1) the State is not eligible under section 305,

"(2) the State plan has been so changed that it no longer complies substantially with the provisions of subsection (a), or

"(3) in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any such provision of subsection (a), the Commissioner shall notify such State agency that no further payments from its allotments under section 304 and section 309 will be made to the State (or, in his discretion, that further payments to the State will be limited to projects under or portions of the State plan not affected by such failure), until he is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied, no further payments shall be made to such State from its allotments under section 304 and section 309 (or payments shall be limited to projects under or portions of the State plan not affected by such failure). The Commissioner shall, in accordance with regulations he shall prescribe, disburse the funds so withheld directly to any public or nonprofit private organization or agency or political subdivision of such State submitting an approved plan in accordance with the provisions of section 307 and section 309. Any such payment shall be matched in the proportions specified in sections 304 and 309.

"(f) A State which is dissatisfied with a final action of the Commissioner under subsection (b), (c), or (d) may appeal to the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the State is located, by filing a petition with such court within sixty days after such final action. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commissioner, or any officer designated by him for that purpose. The Commissioner thereupon shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which he based his action, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Commissioner or to set it aside, in whole or in part, temporarily or permanently, but until the filing of the record, the Commissioner may modify or set aside his order. The findings of the Commissioner as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Commissioner to take further evidence, and the Commissioner may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify his previous action, and shall file in the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. The judgment of the court affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any action of the Commissioner shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless so specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commissioner's action.

"PLANNING, COORDINATION, EVALUATION, AND ADMINISTRATION OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 308. (a)(1) Amounts appropriated pursuant to section 303 may be used to make grants to States for paying such percentages as each State agency determines, but not more than 75 per centum, of the cost of the administration of its State plan, including the preparation of the State plan, the evaluation of activities carried out under such plan, the collection of data and the carrying out of analyses related to the need for social services, nutrition services, and multipurpose senior centers within the State, and dissemination of information so obtained, the conduct of long-term care ombudsman program, the provision of short-term training to personnel of public or nonprofit private agencies and organizations engaged in the operation of programs authorized by this Act, and the carrying out of demonstration projects of statewide significance relating to the initiation, expansion, or improvement of services assisted under this title.

"(2) Any sums allotted to a State under this section for part of the cost of the administration of its State plan which the State determines is not needed for such purpose may be used by such State to supplement the amount available under section 304(c)(1) to cover part of the cost of the administration of area plans.

"(3) Any State which has designated a single planning and service area pursuant to section 305(a)(1)(E) covering all, or substantially all, of the older individuals in such State, as determined by the Commissioner, may elect to pay part of the costs of the administration of State and area plans either out of sums allotted under this section or out of sums made available for the administration of area plans pursuant to section 304(c)(1), but shall not pay such costs out of sums allotted under both such sections.

"(b)(1) From the sums appropriated for any fiscal year under section 303 for carrying out the purposes of this section, each State shall be allotted an amount which bears the same ratio to such sums as the population aged sixty or over in such State bears to the population aged sixty or over in all States, except that (A) no State shall be allotted less than one-half of 1 per centum of the sum appropriated for the fiscal year for which the determination is made, or $275,000, whichever is greater, and (B) Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the Northern Mariana Islands shall be each allotted no less than one-fourth of 1 per centum of the sum appropriated for the fiscal year for which the determination is made, or $75,000, whichever is greater. For the purpose of the exception contained in clause (A) of this paragraph, the term 'State' does not include Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

"(2) From amounts allotted under paragraph (1) of this subsection each State shall receive an amount not less than 6 per centum of the sums allotted for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 307(a)(11).

"(3)(A) Any State which desires to receive amounts, in addition to amounts allotted to such State under paragraph (1), to be used in the administration of its State plan in accordance with subsection (a) may transmit an application to the Commissioner in accordance with this paragraph. Any such application shall be transmitted in such form, and according to such procedures, as the Commissioner may require, except that such application may not be made as part of, or as an amendment to, the State plan.

"(B) The Commissioner may approve any application transmitted by a State under subparagraph (A) if the Commissioner determines, based upon a particularized showing of needs, that—

"(i) the State will be unable to fully and effectively administer its State plan and to carry out programs and projects authorized by this title unless such additional amounts are made available by the Commissioner;

"(ii) The State is making full and effective use of its allotment under paragraph (1) and of the personnel of the State agency and area agencies designated under section 305 in the administration of its State plan in accordance with subsection (a); and

"(iii) the State agency and area agencies of such State designated under section 305 are carrying out, on a full-time basis, programs and activities which are in furtherance of the purposes of this Act.

"(C) The Commissioner may approve that portion of the amount requested by a State in its application under subparagraph (A) which he determines has been justified in such application.

"(D) Amounts which any State may receive in any fiscal year under this paragraph may not exceed three-fourths of 1 per centum of the sum of the amounts allotted under section 304(a) to such State to carry out the State plan for such fiscal year.

"(E) No application by a State under subparagraph (A) shall be approved unless it contains assurances that no amounts received by such State under this paragraph will be used to hire any person to fill a job opening created by the action of such State in laying off or terminating the employment of any regular employee not supported under this Act in anticipation of filling the vacancy so created by hiring an employee to be supported through use of amounts received under this paragraph.

"(4) Each State shall be entitled to an allotment under this section for any fiscal year in an amount which is not less than the amount of the allotment to which such State was entitled under paragraph (1) for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975.

"(5) The number of individuals aged sixty or over in any State and in all States shall be determined by the Commissioner on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available to him.

"(c) The amounts of any State's allotment under subsection (b) for any fiscal year which the Commissioner determines will not be required for that year shall be reallotted, from time to time and on such dates during such year as the Commissioner may fix, to other States in proportion to the original allotments to such States under subsection (b) for that year, but with such proportionate amount for any of such other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sums the Commissioner estimates such State needs and will be able to use for such year; and the total of such reductions shall be similarly realloted among the States whose proportionate amounts are not so reduced. Such reallotments shall be made on the basis of the State plan so approved, after taking into consideration the population aged sixty or over. Any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection during a year shall be deemed part of its allotment under subsection (b) for that year.

"PAYMENTS

"SEC. 309. (a) Payments of grants or contracts under this title may be made (after necessary adjustments resulting from previously made overpayments or underpayments) in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in such installments, as the Commissioner may determine. From a State's allotment for a fiscal year which is available pursuant to section 308 the Commissioner may pay to a State which does not have a State plan approved under section 307 such amounts as he deems appropriate for the purpose of assisting such State in developing a State plan.

"(b)(1) Beginning with fiscal year 1979, not less than 50 per centum of the non-Federal share (pursuant to section 304(c)) of the total expenditures under the State plan shall be met from funds from State or local public sources.

"(2) Funds required to meet the non-Federal share (pursuant to section 304(c)(2)), in amounts exceeding the non-Federal share required prior to fiscal year 1980, shall be met from State sources.

"(c) A State's allotment under section 304 for a fiscal year shall be reduced by the percentage (if any) by which its expenditures for such year from State sources under its State plan approved under section 307 are less than its expenditures from such sources for the preceding fiscal year.

"AVAILABILITY OF SURPLUS COMMODITIES

"SEC. 310. (a)(1) Agricultural commodities and products purchased by the Secretary of Agriculture under section 32 of the Act of August 24, 1935 (7 U.S.C. 612c), shall be donated to a recipient of a grant or contract to be used for providing nutrition services in accordance with the provisions of this title.

"(2) The Commodity Credit Corporation shall dispose of food commodities under section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1431) by donating them to a recipient of a grant or contract to be used for providing nutrition services in accordance with the provisions of this title.

"(3) Dairy products purchased by the Secretary of Agriculture under section 709 of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1965 (7 U.S.C. 1446a-1) shall be used to meet the requirements of programs providing nutrition services in accordance with the provisions of this title.

"(4) In donating commodities pursuant to this subsection, the Secretary of Agriculture shall maintain an annually programed level of assistance of not less than 15 cents per meal during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1976, and 25 cents per meal during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1977, and during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1978, and 30 cents per meal during the two succeeding fiscal years. The amount specified in this paragraph shall be adjusted on an annual basis for each fiscal year after June 30, 1975, to reflect changes in the series for food away from home of the Consumer Price Index published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor. Such adjustment shall be computed to the nearest one-fourth cent. Among the commodities delivered under this subsection, the Secretary shall give special emphasis to high protein foods, meat, and meat alternates. The Secretary of Agriculture, in consultation with the Commissioner, is authorized to prescribe the terms and conditions respecting the donating of commodities pursuant to this subsection.

"(b) The Secretary of Agriculture in consultation with the Commissioner shall, within ninety days after the date of enactment of the Older Americans Act of 1978, issue regulations clarifying the use of food stamps under this title.

"(c)(1) During each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1975, and June 30, 1976, and during the period beginning June 1, 1976, and ending September 30, 1976, the Secretary of Agriculture shall purchase high protein foods, meat, and meat alternates on the open market, at prices not in excess of market prices, out of funds appropriated under this section, as determined under paragraph (3), for distribution to recipients of grants or contracts to be used for providing nutrition services in accordance with the provisions of this title. High protein foods, meat, and meat alternates purchased by the Secretary of Agriculture under this subsection shall be grown and produced in the United States.

"(2) High protein foods, meat, and meat alternates donated under this subsection shall not be considered donated commodities for purposes of meeting the requirement of subsection (a)(4) with respect to the annually programed level of assistance under subsection (a).

"(3) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary in order to carry out the program established under paragraph (1).

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a State may, for purposes of the programs authorized by this Act, elect to receive cash payments in lieu of donated foods for all or any portion of its projects. In any case in which a State makes such an election, the Secretary of Agriculture shall make cash payments to such State in an amount equivalent in value to the donated foods which the State otherwise would have received if such State had retained its commodity distribution facilities.

"(2) When such payments are made, the State agency shall promptly and equitably disburse any cash it receives in lieu of commodities to recipients of grants or contracts. Such disbursements shall only be used by such recipients of grants or contracts to purchase United States agricultural commodities and other foods for their nutrition projects.

"MULTIPURPOSE SENIOR CENTERS: RECAPTURE OF PAYMENTS

"SEC. 311. If, within ten years after purchase of any facility for which funds have been paid under this title—

"(1) the owner of the facility ceases to be a public or nonprofit private agency or organization, or

"(2) the facility ceases to be used for the purposes for which it was purchased (unless the Commissioner determines, in accordance with regulations that there is good cause for releasing the applicant or other owner from the obligation to do so), the United States shall be entitled to recover from the applicant or other owner of the facility an amount which bears to the then value of the facility (or so much thereof as constituted an approved project or projects) the same ratio as the amount of such Federal funds bore to the cost of the facility financed with the aid of such funds. Such value shall be determined by agreement of the parties or by action brought in the United States district court for the district in which such facility is situated.

"AUDIT

"SEC. 312. The Commissioner and the Comptroller General of the United States or any of their duly authorized representatives shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records that are pertinent to a grant or contract received under this title.

"PART B—SOCIAL SERVICES

"PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 321. (a) The Commissioner shall carry out a program for making grants to States pursuant to State plans approved under section 307 for any of the following social services:

"(1) health, continuing education, welfare, informational, recreational, homemaker, counseling, or referral services;

"(2) transportation services to facilitate access to social services or nutrition services, or both;

"(3) services designed to encourage and assist older individuals to use the facilities and services available to them;

"(4) services designed to assist older individuals to obtain adequate housing including residential repair and renovation projects designed to enable older indivduals to maintain their homes in conformity with minimum housing standards or to adapt homes to meet the needs of elderly individuals suffering from physical disabilities;

"(5) services designed to assist older individuals in avoiding institutionalization; including preinstitution evaluation and screening and home health services, homemaker services, shopping services, escort services, reader services, letter writing services, and other similar services designed to assist such individuals to continue living independently in a home environment;

"(6) services designed to provide legal and other counseling services and assistance, including tax counseling and assistance and financial counseling, to older individuals;

"(7) services designed to enable older individuals to attain and maintain phyiscal and mental well-being through programs of regular physical activity and exercise;

"(8) services designed to provide health screening to detect or prevent illness, or both, that occur most frequently in older individuals;

"(9) services designed to provide preretirement and second career counseling for older individuals; or

"(10) any other services;

if such services meet standards prescribed by the Commissioner and are necessary for the general welfare of older individuals.

"(b) The Commissioner shall carry out a program for making grants to States pursuant to State plans approved under section 307 for the acquisition, alteration, renovation of existing facilities, including mobile units, and, where appropriate, construction of facilities to serve as multipurpose senior centers which shall be community facilities for the organization and provision of a broad spectrum of services, including provision of health, social, nutritional and educational services and provisions of facilities for recreational activities for older individuals.

"PART C—NUTRITION SERVICES

"SEC. 331. The Commissioner shall carry out a program for making grants to States pursuant to State plans approved under section 307 for the establishment and operation of nutrition projects—

"(1) which, five or more days a week, provide at least one meal per day and any additional meals which the recipient of a grant or contract under this title may elect to provide, each of which assures a minimum of one-third of the daily recommended dietary allowances as established by the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council,

"(2) which may be provided in congregate settings or may be home-delivered meals,

"(3) which may include the furnishing of food from mobile units, where appropriate, and

"(4) which may include nutrition education services and other appropriate nutrition services for older individuals.".

TRAINING, RESEARCH, AND SECRETARIAL PROGRAMS

SEC. 103. (a) (1) Section 401 is amended to read as follows:

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 401. (a) The purpose of this part is to develop and implement a national manpower policy in the field of aging. Such a policy shall reflect the present and future needs for adequately trained personnel in all programs serving the elderly recognizing the continual growth of the elderly population of the United States.

"(b) The policy required by this title shall be developed and implemented by the Commissioner in cooperation with other departments and agencies of the Federal Government including the Public Health Service, the Health Care Financing Administration, the Social Security Administration, the National Institutes of Health, and in particular the National Institute on Aging, the Administration for Public Services, the Rehabilitation Services Administration, the Veterans' Administration, the Department of Labor, the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the Department of Transportation, State employment agencies, State and area agencies on aging, and other appropriate agencies.".

(2) Section 402 is amended to read as follows:

"APPRAISING PERSONNEL NEEDS IN THE FIELD OF AGING

"SEC. 402. (a) The Commissioner shall, in cooperation with representatives referred to in section 401, assess the Nation's existing and future personnel needs in the field of aging, and evaluate all programs serving the elderly at all levels of government recognizing the continual growth of the elderly population. The assessment required by this section shall be conducted in accordance with the national manpower policy developed under section 401.

"(b) The assessment required by this section shall be submitted biennially to the Congress. Each such report shall indicate the impact of the assessment on the national manpower policy and plans for the future.".

(3) Section 403 is repealed.

(4) (A) Section 404(a) is amended—

(i) by striking out "The" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In accordance with the demands set forth in the national manpower policy, the",

(ii) by striking out "fields related to the purposes of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "the field of aging";

(iii) by striking out "section 304" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 305".

(B) Section 404(a)(1) is amended by deleting "purposes of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "field of aging".

(C) Section 404(a) is amended by redesignating paragraphs (5) and (6) as paragraphs (6) and (7), respectively, and by inserting the following new paragraph:

"(5) to assess future national personnel needs with respect to the aging with special emphasis on the needs of aged minority group individuals and the need for the training of minority group individuals to meet such needs,".

(5) Section 404 is further amended by redesignating subsections (b) and (c) as subsections (c) and (d), respectively, and by inserting the following new subsection:

"(b) The Commissioner may make grants to State agencies referred to in section 305, State or local educational agencies, institutions of higher education as defined in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965, or other public or nonprofit private agencies, organizations, or institutions, and he may enter into contracts with any agency, institution, or organization for the purpose of—

"(1) publicizing available opportunities for careers in the field of aging;

"(2) encouraging qualified persons to enter or reenter the field of aging; or

"(3) preparing and disseminating materials including audiovisual materials and printed materials, for use in recruitment and training of persons employed or preparing for employment in carrying out programs related to the purposes of this Act.".

(b) Section 412 is amended to read as follows:

"MODEL PROJECTS

"SEC. 412. (a) The Commissioner may, after consultation with the State agency, make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization or contracts with any agency or organization within such State for paying part or all of the cost of developing or operating statewide, regional, metropolitan area, county, city, or community model projects which show promise of expanding or improving social services or nutrition services or otherwise promote the well-being of older individuals.

"(b) In making grants and contracts under this section, the Commissioner shall give special consideration to projects designed to—

"(1) assist in meeting the special housing needs of older individuals by (A) providing financial assistance to such persons, who own their own homes, necessary to enable them to make the repairs or renovations to their homes, which are necessary for them to meet minimum standards, (B) studying and demonstrating methods of adapting existing housing, or construction of new housing, to meet the needs of older individuals suffering from physical disabilities, and (C) demonstrating alternative methods of relieving older individuals of the burden of real property taxes on their homes;

"(2) provide continuing education to older individuals designed to enable them to lead more productive lives by broadening the educational, cultural, or social awareness of such older individuals, emphasizing, where possible, free tuition arrangements with colleges and universities;

"(3) provide preretirement education information, and relevant services (including the training of personnel to carry out such programs and the conducting of research with respect to the development and operation of such programs) to individuals planning retirement;

"(4) provide services to assist in meeting the particular needs of the physically and mentally impaired older individuals including special transportation and escort services, homemaker, home health and shopping services, reader services, letter writing services, and other services designed to assist such individuals in leading a more independent life; or

"(5) enable State agencies on aging and other public and private nonprofit organizations to assist in the promotion and development of ombudsman services for residents of nursing homes;

"(6) meet the special needs of, and improve the delivery of services to, older individuals who are not receiving adequate services under other provisions of this Act, with emphasis on the needs of low-income, minority, Indian, limited-English-speaking individuals and rural elderly;

"(7) assist older individuals to remain within their communities and out of institutions and to maintain their independent living by (A) providing financial assistance for the establishment and operation of senior ambulatory care day centers (providing a planned schedule of health, therapeutic, education, nutrition, recreational and social services at least twenty-four hours per week, transportation arrangements at low or no cost for participants to and from the center, a midday meal, outreach and public information programs, and opportunities for maximum participation of senior participants and senior volunteers in the planning and operation of such center), and (B) maintaining or initiating arrangements (or providing reasonable assurances that such arrangements will be maintained or initiated, with the agency of the State concerned which administers or supervises the administration of a State plan approved under title XX of the Social Security Act, and with other appropriate social services agencies receiving, or reimbursed through, Federal financial assistance, for the payment of all or a part of such center's costs in providing services to eligible individuals; or

"(8) assist older individuals to remain within their community and out of institutions through independent living arrangements by exploring what mix of specific services and facilities including shelter, nutrition, homemaker, and home health services, are appropriate for such older individuals.".

(c) Title IV is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"COMMUNITY LONG-TERM CARE MODEL PROJECT

"SEC. 413. (a)(1) The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to selected State agencies designated under section 305(a)(1) and, in consultation with State agencies, to selected area agencies on aging designated under section 305(a)(2)(A), or both, and other public agencies and private nonprofit organizations, associations, and groups to support the development of model projects to demonstrate innovative approaches to comprehensive and coordinated long-term care service delivery.

"(2) A grant under this section may be made to pay part or all of the estimated cost of a program (including start-up cost) for a period not to exceed three years, except that no funds may be used to pay for direct services which are eligible for reimbursement under title XVIII, title XIX or title XX of the Social Security Act.

"(3) A grant made under this section shall be used for the development of programs to provide for innovative comprehensive and coordinated long-term care services which may include but are not limited to adult day care, supported living in public, nonprofit housing, family respite services, home health, homemaker, and other rehabilitative and maintenance in-home services, and geriatric health maintenance organizations, which were previously unavailable to the individuals to be served and which, at a minimum, provide for identification and assessment of the long-term care needs of individual elderly persons, referral of such persons to the appropriate services, follow-up and evaluation of the continued appropriateness of such services with provision for re-referral as appropriate, and manpower training programs as appropriate.

"(b) In awarding grants under this section, preference shall be given to agencies and organizations which demonstrate that—

"(1) the agency possesses the capability to establish community-based long-term care programs,

"(2) a need exists for the establishment of such programs in the area to be served, and

"(3) in the case of a State, the State agency has a plan for statewide or designated regions of the State containing provisions designed to maximize access to elderly individuals for long-term care services.

"(c) Agencies and organizations assisted under this section shall establish procedures for evaluating the program assisted under this section, with respect to the benefits accruing to persons receiving assistance, the feasibility of the administrative model used for comprehensive coordination of services, and the comparative costs and quality of services provided, and shall submit such evaluation to the Commissioner on a periodic basis.

"(d) In carrying out the provisions of this section, the Commissioner shall seek to involve appropriate Federal departments and agencies and shall periodically report to Congress on the impact of grants made, on the experiences of grantees in meeting the requirements of this section, and on the comparative benefits and cost of projects assisted under this section.

"(e) There are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1979, and $15,000,000 for the fiscal year 1980 to carry out the provisions of this section. Sums appropriated pursuant to this section shall, to the extent feasible, be used to support programs equitably distributed between urban and rural areas.".

(d) Title IV is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SPECIAL DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS ON LEGAL SERVICES FOR OLDER AMERICANS

"SEC. 414. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to and enter into contracts with public and private nonprofit agencies or organizations in order to—

"(1) support legal research, technical assistance, training, information dissemination, and other support activities to agencies, organizations, institutions, and private law firms that are providing, developing, or supporting pro bono or reduced-fee legal services to elderly individuals; and

"(2) support demonstration projects to expand or improve the delivery of legal services to elderly individuals with social and economic need.

"(b) Any grants or contracts entered into under subsection (a)(2) shall contain assurances that the requireds of section 307(a)(13) are met.

"(c) From the sums appropriated pursuant to section 441 for each fiscal year, not less than $5,000,000 shall be reserved to carry out the purposes of this section.

"NATIONAL IMPACT DEMONSTRATIONS

"SEC. 415. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to carry out, either directly or through grants or contracts, (1) innovation and development projects and activities of national significance which show promise of having substantial impact on the expansion or improvement of social services, nutrition services, or multipurpose senior centers or otherwise promoting the well-being of older individuals, and (2) dissemination of information activities related to such programs.

"(b) Not to exceed 15 per centum of any sums appropriated pursuant to section 441 of this title may be used for carrying out this section.".

(d)(1) Title IV is amended by redesignating part D as part E and by adding immediately after part C the following new part:

"PART D—MORTGAGE INSURANCE AND INTEREST GRANTS FOR MULTIPURPOSE SENIOR CENTERS

"MORTGAGE INSURANCE AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 431. (a) It is the purpose of this section to assist and encourage the provision of urgently needed facilities for programs for the elderly.

"(b) For the purpose of this part the terms 'mortgage', 'mortgagor', 'mortgagee', 'maturity date', and 'State' shall have the meanings respectively set forth in section 207 of the National Housing Act.

"(c) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is authorized to insure any mortgage (including advances on such mortgage during acquisition, alteration, renovation, or construction) in accordance with the provisions of this section upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe and make commitments for insurance of such mortgage prior to the date of its execution or disbursement thereon.

"(d) In order to carry out the purpose of this section, the Secretary is authorized to insure any mortgage which covers a new multipurpose senior center, including equipment to be used in its operation, subject to the following conditions:

"(1) The mortgage shall be executed by a mortgagor, approved by the Secretary, who demonstrates ability successfully to operate one or more programs for the elderly. The Secretary may in his discretion require any such mortgagor to be regulated or restricted as to minimum charges and methods of financing, and in addition thereto, if the mortgagor is a corporate entity, as to capital structure and rate of return. As an aid to the regulation or restriction of any mortgagor with respect to any of the foregoing matters, the Secretary may make such contracts with and acquire for not to exceed $100 such stock interest in such mortgagor as he may deem necessary. Any stock or interest so purchased shall be paid for out of the Multipurpose Senior Center Insurance Fund, and shall be redeemed by the mortgagor at par upon the termination of all obligations of the Secretary under the insurance.

"(2) The mortgage shall involve a principal obligation in an amount not to exceed $250,000 and not to exceed 90 per centum of the estimated replacement cost of the property or project, including equipment to be used in the operation of the multipurpose senior center, when the proposed improvements are completed and the equipment is installed.

"(3) The mortgage shall—

"(A) provide for complete amortization by periodic payments within such term as the Secretary shall prescribe, and

"(B) bear interest (exclusive of premium charges for insurance and service charges, if any) at not to exceed such per centum per annum on the principal obligation outstanding at any time as the Secretary finds necessary to meet the mortgage market.

"(4) The Secretary shall not insure any mortgage under this section unless he has determined that the center to be covered by the mortgage will be in compliance with minimum standards to be prescribed by the Secretary.

"(5) In the plans for such multipurpose senior center, due consideration shall be given to excellence of architecture and design, and to the inclusion of works of art (not representing more than 1 per centum of the cost of the project).

"(e) The Secretary shall fix and collect premium charges for the insurance of mortgages under this section which shall be payable annually in advance by the mortgagee, either in cash or in debentures of the Multipurpose Senior Center Insurance Fund (established by subsection (h)) issued at par plus accrued interest. In the case of any mortgage such charge shall not be less than an amount equivalent to one-fourth of 1 per centum per annum nor more than an amount equivalent to 1 per centum per annum of the amount of the principal obligation of the mortgage outstanding at any one time, without taking into account delinquent payments or prepayments. In addition to the premium charge herein provided for, the Secretary is authorized to charge and collect such amounts as he may deem reasonable for the appraisal of a property or project during acquisition, alteration, or renovation; but such charges for appraisal and inspection shall not aggregate more than 1 per centum of the original principal face amount of the mortgage.

"(f) The Secretary may consent to the release of a part or parts of the mortgaged property or project from the lien of any mortgage insured under this section upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

"(g)(1) The Secretary shall have the same functions, powers, and duties (insofar as applicable) with respect to the insurance of mortgages under this section as the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development has with respect to the insurance of mortgages under title II of the National Housing Act.

"(2) The provisions of subsections (e), (g), (h), (i), (j), (k), (l), and (n) of section 207 of the National Housing Act shall apply to mortgages insured under this section; except that, for the purposes of their application with respect to such mortgages, all references in such provisions to the General Insurance Fund shall be deemed to refer to the Multipurpose Senior Center Insurance Fund, and all references in such provisions to 'Secretary' shall be deemed to refer to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

"(h)(1) There is hereby created a Multipurpose Senior Center Insurance Fund which shall be used by the Secretary as a revolving fund for carrying out all the insurance provisions of this section. All mortgages insured under this section shall be insured under and be the obligation of the Multipurpose Senior Center Insurance Fund.

"(2) The general expenses of the operations of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare relating to mortgages insured under this section may be charged to the Multipurpose Senior Center Insurance Fund.

"(3) Moneys in the Multipurpose Senior Center Insurance Fund not needed for the current operations of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and respect to mortgages insured under this section shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of such fund, or invested in bonds or other obligations of, or in bonds or other obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States. The Secretary may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, purchase in the open market debentures issued as obligations of the Multipurpose Senior Center Insurance Fund. Such purchases shall be made at a price which will provide an investment yield of not less than the yield obtainable from other investments authorized by this section. Debentures so purchased shall be canceled and not reissued.

"(4) Premium charges, adjusted premium charges, and appraisal and other fees received on account of the insurance of any mortgage under this section, the receipts derived from property covered by such mortgages and from any claims, debts, contracts, property, and security assigned to the Secretary in connection therewith, and all earnings as the assets of the funds, shall be credited to the Multipurpose Senior Center Insurance Fund. The principal of, and interest paid and to be paid on, debentures which are the obligation of such fund, cash insurance payments and adjustments, and expenses incurred in the handling, management, renovation, and disposal of properties acquired, in connection with mortgages insured under this section, shall be charged to such fund.

"(5) There are authorized to be appropriated to provide initial capital for the Multipurpose Senior Center Insurance Fund, and to assure the soundness of such fund thereafter, such sums as may be necessary.

"ANNUAL INTEREST GRANTS

"SEC. 432. (a) To assist nonprofit private agencies to reduce the cost of borrowing from other sources for the acquisition, alteration, renovation, or construction of facilities for multipurpose senior centers, the Secretary may make annual interest grants to such agencies.

"(b) Annual interest grants under this section with respect to any facility shall be made over a fixed period not exceeding forty years, and provision for such grants shall be embodied in a contract guaranteeing their payment over such period. Each such grant shall be in an amount not greater than the difference between (1) the average annual debt service which would be required to be paid, during the life of the loan, on the amount borrowed from other sources for the acquisition, alteration, renovation, or construction of such facilities, and (2) the average annual debt service which the institution would have been required to pay, during the life of the loan, with respect to such amounts if the applicable interest rate were 3 per centum per annum: Provided, That the amount on which such grant is based shall be approved by the Secretary.

"(c)(1) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary such sums as may be necessary for payment of annual interest grants in accordance with this section.

"(2) Contracts for annual interest grants under this section shall not be entered into in an aggregate amount greater than is authorized in appropriation Acts.

"(d) Not more than 12½ per centum of the funds provided for in this section for grants may be used within any one State.".

(2) The heading of title IV is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE IV—TRAINING, RESEARCH, AND SECRETARIAL PROGRAMS"

(e)(1) Section 431 is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION

"SEC. 441. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title such sums as may be necessary for each fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1980.".

(2) Section 432 is redesignated as section 442.

COMMUNITY SERVICE EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

SEC. 104. Title V is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE V—COMMUNITY SERVICE EMPLOYMENT FOR OLDER AMERICANS

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 501. This title may be cited as the 'Older American Community Service Employment Act'.

"OLDER AMERICAN COMMUNITY SERVICE EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

"SEC. 502. (a) In order to foster and promote useful part-time opportunities in community service activities for unemployed low-income individuals who are fifty-five years old and who have poor employment prospects, the Secretary of Labor (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Secretary') is authorized to establish an older American community service employment program.

"(b)(1) In order to carry out the provisions of this title, the Secretary is authorized to enter into agreements with public or private nonprofit agencies or organizations, including national organizations, agencies of a State government or a political subdivision of a State (having elected or duly appointed governing officials), or a combination of such political subdivisions, or tribal organizations in order to further the purposes and goals of the program. Such agreements may include provisions for the payment of costs, as provided in subsection (c), of projects developed by such organizations and agencies in cooperation with the Secretary in order to make the program effective or to supplement the program. No payment shall be made by the Secretary toward the cost of any project established or administered by any such organization or agency unless he determines that such project—

"(A) will provide employment only for eligible individuals, except for necessary technical, administrative, and supervisory personnel, but such personnel shall, to the fullest extent possible, be recruited from among eligible individuals;

"(B) will provide employment for eligible individuals in the community in which such individuals reside, or in nearby communities, with special attention to the participation of eligble individuals who are members of minority groups;

"(C) will employ eligible individuals in service related to publicly owned and operated facilites and projects, or projects sponsored by organizations, other than political parties, exempt from taxation under the provisions of section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, except projects involving the construction, operation, or maintenance of any facility used or to be used as a place for sectarian religious instruction or worship;

"(D) will contribute to the general welfare of the community;

"(E) will provide employment for eligible individuals whose opportunities for other suitable public or private paid employment are poor;

"(F)(i) will result in an increase in employment opportunities over those opportunities which would otherwise be available, (ii) will not result in the displacement of currently employed workers (including partial displacement, such as a reduction in the hours of nonovertime work or wages or employment benefits), and (iii) will not impair existing contracts or result in the substitution of Federal funds for other funds in connection with work that would otherwise be performed;

"(G) will not employ or continue to employ any eligible individual to perform work the same or substantially the same as that performed by any other individual who is on layoff;

"(H) will utilize methods of recruitment and selection (including listing of job vacancies with the employment agency operated by any State or political subdivision thereof) which will assure that the maximum number of eligible individuals will have an opportunity to participate in the project;

"(I) will include such training as may be necessary to make the most effective use of the skills and talents of those individuals who are participating, and will provide for the payment of the reasonable expenses of individuals being trained, including a reasonable subsistence allowance;

"(J) will assure that safe and healthy conditions of work will be provided, and will assure that individuals employed in community service jobs assisted under this title shall be paid wages which shall not be lower than whichever is the highest of (i) the minimum wage which would be applicable to the employee under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, if section 6(a)(1) of such Act applied to the participant and if he were not exempt under section 13 thereof, (ii) the State or local minimum wage for the most nearly comparable covered employment, or (iii) the prevailing rates of pay for individuals employed in similar public occupations by the same employer;

"(K) will be established or administered with the advice of individuals competent in the field of service in which employment is being provided, and of individuals who are knowledgeable with regard to the needs of older individuals;

"(L) will authorize pay for necessary transportation costs of eligible individuals which may be incurred in employment in any project funded under this title, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary;

"(M) will assure that, to the maximum extent feasible, such project will serve the needs of minority, Indian, and limited-English-speaking eligible individuals in proportion to their numbers in the State;

"(N) will, if conducted by a national organization, comply with the requirements in paragraph (1) of subsection (d)(1) of this section;

"(O) will authorize funds to be used, to the extent feasible, to include individuals participating in such project under any State unemployment insurance plan; and

"(P) will assure that, to the maximum extent feasible, such project will experiment with innovative work modes suited to older workers.

"(2) The Secretary is authorized to establish, issue, and amend such regulations as may be necessary to effectively carry out the provisions of this title.

"(3) The Secretary is authorized and directed to develop alternatives for innovative work modes and to provide technical assistance in creating job opportunities through work sharing and other experimental methods to prime sponsors, labor organizations, groups representing business and industry and workers as well as to individual employers, where appropriate.

"(c)(1) The Secretary is authorized to pay not to exceed 85 per centum of the cost of any project which is the subject of an agreement entered into under subsection (b), except that the Secretary is authorized to pay all of the costs of any such project which is (A) an emergency or disaster project, or (B) a project located in an economically depressed area, as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce and the Director of the Community Services Administration, or (C) a project located in an area of high unemployment, as designated by the Secretary.

"(2) The non-Federal share shall be in cash or in kind. In determining the amount of the non-Federal share, the Secretary is authorized to attribute fair market value to services and facilities contributed from non-Federal sources.

"(d)(1) Whenever a national organization conducts a project within a State the organization shall submit to the State agency on aging a description of each project to be conducted in that State, (including the location of the project) thirty days prior to undertaking the project, for review and comment. Any comments of the State agency on aging shall promptly be transmitted to the Secretary. Whenever the State agency on aging recommends disapproval of any project the Secretary shall, if he determines that such disapproval is reasonable, withhold payments for the cost of that project. The Secretary shall make a determination under this paragraph expeditiously and in no event later than sixty days after receipt of such comments.

"(2) The Secretary shall review on his own initiative or at the request of any public or private nonprofit agency or organization, or an agency of the State government, the distribution of programs under this title within the State including the distribution between urban and rural areas within such State. For each proposed reallocation of programs within a State, the Secretary shall give notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record by all interested persons and make a written determination of his findings and decision.

"ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 503. (a) In order to effectively carry out the provisions of this title, the Secretary shall, through the Commissioner, consult with the State agency on aging designated under section 305(a)(1) and the appropriate area agencies on aging established under section 305(a)(2)(A) with regard to—

"(1) the localities in which community service projects of the type authorized by this title are most needed;

"(2) consideration of the employment situations and the type of skills possessed by available local individuals who are eligible to participate; and

"(3) potential projects and the number and percentage of eligible individuals in the local population.

"(b) If the Secretary determines that to do so would increase job opportunities available to individuals under this title, the Secretary is authorized to coordinate the program assisted under this title with programs authorized under the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974, the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973, the Community Services Act of 1974, and the Emergency Employment Act of 1971. Appropriations under this Act may not be used to carry out any program under the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974, the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973, the Community Services Act of 1974, or the Emergency Employment Act of 1971.

"(c) In carrying out the provisions of this title, the Secretary is authorized to use, with their consent, the services, equipment, personnel, and facilities of Federal and other agencies with or without reimbursement, and on a similar basis to cooperate with other public and private agencies and instrumentalities in the use of services, equipment, and facilities.

"(d) Payments under this title may be made in advance or by way of reimbursement and in such installments as the Secretary may determine.

"(e) The Secretary shall not delegate any function of the Secretary under this title to any other department or agency of the Federal Government.

"PARTICIPANTS NOT FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 504. (a) Eligible individuals who are employed in any project funded under this title shall not be considered to be Federal employees as a result of such employment and shall not be subject to the provisions of part III of title 5, United States Code.

"(b) No contract shall be entered into under this title with a contractor who is, or whose employees are, under State law, exempted from operation of the State workmen's compensation law, generally applicable to employees, unless the contractor shall undertake to provide either through insurance by a recognized carrier, or by self-insurance, as authorized by State law, that the individuals employed under the contract, shall enjoy workmen's compensation coverage equal to that provided by law for covered employment.

"INTERAGENCY COOPERATION

"SEC. 505. (a) The Secretary shall consult with, and obtain the written views of, the Commissioner of the Administration on Aging prior to the establishment of any rule or the establishment of general policy in the administration of this title.

"(b) The Secretary shall consult and cooperate with the Director of the Community Services Administration, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the heads of other Federal agencies carrying out related programs, in order to achieve optimal coordination with such other programs. Each Federal agency shall cooperate with the Secretary in disseminating information relating to the availability of assistance under this title and in promoting the identification and interests of individuals eligible for employment in projects assisted under this title.

"EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 506. (a)(1) From sums appropriated under this title for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall first reserve such sums as may be necessary for national grants or contracts with public agencies and public or private nonprofit organizations to maintain the level of activities carried on under such grants or contracts at least at the level of such activities supported under this title and under any other provision of the Federal law relating to community service employment programs for older Americans in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975. Preference in awarding such grants or contracts shall be given to national organizations of proven ability in providing employment services to older individuals under this program and similar programs. In carrying out the preference required by the preceding sentence, the Secretary shall give special consideration to national organizations owned or operated by members of minority groups. The Secretary, in awarding grants and contracts under this section, shall, to the extent feasible, assure an equitable distribution of activities under such grants and contracts, in the aggregate, among the States, taking into account the needs of underserved States.

"(2) The Secretary shall allot for projects within each State the remainder of the sums appropriated for any fiscal year under section 508 so that each State will receive an amount which bears the same ratio to such remainder as the product of the number of individuals aged fifty-five or over in the State and the allotment percentage of such State bears to the sum of the corresponding product for all States, except that (A) no State shall be allotted less than one-half of 1 per centum of the remainder of the sums appropriated for the fiscal year for which the determination is made, or $100,000, whichever is greater, and (B) Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands shall each be allotted an amount which is not less than one-fourth of 1 per centum of the remainder of the sums appropriated for the fiscal year for which the determination is made, or $50,000, whichever is greater. For the purpose of the exception contained in this paragraph the term 'State' does not include Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

"(3) For the purpose of this subsection—

"(A) the allotment percentage of each State shall be 100 per centum less that percentage which bears the same ratio to 50 per centum as the per capita income of such State bears to the per capita income of the United States, except that (i) the allotment percentage shall in no case be more than 75 per centum or less than 33⅓ per centum, and (ii) the allotment percentage for the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands shall be 75 per centum;

"(B) the number of individuals aged fifty-five or over in any State and in all States, and the per capita income in any State and in all States, shall be determined by the Secretary on the basis of the most satisfactory data available to him; and

"(C) for the purpose of determining the allotment percentage, the term 'United States' means the fifty States and the District of Columbia.

"(b) The amount allotted for projects within any State under subsection (a) for any fiscal year which the Secretary determines will not be required for such year shall be reallotted, from time to time and on such dates during such year as the Secretary may fix, the projects within other States in proportion to the original allotments to projects within such State under subsection (a) for such year, but with such proportionate amount for any of such other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Secretary estimates that projects within such State need and will be able to use for such year; and the total of such reductions shall be similarly reallotted among the States whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection during a year shall be deemed part of its allotment under subsection (a) for such year.

"(c) The amount apportioned for projects within each State under subsection (a) shall be apportioned among areas within any such State in an equitable manner, taking into consideration (1) the proportion which eligible individuals in each such area bears to the total number of such individuals, respectively, in that State, and (2) the relative distribution of such individuals residing in rural and urban areas within the State.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 507. As used in this title—

"(1) the term 'State' means any of the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands;

"(2) the term 'eligible individual' means an individual who is fifty-five years old or over, who has a low income, and who has or would have difficulty in securing employment, except that (1) payments under title XVI of the Social Security Act shall not be counted for the purpose of determining eligibility under this title, and (2) pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Secretary, any such individual who is sixty years old or over shall have priority for the work opportunities provided for under this title;

"(3) the term 'community service' means social, health, welfare, and educational services, legal and other counseling services and assistance, including tax counseling and assistance and financial counseling, and library, recreational, and other similar services; conservation, maintenance, or restoration of natural resources; community betterment or beautification; antipollution and environmental quality efforts; economic development; and such other services essential and necessary to the community as the Secretary, by regulation, may prescribe; and

"(4) the term 'program' means the older American community service employment program established under this title.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 508. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title $300,000,000 for the fiscal year 1979 and $350,000,000 for the fiscal year 1980.".

GRANTS FOR INDIAN TRIBES

SEC. 105. The Act is amended by adding after title V the following new title:

"TITLE VI—GRANTS FOR INDIAN TRIBES

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 601. It is the purpose of this title to promote the delivery of comprehensive social, including nutritional services, for Indians that are comparable to services provided under title II of this Act.

"ELIGIBILITY

"SEC. 602. (a) A tribal organization of an Indian tribe is eligible for assistance under this title only if—

"(1) the tribal organization represents at least seventy-five individuals who have attained fifty-five years of age or older;

"(2) the tribal organization demonstrates the ability to deliver social services, including nutritional services; and

"(3) individuals to be served by the tribal organization will not receive, for the year for which application under this title is made, services under title III.

"(c) A 'tribal organization' for the purposes of this title is defined as in section 4 of Public Law 93-638.

"GRANTS AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 603. The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to eligible tribal organizations to pay not more than 85 per centum in fiscal year 1979, and 80 per centum in fiscal year 1980, of the costs for the delivery of social services and nutritional services for Indians who are age fifty-five and over.

"APPLICATIONS

"SEC. 604. (a) No grant may be made under this title unless the eligible tribal organization submits an application to the Commissioner which meets such criteria as the Commissioner may by regulation prescribe. Each such application shall—

"(1) provide that the eligible tribal organization will evaluate the need for social and nutritional services among older Indians to be represented by the tribal organization;

"(2) provide for the use of such methods of administration as are necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the program to be assisted;

"(3) provide that the tribal organization will make such reports in such form and containing such information, as the Commissioner may reasonably require, and comply with such requirements as the Commissioner may impose to assure the correctness of such reports;

"(4) provide that the tribal organization or some other nonprofit private organization selected by such tribal organization will conduct periodic evaluation of activities and projects carried out under the application;

"(5) establish objectives consistent with the purposes of this title toward which activities under the application will be directed, identify obstacles to the attainment of such objectives, and indicate how the tribal organization proposes to overcome such obstacles;

"(6) provide for establishing and maintaining information and referral sources to assure that older Indians to be served by the assistance made available under this title will have reasonably convenient access to such sources;

"(7) provide a preference for Indians aged fifty-five and over for full- or part-time staff positions wherever feasible;

"(8) contain assurances that the provisions of sections 307(a)(10)(A) (i) and (iii), 307(a)(11)(B), and 307(a)(11)(C) will be complied with whenever the application contains provisions for the acquisition, alteration, or renovation of facilities to serve as multipurpose senior centers; and

"(9) provide satisfactory assurance that fiscal control and fund accounting procedures will be adopted as may be necessary to assure proper disbursement of, and accounting for, Federal funds paid under this title to the tribal organization, including any funds paid by the tribal organization to a recipient of a grant or contract.

"(b) For the purposes of any application submitted under this title, the tribal organization may develop its own population statistics, with certification from the Bureau of Indian Affairs, in order to establish eligibility.

"(c) The Commissioner shall approve any application which complies with the provisions of subsection (a) of this section.

"(d) Whenever the Commissioner approves an application under this title he shall withhold from the allotment of the appropriate State made under section 303 an amount attributable to the Indians to be served under this application who were also counted for the purposes of allotments under title III. The Commissioner shall reallot sums withheld under this subsection in accordance with the provisions of section 303(b).

"(e) Whenever the Commissioner determines not to approve an application submitted under subsection (a) of this section he shall (1) state his objections in writing to the tribal organization within sixty days after such decision, (2) provide to the extent practicable technical assistance to the tribal organization to overcome his stated objections, and (3) provide the tribal organization with a hearing, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

"(f) Whenever the Commissioner approves an application of a tribal organization under this title, funds shall be awarded for not less than twelve months, during which time, such tribal organization may not receive funds under title III of this Act.

"ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 605. (a) In establishing regulations for the purpose of this title the Commissioner shall consult with the Secretary of the Interior.

"(b) The Commissioner shall publish final regulations for the administration of this title not later than ninety days after the date of enactment of the Older Americans Amendments of 1978.

"SURPLUS EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES

"SEC. 606. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law the Secretary of the Interior through the Bureau of Indian Affairs is authorized and directed to make available surplus Indian educational facilities to tribal organizations, and nonprofit organizations with tribal approval, for use as multipurpose senior centers. Such centers may be altered so as to provide extended care facilities, community center facilities, nutritional services, child care services, and other social services.

"(b) Each eligible tribal organization desiring to take advantage of such surplus facilities shall apply to the Secretary of the Interior at such time and in such manner and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary of the Interior determines to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"PAYMENTS

"SEC. 607. Payments may be made under this title (after necessary adjustments, in the case of grants, on account of previously made overpayments or underpayments) in advance or by way of reimbursement in such installments and on such conditions, as the Commissioner may determine.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 608. (a) Except as provided in subsection (c), there are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for the fiscal year 1979, and $30,000,000 for the fiscal year 1980, to carry out the provisions of this title.

"(b) For any fiscal year in which less than $5,000,000 is appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) of this section tribal organizations are authorized to receive assistance pursuant to the provisions of section 303 (b)(3).

"(c) There are authorized to be appropriated $3,000,000 for the fiscal year 1979 and for the succeeding fiscal year to carry out the provisions of section 606.".

REPEALERS: CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 106. (a) Effective September 30, 1978, titles VII and IX are repealed, except that the Commissioner may complete any project unfinished on that date with funds obligated but unexpended on that date.

(2) Section 201(c) of such Act is amended by striking out "section 304(a)(1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 305(a)(1)".

(3) Section 212(a)(2)(A) of such Act is amended by striking out "section 304(a)(1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 305 (a)(1)".

(4) Section 212(a)(3)(C) of such Act is amended by striking out "section 304(a)(1)" and insterting in lieu thereof "section 305 (a)".

TITLE II—WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON AGING

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 201. This title may be cited as the "1981 White House Conference on Aging Act".

FINDINGS AND POLICY

SEC. 202. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the number of individuals fifty-five years of age or older is now 43,000,000 and will, by the end of this century, be over 57,000,000;

(2) nearly 5,200,000 individuals fifty-five years of age or older have incomes below the poverty level, as determined by the Federal Government;

(3) there is a great need to improve the economic well-being of older individuals;

(4) there is a great need to make comprehensive and quality health care more readily available to older individuals;

(5) there is a great need for expanding the availability of suitable and reasonably priced housing for older individuals, together with services needed for independent or semi-independent living;

(6) there is a great need for a more comprehensive and effective social service delivery system for older individuals;

(7) there is a great need for a more comprehensive long-term care policy responsive to the needs of older patients and their families;

(8) there is a great need to promote greater employment opportunities for middle-aged and older individuals who want or need to work;

(9) there is a great need to develop a national retirement policy that contributes to the fulfillment, dignity, and satisfaction of retirement years for older individuals;

(10) there is a great need for a national policy with respect to increasing, coordinating, and expediting biomedical and other appropriate research directed at determining the causes of the aging process; and

(11) false stereotypes about aging and the process of aging are prevalent throughout the country and policies should be developed to overcome such stereotypes.

(b)(1) It is therefore the policy of the Congress that the Federal Government should work jointly with the States and their citizens to develop recommendations and plans for action to meet the challenges and needs of older individuals, consistent with the objectives of this title.

(2) In developing programs for the aging pursuant to this title, emphasis should be placed upon the right and obligation of older individuals to free choice and self-help in planning their own futures.

AUTHORITY OF THE PRESIDENT, SECRETARY, AND FINAL REPORT

SEC. 203. (a) The President is authorized to call a White House Conference on Aging in 1981 in order to develop recommendations for further research and action in the field of aging which will further the policies set forth in section 202 of this title. The Conference shall be planned and conducted under the direction of the Secretary in cooperation with the Commissioner on Aging and the Director of the National Institute on Aging, and such other Federal departments and agencies as are appropriate. Such assistance may include the assignment of personnel.

(b) For the purpose of arriving at facts and recommendations concerning the utilization of skills, experience, and energies and the improvement of the conditions of older individuals, the Conference shall bring together representatives of Federal, State, and local governments, professional and lay people who are working in the field of aging (including researchers on problems of the elderly and the process of aging), and representatives of the general public, including older individuals.

(c) A final report of the White House Conference on Aging, which shall include a statement of a comprehensive coherent national policy on aging together with recommendations for the implementation of that policy, shall be submitted to the President not later than one hundred and eighty days following the date on which the Conference is adjourned. The findings and recommendations included in any report required by this subsection shall be immediately available to the public. The Secretary shall, within ninety days after submission of such report, transmit to the President and to the Congress his recommendations for administrative action and the legislation necessary to implement the recommendations contained in the report.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 204. (a) In administering this title the Secretary shall—

(1) request the cooperation and assistance of such other Federal departments and agencies as may be appropriate in carrying out the provisions of this title;

(2) render all reasonable assistance, including financial assistance, to State agencies on the aging and to area agencies on aging, and to other appropriate organizations to enable them to organize and conduct conferences on aging prior to the White House Conference on Aging;

(3) prepare and make available background materials for the use of delegates to the White House Conference on Aging as he may deem necessary and shall prepare and distribute any such report of the Conference as may be necessary and appropriate; and

(4) engage such additional personnel as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.

(b) In carrying out his functions under clause (2) of subsection (a) the Secretary shall assure that conferences will be so conducted as to assure broad participation of older individuals.

(c) In carrying out his responsibilities under this title the Secretary shall assure that current and adequate statistical data and other information on the well-being of older individuals in the United States is readily available, in advance of the White House Conference on Aging, to participants in the White House Conference on Aging, together with such information as may be necessary to evaluate Federal programs and policies relating to aging. In carrying out the requirement of this subsection the Secretary is authorized to make grants to, and to enter into contracts with, public agencies and nonprofit private organizations.

ADVISORY COMMITTEES

SEC. 205. (a) The Secretary is authorized and directed to establish an advisory committee to the White House Conference on Aging which shall include representation from public agencies and private nonprofit organizations as appropriate. The Secretary is authorized and directed to establish such other committees, including technical committees, as may be necessary to assist in planning, conducting, and reviewing the Conference. Each such committee shall be composed of professional and public members and shall include individuals from low-income families and from minority groups. A majority of the public members of each such committee shall be fifty-five years of age or older.

(b) Appointed members of any such committee, while attending conferences or meetings of the committee or otherwise serving at the request of the Secretary, shall be entitled to receive compensation at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary but not to exceed the daily rate prescribed for GS–18 under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code (including travel-time); and, while away from their homes or regular places of business, they may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized under section 5703 of such title for persons in Government service employed intermittently.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 206. For the purpose of this title—

(1) The term "area agency on aging" means the agency designated under section 305(a)(2)(A) of the Older Americans Act of 1965.

(2) The term "State agency on aging" means the agency designated under section 305(a)(1) of the Older Americans Act of 1965.

(3) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

(4) The term "Commissioner on Aging" means the Commissioneer of the Administration on Aging.

(5) The term "State" includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the Northern Mariana Islands.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 207. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

TITLE III—STUDY OF RACIAL AND ETHNIC DISCRIMINATION IN PROGRAMS FOR OLDER AMERICANS

STUDY AUTHORIZED

SEC. 301. (a) The Commission on Civil Rights shall (1) undertake a comprehensive study of discrimination based on race or ethnic background in any Federal assisted programs and activities which affect older individuals; and (2) identify with particularity any such federally assisted program or activity in which evidence is found of individuals or organizations who are otherwise qualified being, on the basis of race or ethnic background, excluded from participation in, denied the benefits of, refused employment or contracts with, or subject to discrimination under, such program or activity.

(b) As part of the study required by this section, the Commission shall conduct public hearings to elicit the views of interested parties, including Federal departments and agencies, on issues relating to racial or ethnic discrimination in programs and activities affecting older individuals receiving Federal financial assistance, and particularly with respect to discrimination among potential participants in, or beneficiaries of, specific federally assisted programs.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 302. (a) The Commission is authorized to obtain, through grant or contract, analyses, research, and studies by independent experts of issues relating to racial and ethnic discrimination in aging programs and activities and to publish the results thereof. For purposes of the study required by this section, the Commission may accept and utilize the services of voluntary or uncompensated personnel, without regard to the provisions of section 105(b) of the Civil Rights Act of 1957 (42 U.S.C. 1975(b)).

(b) The head of each Federal department or agency shall cooperate in all respects with the Commission with respect to the study required by section 301, and shall provide to the Commission such data, reports, and documents in connection with the subject matter of such study as the Commission may request.

REPORTS

SEC. 303. (a) Not later than eighteen months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commission shall transmit a report of its finding and its recommendations for statutory changes (if any) and administrative action, including suggested general regulations, to the Congress and to the President. The Commission shall provide a copy of its report to the head of each Federal department and agency with respect to which the Commission makes findings or recommendations.

(b) Not later than forty-five working days after receiving a copy of the report required by subsection (a), each Federal department or agency with respect to which the Commission makes its recommendations or findings shall submit its comments and recommendations regarding such report to the President and to the appropriate committees of Congress.

AUTHORIZATIONS AUTHORIZED

SEC. 304. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time for debate on this bill is limited to 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON) and the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), with 1 hour on any amendment in the first degree and 30 minutes on any amendment in the second degree, debatable motion, appeal, or point of order.

The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time as allocated on the bill, the 2 hours, 1 hour under my control and the other hour under the control of Senator JAVITS, that the control of the second hour, the hour under the control of Senator JAVITS, be assigned to the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. CHAFEE).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HODGES). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following staff members of the Committee on Human Resources be granted privilege of the floor during consideration of S. 2850 and any votes thereon.

Marcia McCord, Steve Roling, Jan Zarro, Ellen Akst, Peter Parham, Jay Urwitz, Birdie Kyle, Peter Harris, Judy Robinson, Craig Polhemus, Jack Wickes, Jack Andrews, Fran Paris, Polly Galt, John Backer, Sherry Kramer, Tim Smith, David Morse, Dave Affeldt, and Debby Kilmer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, as to S. 2850.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, S. 2850 extends the authorizations contained in the Older Americans Act of 1965 for an additional 2 years, through September 30, 1980. Moreover, it substantially expands the authorizations for existing programs and provides for a reorganization of the administration of the social service programs contained in the act at the State and local level.

The bill before us today reflects many of the ideas that were contained in the testimony of expert witnesses, the advice and guidance of Administration on Aging officials, as well as suggestions from Senators on both sides of the aisle.

Throughout its work on the bill, the committee has been concerned with fragmentation of Federal programs serving the elderly, both within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and in the various other Federal departments and agencies administering programs primarily designed to serve the elderly. Although some testimony suggested interdepartmental reorganization, the committee determined that such a step would be premature at this time. Thus, the committee concentrated on coordination and consolidation of programs contained in the Older Americans Act.

By way of a brief summary, Mr. President, S. 2850 would:

Extend the Federal Council on Aging with new mandates for a wide range of studies;

Consolidate existing social service programs under titles III, V, and VII, into a single new title, centralizing program administration in the area agencies on aging;

Target local funding on services related to access—transportation, outreach, and information and referrals, in-home services, and legal services;

Substantially expand existing nutrition services with greater focus on home-delivered meals;

Develop procedures to target funds under the act to those most in need of services;

Require the Commissioner on Aging to develop and implement a national manpower policy in the field of aging;

Expand model project authority for community long-term care projects, authority for community long-term care projects, special demonstration projects in legal services, and demonstration projects of national impact;

Significantly expand the community employment program while assuring coordination between the national contractors and the States;

Establish a separate title for services to elderly Amercian Indians;

Authorize a White House Conference on Aging in 1981; and Mandate a study of racial and ethnic discrimination in Federal programs for the elderly by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission. As I indicated earlier, the heart of the bill is in title III, which consolidates the existing social service programs under the act. As my colleagues will recall, the 1973 older Americans comprehensive services amendments introduced a new concept in Federal programs for the elderly by directing the establishment of a nationwide network of area agencies on aging whose chief objective is to plan and coordinate resources at the area level. With the current network of 563 area agencies on aging across the country, the major goals of the 1973 legislation have now been achieved. The committee viewed the major objective of the 1978 amendments to devise a coordinated approach to the delivery of services under the act.

Thus, S. 2850 consolidates the existing title III—State and community services—and title V—multipurpose senior centers—into a single title with a single authorization, and administratively consolidates the existing title VII—nutrition—within the new title III while retaining for it a separate authorization.

The new administrative framework in S. 2850 will undoubtedly assure more efficient planning and more effective coordination of programs under the act, while at the same time reducing the paperwork burden on State agency and area agency officials.

At the present time, State and community programs for the elderly under title III are the only programs which according to statute must be administered through the area agency network. The multipurpose senior center authority is vested directly in the U.S. Commissioner on Aging, often excluding the center program from the overall planning network, and adversely impacting on the role of senior centers to serve as focal points in communities.

Similarly, the existing nutrition program is not uniformly operated in conjunction with area agency programs, reducing efficient and effective overall planning.

Although S. 2850 consolidates the administration of the nutrition program, it does retain its separate authorization. I would point out that the bill contains one authorization for nutrition services at a level of authorization 50 percent above the current service level. In addition, the committee bill language places far greater emphasis on home-delivered meals as an integral part of nutrition services.

An amendment to create a separate authorization for home-delivered meals, adding an additional $100 million authorization for the coming fiscal year will be offered to this bill. I will comment in more detail on the nutrition provisions of S. 2850 at that time.

Mr. President, S. 2850 revises the existing priority service areas of the Older Americans Act. The 1975 amendments required that each State plan to establish or maintain four priority programs—transportation services, home services, legal and other counseling services, and residential repair and renovation programs. Under a complicated scheme, each State was required to spend at least 50 percent of any appropriation above the 1975 level on the priority services, or, with appropriate assurances to the Commissioner, one-third of its total State allotment, but in no event less than 20 percent of its allotment in one or more of these areas.

Despite this targeting of services in 1975, the committee remained concerned that very few services are provided in depth at the community level. Mr. President, we cannot escape the fact that there are finite Federal dollars to direct toward these vital services to the elderly. Many of us wish that a greater proportion of the Federal budget could be directed toward this effort, but it is a pragmatic fact that there are not going to be enough dollars to assure that all necessary services to the elderly are delivered in depth.

Thus, S. 2850 attempts to concentrate funds on three very necessary services for the elderly—services associated with access to programs—transportation, outreach, and information and referral, in-home services, and legal services. Each planning and service area, as distinguished from each State, must direct 50 percent of its allotment to these three service areas, unless it can satisfactorily demonstrate that it is already meeting one or more of the priority services within the area.

In addition to the revisions of the social service programs, S. 2850 continues the existing title IX, Community Service Employment for Older Americans, for 2 additional years, redesignating this as title V. The bill makes two significant changes in existing law, setting forth procedures to assure that programs operated by the national contractors are coordinated with those operated by the State, and making clear that SSI payments are not to be counted against eligibility in the program.

At the present appropriation level of $196 million, this program provides part-time jobs for 47,000 older Americans. At the authorization level provided in the bill, the number of job slots would increase to 64,157 in fiscal year 1979, and 70,807 job slots in 1980.

I have attached a section-by-section summary of the bill to my remarks, along with a table showing the amounts authorized, Mr. President, so I will not go into further detail regarding the other programs authorized in S. 2850.

Let me conclude by saying, Mr. President, there has been considerable debate in recent years over "income strategy" versus "services strategy" with respect to enabling our senior citizens to live their lives in dignity. I would concur that income maintenance is of primary importance to senior citizens, but in my view, these two approaches must work together, complimenting each other. Over the past 5 years, Congress has enacted social security increases totaling 43.9 percent, with the result that retirement incomes of most older Americans have been substantially increased. Yet, an elderly citizen in need of transportation to medical care, or home health care services, or nutrition services, cannot use his or her increased income to purchase these services if they simply do not exist within that individual's community. S. 2850 will help to strengthen that network of vital services.

I am confident, Mr. President, that this bill will help all older Americans to lead fuller and richer lives, on the one hand, and permit our society to continue to reap the benefit of the contributions and accumulated wisdom of our elderly population, on the other.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the section-by-section summary of S. 2850 and the table of authorizations to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the material was order to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF S. 2850

TITLE I

Sec. 101(b) amends Title II of the existing Act to expand the duties and functions of the Administration on Aging by requiring that it serve an advocacy function.

(c) This section further amends Title II by expanding the requirement for interagency cooperation, specifically requiring such cooperation for CETA, ACTION, Social Security, HUD, OEO, and DOT.

(d) Extends such sums authority for two additional years.

(e) This section also extends the Federal Council on Aging for two years and requires that the Council undertake a study of the programs under this Act, including an evaluation of the effectiveness of the programs, an analysis of the means to identify the elderly in greatest need, an analysis of low income and minority participation, alternative allocation formulas, the existing direct services, the special needs of rural elderly, and the expansion of services to the non-elderly handicapped under the nutrition program.

(f) Adds a new provision to make clear that no part of the costs for any program under the Older Americans Act can be treated as income or benefits which would adversely impact upon an older person's eligibility under any other federal law (SSI, food stamps, etc.).

(g) Adds a new section requiring that the Commissioner continually review and evaluate all paperwork requests in order to reduce paperwork by eliminating overlap and duplication.

Sec. 102. Rewrites Title III, making the following changes:

(1) Establishes congressional findings relating to the current level of services of the need for coordination and consolidation under the Act.

(2) Consolidates existing Titles III, V, and VII into a single authority under the new Title III, retaining a separate authorization level for nutrition services. $467.2 million for Fiscal Year 1979 and $527.2 million for Fiscal Year 1980 is authorized for social services (or Titles III and V). $375 million for Fiscal Year 1979 and $425 million for Fiscal Year 1980 is authorized for nutrition services.

(3) Amends existing law's 15 percent set aside for area administration to 8.5 percent. Although the percentage is reduced, this is not a reduction in area administration money because of the consolidated authorities.

(4) Amends the existing 90-10 federal/state match for those states with area plans to a 75-25 federal/state match. In 1973, when the AAA concept was initially introduced, a 90-10 matching provision was provided for those states which set up an area network as an incentive to the states. Those states which would not set up an area network are now at a 75-25 level. There are now over 560 area agencies on aging, and there is no longer a need for the higher federal match as an incentive.

(5) Amends the existing intrastate distribution to require that each state devise a formula for such distribution taking into account the number of elderly and their geographic distribution within the state, the number of low income elderly, and the number of minority elderly. The formula must be published for review and comment.

(6) Further requires that assurance be given that services are actually being delivered to those with the greatest economic and social needs.

(7) Provides authority for a governor to apply to the Commissioner to request interstate planning and service areas.

(8) Establishes a two year planning cycle at both the state and area level.

(9) Requires that each area plan assure that 50 percent of its allotment for social services will be expended on services associated with access (transportation, outreach, I&R, and advocacy) and in-home services. Any area agency which can demonstrate that it is already meeting these priority services may have the 50 percent requirement waived by the state.

(10) Expands existing nutrition services to provide specific reference to home delivered meals and to expand the home delivered meal component to the non-elderly handicapped. Each AAA would have to make a determination that those receiving home delivered meals were unable to participate in the congregate setting. AAA would be required to give consideration to existing organizations, such as meals on wheels, which have demonstrated the ability to provide home delivered meals efficiently.

(11) Expands the existing authority for multi-purpose senior centers to allow for construction of new facilities where there are no suitable structures available for renovation.

(12) Amends the existing provision requiring that 25 percent of the non-federal share under this title be from public sources to require that 50 percent of the funds be from public sources.

(13) Provides for a two year waiver on both area and state plans, to allow for an orderly transition into the consolidated program.

Sec. 104. Amends existing Title IV, training and research, by amending the statement of purpose to require the development of a national manpower policy for the field of aging to be developed by the Commissioner and other departments and agencies of the federal government.

The existing requirement for the Commissioner to appraise the personnel needs in the field of aging is amended to require a biannual report to the Congress.

Existing Sec. 403, attracting qualified persons to the field of aging, is incorporated into the basic training authority under Sec. 404.

The model project authority, under Title III in existing law is redesignated as Sec. 412, and is expanded to include new authority for alternative living arrangements.

A new Sec. 413 is added to provide authority for demonstration programs of national importance. In fact, the Administration on Aging is already conducting model projects of national significance and this authority legitimatizes this practice.

The existing Title IX program, part-time community service employment, is redesignated as Title V. The following changes are made from existing law:

(1) The existing 90–10 federal/state match is reduced to 85–15. Existing law already provides authority for the Secretary to waive all or part of the non-federal matching requirement in emergencies or disasters, or in projects located in impoverished areas.

(2) Requires that any contracts with national organizations be coordinated with other projects under this Act within the states.

(3) Provides authority for the Secretary to review on his own initiative, or at the request of any public or private non-profit agency, or the state, the distribution of programs under this title within the state. The Secretary is authorized to reallocate funds within a state, after a hearing and upon his written determination of findings that there is an inequitable distribution.

(4) Extends the authorization for two years, at $300 million for Fiscal Year 1979 and $350 million for Fiscal Year 1980.

Sec. 105. Adds a new title authorizing direct funding for federally recognized Indian tribes and tribal organizations. Direct funding is presently authorized in the Older Americans Act under Title III, but the Commissioner has never exercised the "by-pass" authority. Under the new Title VI the tribes would have the option to apply for direct funding or to continue to receive services under the new Title III.

Existing law, under the by-pass provision bases the funding to tribal organizations on the state's Indian population aged 60 and over. The new Title VI in the bill would reduce the age limitation to 55, because of the reduced life expectancy of the American Indian.

$25 million is authorized for Fiscal Year 1979, and $30 million for Fiscal Year 1980 for this title, however, the title would not be operative until the appropriations level reaches $5 million.

TITLE II

Provides authority for a White House Conference on Aging to be held in 1981, authorizing such sums as may be necessary.

In 1950, the first White House Conference on Aging was held. Since then, Congress has approved measures for a White House Conference on Aging in 1961 and 1971. A conference in 1981 would continue to provide a forum to develop future national policy in the field of aging.

TITLE III

Requires the U.S. Commissioner on Civil Rights to undertake a comprehensive study of discrimination based on race or ethnic background in any federally-assisted programs for the elderly. The 1975 amendments required the U.S. Civil Rights Commission to conduct a study on age discrimination in federal programs. This further study on racial discrimination would expand upon the general age discrimination report recently completed by the Commission.

[1] These services are included in the overall large authorization for social services under title III.

[2] S. 2850 requires States to use at least 6 percent of its administrative allotment for support of State ombudsman program.

[3] Directs the Commissioner to expend at least $5 000,000 of model projects funds for fiscal years 1979 and 1980 on legal services demonstration projects.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today we consider an act whose purpose is to achieve for the older people of this country the health, honor, and dignity to which they are entitled.

Today we consider an act which helps provide the nutrition, transportation, community employment, and legal services that they need.

Today we consider an act which allows us to say to ourselves that we understand the debt we owe to those who have built this country for us and to begin to make good on that debt.

Mr. President, This is a strong act which provides for a pervasive and comprehensive set of services.

There is a clear need for these services. The rapid increase in funding—from $7.5 million in 1966 to close to $700 million in 1978—is only due to the neglect which preceded it. Over and over we have heard about the millions of elderly persons who cannot get around and look to special transportation to maintain a vital nexus with the world.

We know of the people for whom an occasional visit by a homemaker helps them remain proud of their residences.

We have seen the millions of people who are sustained by the nutrition program, which brings them together for meals and companionship—and we have seen the millions more who are waiting to be served but for whom we have not yet provided.

And we know of the tens of thousands of hard-pressed older workers who are again given an income and their dignity while making our communities better places to live in.

Today, this act is beginning to answer many of those needs:

Some 563 area agencies provide services to 11 million people, and over 90 percent of the eligible population is covered by an area agency. Title III of the act, the block grant title, provides for most of the services under the act aside from nutrition, gathering places, and employment. Under this title, transportation, information, legal services, in-home services such as visiting homemakers, and residential repair are all funded in order to insure decency rather than deprivation for older people.

There are now 549 multipurpose senior centers supported under title V of the act. Title VII programs provide over 450,000 meals per day to over 2 million older Americans a year.

Finally, title IX of the act provides job opportunities to people over the age of 55 with low incomes—there are now 47,500 job slots reserved under this program.

Mr. President, the services provided under this act are so necessary, and the people who receive them are so deserving that I expect that my colleagues will warmly reaffirm this act. I would like to expand on some of the improvements that we have incorporated into the act which are of special concern to me:

First. Separate authorization for nutrition services: We have recognized the need for greater coordination and integration of nutrition and other services in this act: Previously there were few incentives and regulations to have the area agencies and the nutrition programs work together.

But, we knew that we had to keep a separate authorization for that purpose and I am most proud that we did so. As was stated in a letter that I sent to members of the Human Resources Committee and the Special Committee on Aging, along with Senators CHURCH, WILLIAMS, JAVITS, PERCY, and RIEGLE:

. . . the nutrition program is too vital to risk with undirected authorizations and appropriations. We know that this program must be expanded for the sake of the people who are now waiting for their sustenance, but for whom there is no room. One authorization, even with a hold-harmless provision, might not meet the real needs in this area.

In testimonial after testimonial, in waiting list after waiting list, we have seen the need and desire for this program. I hope to see it expand in the years to come so that we may more adequately meet the needs that are so evident.

I also hope that we can expand our coverage under this act to provide a nutrition authorization for the homebound elderly and handicapped. I have proposed an amendment to achieve this purpose; Senator HATHAWAY has proposed a perfecting amendment to my amendment and I accept his amendment.

Second. Legal Services: We have greatly expanded the availability of legal services to the elderly. We cannot underestimate these services, for the elderly are especially dependent upon them. First, upon reaching retirement age, older Americans rely increasingly upon Federal programs, such as social security, medicare, supplemental security income, railroad retirement, food stamps, veterans pensions, and other programs. They depend upon these programs for their very livelihood.

The figures point out the extent of that relationship.

Those over 65 represent 11 percent of the population but three times as much of the health costs in this country. Two-thirds of the health costs of those above 65 are borne by the Government. Social security accounts for over half of the income for 7 out of 10 individuals over 65, and half of the couples over 65. Supplemental security income is the sustenance of 2¼ million older Americans.

All too often, the incredible maze of regulations, applications, certificates and documentation necessary to qualify for benefits or correct errors in benefit rates leave the elderly without their proper benefits.

Second, the elderly are more likely to suffer untoward effects of unsatisfactory dealings with other private individuals. They are more likely to suffer from housing problems or energy disruptions. For instance, they are far more likely to be traumatized when their landlord does not send up the heat, or make repairs, or if they are evicted.

Third, the elderly have been given new rights in recent years which may take court actions to enforce—for instance, transportation systems built with Federal funding have special requirements to meet the needs of the elderly.

And, it is our responsibility to provide legal services through the Older Americans Act. Millions of the elderly cannot afford the fees for such service. Millions of older Americans have incomes below the poverty line. And millions more have incomes that may be above the poverty line but are too low to permit for privately funded legal services.

We have significantly advanced aid for legal services in this reauthorization.

We have not only kept legal services among the priority services, but we have mandated that every area plan must have a legal services program for the elderly—This mandate is contained in the language which requires that the area plan provide for the expenditure of some funds on each of the priority services.

We have greatly increased our national level efforts through the provision of special demonstration projects and back-up centers in a new section of the bill. The Commissioner is authorized to foster legal services for old Americans, and we have reserved $5 million which he must use for this purpose. Currently nationally contracted legal services programs for the elderly are funded at about $2 million.

We have directed the Federal Council on Aging to conduct a study on the need for a separate authorization for legal services for the elderly and on the factors which may cause area agencies to spend less on legal services than should be spent, absent such a separate authorization.

Third. Community service employment: We are trying to meet the economic needs of the older worker through this program: We are trying to meet the social needs of the older worker through this program: And we are trying to meet the needs of communities throughout the Nation for public services through this program.

With this reauthorization we have taken two important steps forward under this title. First, while we have changed the Federal/non-Federal matching ratio for participation in these programs, we have also greatly expanded the waiver provision. This will strengthen this program in communities with high unemployment; these communities have fewer funds to pay for the program but need it all the more. The Secretary has not made much use of the waiver provision under the current law. We must make greater use of matching fund waivers, to best meet the variety of local needs. We have expanded waiver eligibility for this purpose, by allowing for waivers for programs in areas of high unemployment, as well as those which are economically depressed. Eligibility under the "area of high unemployment" standard should be much broader than that under the existing "economically depressed" provision.

Some communities may be relatively better off and we may be able to spread our dollars further through an increased non-Federal match. But we must remember that this is not true of all communities. Many cannot afford such an increased match, or may have a greater need for employment services than the average. For these communities the Secretary should not require a 15-percent match.

In this reauthorization we have also said that supplemental security income payments shall not be counted in determining eligibility for community service employment. SSI payments in some States disqualify recipients under current law: Yet their employment needs are great and they should be allowed to participate in the program on the basis of those needs.

Fourth. Study by Civil Rights Commission on Discrimination: We have required the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights to do a study of race or ethnic discrimination in any Federal program for older Americans. The findings and the recommendations of the commission should help us to act to insure that we put an end to any such discrimination which may exist.

Fifth. Federal Council on Aging: In 1973, Congress established the Federal Council on Aging and charged it to work actively to promote the interests of older people in all Government programs and policies.

With this authorization we are strengthening that role. The reauthorization mandates that the Administration on Aging make adequate staff available to the Council so that it can fulfill its functions. And, we have enlarged its functions by giving it charge over a series of studies directed at getting the most out of the funds and the efforts that we dedicate under this act.

With Nelson Cruikshank at the head of the Council, we can be sure that every move we make to give the Council a larger role will be a move well rewarded. Mr. Cruikshank has long been in the forefront of the fight for the rights of older Americans and has been among the most perceptive in assessing their needs. For many years he was the distinguished president of the National Council of Senior Citizens. This strengthened role for the Council and for its leader is among the greatest of the changes we have made in the Older Americans Act.

Mr. President, today we renew our commitment and expand upon our commitment to older America. It is a commitment which we make and honor for their sake, for it richly adds to their lives. But, too, it is a commitment that we make for our own sake. It is a pact that we are entering with civilization and humanity, a pact which reaffirms our basic principles and our vision of the good society.

Thomas Jefferson wrote:

> The care of human life and happiness and not their destruction, is the first and only legitimate object of good government.

The best way to judge how closely we are coming to this objective is to look at how well Government is caring for the "human life and happiness" of the Nation's elderly. That, Mr. President, is why we must vote to reauthorize the Older Americans Act.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, as ranking minority member of the Aging Subcommittee, I am pleased to lend my strong support to these amendments.

The Older Americans Act represents an important commitment to improving the quality of the lives of our elderly and providing services which can reduce public and private expenditures associated with institutionalization and medical care for older Americans.

None of us can help but be moved by the plight of many older people, living on fixed incomes, faced with rising inflation, waning physical health, and isolation.

Over the years, the U.S. Congress, and State and local governments have responded to the needs of its older citizens with numerous programs aimed at providing for their special needs. There are now about 50 separate programs in the Federal Govenment alone, administered by approximately 17 different departments and agencies. But the shocking fact is, that with all these programs, so many needs are still not being met. In 1975, 25 percent of the older population was below or near the poverty level, and a staggering number of older Americans are in need of nutritious meals and other basic services, such as transportation, home health aide, chore assistance, information and referral, and legal services. Many are not taking advantage of the existing programs because of confusing Federal, State, and local bureaucratic regulations and redtape. Our attempts to help our senior citizens lead more dignified and independent lives are fraught with fragmentation and duplication which contribute even more to the indignity and dependency they suffer.

When the Older Americans Act first passed in 1965, the objectives of Congress were to provide community-based social services which were badly needed to assist older people to live independently and to provide a central agency to act as an advocate at the national level for the aging. By 1973, when the act was revised, the primary concern was implementing a better organizational scheme at State and local levels to plan and coordinate all resources at the local level.

The network of area agencies which was created at that time provides identifiable offices with responsibilities for a coordinated and comprehensive system of services. But even the direct services authorized by the Older Americans Act are fragmented and confusing, some being administered directly by area agencies, some by States, or directly through the Commissioner on Aging. Area agencies are given the responsibility to plan, assess the needs, and coordinate services, but the separate funding approach to programs has given them very little flexibility to meet these needs based on local determinations.

The consolidation of the programs under titles III, V, and VII of this act represents an attempt to avoid further fragmentation and to strengthen the network of aging programs. Consolidating these services should provide for better integration of social services with senior centers and nutrition programs.

In addition, the amendments before us today require State agencies to take account of the needs of low-income and minority elderly in developing and implementing their plans. I want to make clear that this is in no way an attempt to make the Older Americans Act a poverty program. But we must face the reality that our resources are finite, and we may not be able to provide all the services we would like. We must use our resources wisely, and help those most urgently in need first. In writing these amendments, we have recognized that the low-income elderly and those elderly who belong to minority groups are usually the neediest. But there are other considerations, such as frailty and isolation which must be included in determining priorities for services.

Mr. President, one of the most important and successful programs authorized by the Older Americans Act is the nutrition program. This program has not only provided many people hot, nutritious meals, but has also offered relief from the isolation and loneliness which has become synonymous with being old in America, by providing meals in social settings. However, most nutrition sites face long waiting lists for both congregate and home-delivered meals. We have increased this program by approximately 50 percent above present services levels because of the serious need which our committee hearings documented.

Although the present title VII programs now heavily emphasize meals in congregate sites, we want to make clear that this expansion is to provide nutritious meals to those who need them most, whether they are attendants of congregate sites or confined to their home. I, for one, am particularly concerned about the needs of the handicapped and homebound elderly. But I strongly oppose the amendment, which we will consider today and which was rejected by the committee, to enact a separate authorization for the delivery of meals to the home-bound, or so-called "meals on wheels." Instead of a separate authorization, the committee has chosen to assure that no quotas are placed on home-delivered meals and to emphasize that appropriated moneys can be used for either congregate or home-delivered meals, based on decisions of local agencies. A separate authorization would place an arbitrary limit on both types of meals. This kind of federally mandated limit is inconsistent with the committee's intention to allow greater local determination of needs. It is unlikely that any two areas of the country would have the same percentages of mobile versus home-bound elderly. Regional differences such as sparse population or availability of transportation would be important considerations in these decisions. A separate funding authorization, while seen by some as a way to expand home-delivered meals, could actually reduce the amount which could be used for such meals in some areas.

I would also like to make clear, in response to some fears that Federal subsidies might erode community volunteer activities and voluntary financial support, that we have added language to assure, inasmuch as possible, that federally funded meals should not supplant or compete with private voluntary efforts. There is certainly room for additional support from all sources, and local agencies could take account of such voluntary support in determining how best to use Federal funds. A consolidated approach will allow area agencies to supplement private voluntary efforts instead of replacing or competing with Federal funds.

Mr. President, I believe that the consolidated approach we have taken in this bill will greatly improve these programs for the elderly and allow many more older Americans to lead more dignified and independent lives.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I have been asked by the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), who is the ranking majority member of the Subcommittee on Aging, to state that he is necessarily absent, and has asked me to indicate that tomorrow he will be inserting into the RECORD a statement on this bill.

Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) I ask unanimous consent that Ken Pierce of his office be granted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Rhode Island, as our good friend the Senator from New York, the ranking Republican member (Mr. JAVITS), has just done.

I truly believe that the Older Americans Act was landmark legislation. I think we waited many, many years before we recognized this group of Americans needed our help. They were such good Americans that they did not complain as early as other groups, and therefore it was very late when we first passed an Older Americans Act.

I think, after seeing it work for a few years, the Senate committee has done a wonderful job in improving it where it had some very serious stringencies. It has provided flexibility. Where consolidations were in order, it has provided for them. Basically, it was my privilege to have worked with them, and to have introduced S. 2609, with a number of sponsors. I find a number of provisions in that bill incorporated in the committee bill. For that I am most grateful.

So, Mr. President, I am pleased to join with the distinguished chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Aging (Mr. EAGLETON), and its ranking minority member (Mr. CHAFEE) in urging the Senate to give prompt and favorable consideration to S. 2850, the 1978 amendments to the Older Americans Act.

On February 28 I introduced S. 2609, which was the first comprehensive set of amendments to the Older Americans Act introduced in the 95th Congress. In that legislation, which was cosponsored by Senators PERCY, BROOKE, DOLE, SCHMIDT, BELLMON, and HATFIELD of Oregon, we proposed the consolidation of a number of programs which had previously been part of separate titles in the Older Americans Act. In introducing that legislation I noted that—

As a local office holder in Albuquerque, New Mexico, I gained first-hand insight into the needs of older persons, and I began to seek workable solutions for meeting those needs. New Mexico has a small population, but the number of families who retire to the Southwest is having a profound impact upon the States in that region. As a city official, I soon discovered that the needs were great, the resources limited, and the governmental authority to meet these needs was vague and diffused among numerous agencies. One of my goals on coming to the Senate was to restructure the various aging programs so as to create a comprehensive-coordinated service delivery system which would meet the needs of older persons. For too long we have made people fit programs instead of shaping flexible programs to meet the needs of our people.

Mr. President, I am pleased to note that the Senate Subcommittee on Aging recommended an even more far-reaching program consolidation than we had proposed. I commend Senator EAGLETON and Senator CHAFEE and all the other members of the subcommittee for shaping a bold and innovative approach to the delivery of programs and services to older Americans.

As the ranking minority member on the Special Committee on Aging, I was pleased to see that a number of the proposals put forth in S. 2609 were incorporated into the bill which is now pending before the Senate. I would like to note briefly several of the innovations which can be traced, in whole or in part, to the provisions contained in S. 2609:

Authority to construct senior center facilities in areas where there are no suitable structures available, generally rural areas;

A new title of "Grants for Indian Tribes," which will provide a direct funding mechanism, so funds will flow from Washington, D.C. to tribal governments for the provision of social and nutritional services to elderly Indians;

Authority to convert surplus Bureau of Indian Affairs' educational facilities into extended care facilities, community centers, nutrition sites, job care centers, and delivery points for other social services;

Expansion of home-delivered meals program, and the inclusion of non-elderly handicapped individuals;

Establishment of a mechanism within the Administration on Aging to reduce the paperwork burden on State and local aging offices,

Provision of separate funding for social service programs and nutrition programs authorized under this act;

Authority for the States to do multi-year planning for the delivery of social services to the elderly;

Authorization of the Commissioner on Aging to waive the 10-year leasing requirement for senior centers under special circumstances;

Guarantee the continual flow of agricultural commodities to senior nutrition programs;

Expands the range of services that may be provided under this Act to include health training pre-retirement and second career counseling;

Authorizes community long-term-care model projects designed to explore innovative approaches to the delivery of long-term-care services to the elderly;

Preparation for the 1981 White House Conference on Aging.

Mr. President, needless to say there are many significant differences between S. 2850 and the legislation I introduced on February 28th. While I support the overall thrust of S. 2850, I reserve the right to offer several amendments which I feel will improve the bill and make it an even better vehicle for delivering vitally needed social nutritional services to older Americans.

Mr. President, I considered offering an amendment that would have transferred the Older Americans Volunteer Programs, RSVP, Senior Companions, and Foster Grandparents from the ACTION Agency, which presently administers them, to the Administration on Aging. When these programs were originally authorized they were part of the Older Americans Act. In 1971 they were transferred to the newly created ACTION Agency by an Executive reorganization plan, and they have been administered by the ACTION Agency since that time. I have recently become concerned by several developments which have led me to question the wisdom of retaining the present administrative arrangement.

I believe that one of the great and endearing qualities of the American character is our strong, deep-seated commitment to volunteerism. Foreign observers, dating back to Alexis D'Toqueville, have noted this unique characteristic in the American personality. Throughout my public life I have seen first hand the valuable contributions of countless volunteers. I have sought ways to encourage volunteerism and perhaps no programs better reflect that objective than does RSVP, Foster Grandparents, and Senior Companions. The beauty of these programs is that they benefit everyone involved. The senior volunteer has his or her life enriched by the service they render to their fellow citizen. The community, the retarded child, the homebound citizen all benefit by receiving the services and tender-loving care of a compassionate older person.

My deep commitment to improving the quality of life for our senior citizens, and my strong believe in the value of volunteerism caused me to have an especially negative reaction to the ACTION Agency's fiscal year 1979 budget request. While the Peace Corps, VISTA, and some innovative programs favored by the ACTION national leadership received favorable treatment in the budget process, the Older Americans Volunteer Programs were not allowed to grow and in the case of RSVP, actually cut by almost 25 percent. The RSVP budget in New Mexico would have been reduced from $200,000 to $153,000 and two or three projects would have been eliminated.

I responded to this budget recommendation by immediately writing to Senator WARREN MAGNUSON, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, urging a restoration of this ill-conceived budget reduction. I would note that the administration has agreed to restore this cut and the budget amendment should be transmitted to the Congress in the near future.

I was also concerned by the tone of the ACTION Agency leadership toward RSVP and its future place in their operations. I do not believe that RSVP was envisioned to be a poverty program. The statute does not require that it be a poverty program, and I believe we should resist efforts on the part of the ACTION Agency to administratively convert it into a poverty program.

At the same time the Older Americans Programs were being allowed to stagnate, the leadership of ACTION was asking for vague authority to commit an additional forty million dollars' worth of public funds in ill-defined urban volunteer programs. Mr. President, the urban programs are not at question today, but I think it does reflect the attitudes and thinking of the ACTION leadership, and that attitude is one of indifference toward the existing Older American Volunteer Programs.

Mr. President, I have decided not to offer an amendment transferring the Older American Volunteer Programs from ACTION to the Administration on Aging. I have discussed my concerns with Sam Brown, the Director of ACTION, and he has given me verbal assurances that the OAVP will receive a higher priority within his Agency and its fiscal year 1980 budget. He has also assured me that he will not attempt to convert these programs into poverty programs by administrative action.

Once again, I would like to commend Senators EAGLETON, CHAFEE, and the other members of the Senate Subcommittee on Aging, for their diligence and dedication in shaping this important legislation. I hope, Mr. President, that when this measure reaches the joint conference committee, the House conferees will see the wisdom of the Senate approach and give us a conference report containing the broad, flexible mandate outlined in the Senate bill, rather than the narrow series of categorical programs which will tend to make this program cumbersome and costly to administer at the State and local level.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1471

(Purpose: To strengthen the long-term care ombudsman program)

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I have two amendments I will send to the desk. They are noncontroversial, I think both managers of the bill and the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island have been made aware of them and agree with them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator wish them taken up en bloc or separately?

Mr. HATHAWAY. Separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1471.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will continue.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 99, line 24, insert before "commissioner" the following: "State agency responsible for licensing or certifying long-term care facilities in the State and the".

On page 99, line 24, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon.

On page 105, line 9, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and".

On page 105, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following:

"(15) provide that the State, from funds allotted under section 304(a) for part B, social services, will use an amount equal to an amount not less than 1 per centum of such allotment or $30,000, whichever is greater, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of paragraph (11) of section 307 (a), except that (A) the requirement of this paragraph shall not apply in any fiscal year in which a State spends from State or local sources an amount equal to the amount required to be spent by this paragraph, and (B) the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to American Samoa, Guam, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.".

On page 110, strike out lines 12 through 15.

On page 110, line 16, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

On page 112, line 10, strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 112, line 15, strike out "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, the first amendment is to improve the provisions which I sponsored in S. 2850 relating to the State long-term care ombudsman programs. The bill requires each State agency on aging to establish and operate an ombudsman program. As the Committee on Human Resources found, such programs conducted under the existing model projects authority in the act have well demonstrated their effectiveness, and argue persuasively that each State conduct such a program. S. 2850 accomplishes this goal.

The amendment I am offering today does not change the responsibilities of the ombudsman program as set forth in section 307(a)(11) of the bill, with the minor exception of requiring the ombudsman to submit to the State agency responsible for licensing or certifying long-term care facilities in the State the data collected regarding significant problems uncovered. Such data is already required in S. 2850 to be submitted to the Commissioner on Aging.

The more important part of the amendment I am offering relates to the way in which the ombudsman program is funded. The current bill requires the States to expend a minimum of 6 percent of State administrative funds to carry out the ombudsman program. This would unnecessarily restrict the States and may pose an unintended burden on those States which have a very limited amount of State administrative money in the first place. It would also mean that many States would have to spend an amount which is considerably less than the amount that is currently being spent for an ombudsman program in the State. This was not the intent.

The amendment I am offering would provide for greater flexibility in the funding of this program. Rather than requiring States to expend funds from their administrative moneys, the amendment would allow them to use funds from their total social services (part B) allotment. Each State would be required to spend at least 1 percent of these funds or $30,000, whichever is greater, for the ombudsman program. Based on current estimates, this approach should help to insure that each State has a sound program without unnecessarily mandating the expenditure of excessive amounts of money for this important program. Of course, it should be made clear, the money required to be spent is meant to be a minimum—States certainly have the option of using a larger amount of their allotments for the ombudsman program, if they desire to do so.

On the other hand, it should also be made clear that any State which spends from State or local sources an amount equal to the amount required to be spent under this provision need not, but may of course, use Older Americans Act funds as well. My amendment clarifies this point.

I might add here that the approach to funding which I am offering today is preferred to the mechanism incorporated in S. 2850 by all consulted, including the ombudsmen. I think it is a strong improvement and am pleased to offer this amendment. It will insure the continued viability of State ombudsman programs which are performing a very necessary and valuable service to the many residents of our long-term care facilities.

I have discussed this amendment with the floor manager, and I understand he is prepared to accept it.

Mr. President, are we under a time limitation with respect to amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, we are.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I am quickly trying to find the ombudsman part that is in the committee bill. There is provision made for it.

As I understand, the thrust of the amendment of the Senator from Maine is that instead of funding the ombudsman service out of administrative funds, he would have it funded out of social services. Is that the principal thrust of the amendment?

Mr. HATHAWAY. Yes, that is correct. It would have the percentage, I think it is 6 percent, out of administrative funds. This is just 1 percent of 30,000, whichever is greater.

Mr. EAGLETON. Will the Senator give me the section of the bill?

Mr. HATHAWAY. It is 307(a)(11) which is on——

Mr. EAGLETON. That is at page 98 of the bill.

Mr. HATHAWAY. That is right.

Mr. EAGLETON. It reads:

> Establish and operate, either directly or by contract or other arrangement with any public agency . . . a long-term care ombudsman program . . .

What is it that the Senator is changing, in addition to the funding of it out of administrative funds, transferring that to social services? Is the Senator changing the amount that is to be funded?

Mr. HATHAWAY. Turn to page 110, line 12.

Mr. EAGLETON. The committee bill says "an amount not less than 6 percentum of the sums allotted."

Mr. HATHAWAY. My amendment changes that to 1 percent of the $30,000, whichever is greater, of all the social services money.

Mr. EAGLETON. Will the Senator explain to me what the change in that formula would portend? The 6 percent, if our figures are right in the committee bill, would compute out to about $4 million nationwide. Can the Senator tell me what his formula would cost nationwide? I do not understand why he wants to change the percent.

Mr. HATHAWAY. We found that it was an error in the figuring that was done. It will not come to $4 million nationwide. It will come to only a little more than a million dollars. That was the probem.

I think the program is important enough to have it more heavily funded. If we use the formula at page 110, it is not enough money.

Mr. EAGLETON. The background of this 6 percent, as I understand it, is that it was thought that about $4 million nationwide would be all that should be spent in this regard.

Mr. HATHAWAY. The problem is that it does not come out to that, according to our figuring. It was intended to come out to $4 million, which would be more than enough, because our own formula comes out to about $2.5 million.

According to our figures, the 6 percent comes out only to about a million dollars for funding throughout the Nation.

Mr. EAGLETON. Do I correctly understand, then, that the Senator's formula, in any event, will set the figure at about $2.3 million?

Mr. HATHAWAY. Ours comes out to $2.5 million, which is about $1.5 million more than we figure the committee bill will come to nationwide.

Mr. EAGLETON. I must say that I am not very sanguine about either the Senator's formula or the one in the committee bill, for that matter. But the thrust of the Senator's amendment is that he wants to take that figure down to $2.3 million.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I would like to increase the amount that is going to be available. Our figure evidently is different from that of the Senator from Missouri. If this were correct, we would leave it the way it is. It turns out that it is not correct. The 6 percent comes to $1 million, rather than $4 million. We did not think that was enough money for this program. So, rather than increase the amount that would just come out of administrative money, we changed the formula so that it would come out of regular social services part B money, but it would be a much smaller percentage—1 percent.

Mr. EAGLETON. I am of a mind to accept the amendment. I want to hear from the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HATHAWAY. We can suspend this matter and go to the other amendment, if the Senator wants to check the figures.

Mr. EAGLETON. I do not know whether we can get the figures precisely at this time.

I have in mind what the Senator is seeking to do. If we find, between now and the passage of this bill and when we get to conference, a more efficacious way of doing what the Senator wants to do, we will have some latitude to do it in conference.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Does the Senator want to examine the amendment and wait until he gets to conference?

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to comment briefly on this amendment.

As a matter of philosophy, I feel very reluctant to have amendments that mandate a certain amount of spending in a certain area. For example, this amendment says that a State must spend 1 percent of the social services part B allotment—I do not know how much that is—or $30,000, whichever is greater.

Take a small State like mine, where one ombudsman could cover the State: $30,000 for one ombudsman is quite a bit, when we pay our Governor only $42,000. I have great reluctance with respect to this. For example, if we look at the first page of the Senator's remarks in this area, we see that the current bill requires a State to expend a minimum of 6 percent of administrative costs. Six percent of administrative costs for a State that is getting the minimum—and many States are getting the minimum, the flat minimum, which is $275,000—is $16,000. That amount for an ombudsman seems to be fair enough. If they want to spend more, they can.

However, under the Senator's proposal, I think a State could be spending a great deal more on an ombudsman than they choose.

There is not much money in this act, anyway, and there are more vital means of spending sums than going for a higher amount for an ombudsman.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Is the Senator saying that $30,000 is too much for Rhode Island?

Mr. CHAFEE. You can go anywhere in our State in less than a day, and $30,000 is quite a bit, yes.

Mr. HATHAWAY. For salary and travel expenses and secretarial help that would be too much?

Mr. CHAFEE. That is not necessarily the minimum, because the Senator says either that or 1 percent of the part B allotment.

Mr. HATHAWAY. But the 1 percent for Rhode Island would be less.

Mr. CHAFEE. Is that so? I have trouble locating part B State allocations under the new authorizations.

Mr. HATHAWAY. We have a table here—I do not know whether the Senator from Rhode Island has it—which shows what every State would be spending under this amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. For example, could the Senator just take 1 percent off that social services part B allotment? What would that come to for Rhode Island?

Mr. HATHAWAY. What the 1 percent would come to?

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I can do it in a moment. I do not have it available right here.

Mr. CHAFEE. I wonder if there is some way we could go to the next amendment.

Mr. HATHAWAY. It would be $11,573.

Mr. EAGLETON. Could we set this amendment aside? None of us seems to be too comfortable with it. Perhaps the staff can go over the figures, and we all can understand what the formula would accomplish.

Mr. HATHAWAY. It is my understanding that it has been worked out by the staff ahead of time. I will be glad to set the amendment aside and go to the next amendment. Maybe that will have the same problem. As I mentioned earlier, this was supposedly worked out by all staffs, and it was a matter of having these amendments accepted. If that is not the case, I would just as soon wait.

Mr. EAGLETON. I suggest that the Senator set aside this amendment and to go on to the second one.

Mr. CHAFEE. I suppose we will have to obtain unanimous consent.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my first amendment be set aside and that we proceed to the second amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MARK O. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that John Ramig, of my staff, be accorded the privilege of the floor during debate and votes on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MARK O. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator from Maine.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for 5 seconds, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Tom Polgar, of Senator MORGAN's staff, be accorded the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1472

(Purpose: To clarify the emphasis of the long term care demonstration project provision)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY) proposes unprinted amendment numbered 1472.

On page 128, line 7, before the period insert a comma and the following: "with special emphasis upon the assessment of need, the development of a plan of care, and the referral of individuals, in the delivery of such long-term care service".

On page 128, line 16, strike out "which" and insert in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "and approaches to the delivery of such services. Such programs and approaches".

On page 130, line 8, after "distributed" insert the following: "throughout the Nation".

On page 128, line 3, after "both," insert the following: "institutions of higher learning,"

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, the purpose of the second amendment is to clarify section 413 of S. 2850. Section 413, which I was pleased to sponsor in committee, authorizes model projects to demonstrate innovative approaches to comprehensive and coordinated long-term care service delivery. The intent of this provision was to explore how we can best serve individuals in need of long-term care, to foster maximum independence, and prevent unnecessary and costly placement in institutions.

Long-term care for an individual may include any mix of health and social services, including, for example, skilled nursing care, therapy, personal care services, homemaker and chore services, emotional, financial, nutrition, or legal counseling, transportation, and even friendly visiting. To obtain the total package of required services today is not easy. Yet the unavailability of one crucial element of the package may mean the person in need of long-term care may not be able to remain at home.

It is not uncommon for an elderly person to face a bewildering array of fragmented long-term care services and financing arrangements. Mechanisms for coordination of these services are lacking. The purpose of section 413 is to demonstrate how long-term care services can be coordinated so an individual can in fact obtain a total package of services without being bounced from agency to agency in search of a sympathetic ear. The idea is to explore how any of a variety of agencies providing some aspect of long-term care service can take responsibility and insure that the total needs of the eligible individual are evaluated and met.

The amendment I am offering today would clarify this provision by placing greater emphasis on the need for case management, that is, evaluation, provision of services or referral as appropriate, and followup. It would also make clear that institutions of higher learning are eligible to apply for grants. Since this is a research and demonstration program, it is intended to be as flexible as possible. Finally, the amendment would further clarify that the program shall be carried out throughout the Nation. Needs may be different in different parts of the country. I am hopeful that as we explore alternatives to institutionalization, we will uncover a variety of approaches, appropriate for all of our citizens, wherever they may reside.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I have not seen this amendment myself before, but as I have listened to Senator HATHAWAY's explanation thereof, I think it is compatible with what we had in mind in this section on community long-term care, model projects, et cetera, and insofar as I hear it, I think it would be acceptable.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is consistent with what we had in the bill itself. I am not sure just exactly what the amendment does that we have not already provided for.

Will the sponsor of the amendment stress what we are doing differently than we have in the bill before us?

Mr. HATHAWAY. This puts emphasis on the case management rather than just a delivery of services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, may I have a few minutes here?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. I shall simply ask one question of the sponsor of the amendment. In his explanation he says, one, that it makes institutions of higher learning eligible. I think there can be no objection with that. Second is that it is intended to be as flexible as possible.

I wonder if the flexibility is going to be maintained if all these bases have to be touched about which he talks on the first page. Does he see any contradiction or does he believe that the flexibility will be there?

Mr. HATHAWAY. I think the flexibility will be there. It is just that these bases are mentioned to make sure that some attention is given to them. That does not mean in every individual case all of the bases would have to be covered.

Mr. CHAFEE. I have no objections, Mr. President.

Mr. EAGLETON. I have no objections.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1471

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, on my own time let me ask the Senator from Maine would he be amenable to amending his first amendment to read, instead of $30,000, $20,000? In such event, I understand that would satisfy Senator CHAFEE, it would satisfy me, and we could dispose of that.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I will be happy to change it.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, not only make it $20,000, but this is going to get difficult because the amendment says 1 percent or as of now it would be $20,000, whichever is the most, and I am assured that the 1 percent comes to only, I believe he said, $11,000 in Rhode Island.

Mr. HATHAWAY. $11,000, that is correct.

Mr. CHAFEE. Would that be true for the other States I guess?

Mr. HATHAWAY. It will count for all the States, that is right. It is not very much.

Mr. CHAFEE. They may always go higher if they so choose?

Mr. HATHAWAY. That is right. They may. The Senator is correct.

I will be glad to reduce it to $20,000.

Mr. CHAFEE. I thank the Senator. That is amenable to me.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. EAGLETON. Let us call up the amendment and have it stated.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up my first amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment automatically recurs, and the clerk will state the modification.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY) proposes unprinted amendment numbered 1471. On page 2, the modification reads as follows:

On page 105, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following:

"(15) provide that the State, from funds allotted under section 304 (a) for part B, social services, will use an amount equal to an amount not less than 1 per centum of such allotment or $20,000, whichever is greater, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of paragraph (11) of section 307 (a), except that (A) the requirement of this paragraph shall not apply in any fiscal year in which a State spends from State or local sources an amount equal to the amount required to be spent by this paragraph, and (B) the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to American Samoa, Guam, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.".

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 99, line 24, insert before "Commissioner" the following: "State agency responsible for licensing or certifying long-term care facilities in the State and the".

On page 99, line 24, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon.

On page 105, line 9, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and".

On page 105, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following:

"(15) provide that the State, from funds allotted under section 304(a) for part B, social services, will use an amount equal to an amount not less than 1 per centum of such allotment or $20,000 whichever is greater. for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of paragraph (11) of section 307 (a), except that (A) the requirement of this paragraph shall not apply in any fiscal year in which a State spends from State or local sources an amount equal to the amount required to be spent by this paragraph, and (B) the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to American Samoa, Guam, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.".

On page 110, strike out lines 12 through 15.

On page 110, line 16, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

On page 112, line 10, strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 112, line 15, strike out "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

Mr. HATHAWAY. With that modification, Mr. President, I understand we are in agreement, and I yield back the remainder of my time on the amendment.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HATHAWAY. I yield.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Robert Walkington and Gwen King, of my staff, be accorded the privilege of the floor during deliberations and votes on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield back the remainder of my time on the Hathaway amendment.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1473

(Purpose: To provide disaster reimbursements to certain States)

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I have an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana (Mr. MELCHER) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1473:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

"(c) The Commissioner shall provide reimbursements to any State upon application for such reimbursement, for such funds a State makes available to area agencies in such State for the delivery of social services during any major disaster declared by the President in accordance with the Disaster Relief Act of 1974.

"(d) Each State may receive reimbursement under Section 412 with respect to any major disaster, in amounts which do not exceed 5 per centum of the amount allotted to such State for the fiscal year involved.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, earlier this year parts of Montana were hit with devastating floods. Following a winter of heavy snow, saturating spring rains swept south central Montana.

By mid-May rain began pelting an area crisscrossed with ravines and creekbeds. Between May 16 and 23, 6 to 10 inches of rain fell—five times the normal rainfall for that period.

On May 29, President Carter declared five counties in south central Montana eligible for Federal disaster relief. Six days later, the President declared two more counties disaster areas.

The offices set up by the Federal Disaster Assistance Administration have now closed and the Federal officials have gone home. But the problems caused by the flood remain: 862 individuals applied for Federal assistance; 70 governmental units have applied for help and FDAA officials estimate that total help will be more than $8 million.

The measure of the flood can be seen by the fact that the Yellowstone River, a major tributary of the Missouri, crested at 16.5 feet above flood stage at Miles City, Mont.—the highest flood level ever recorded there.

National Weather Service officials said that the flooding of the Big Horn River was severe enough to be classified as a "200 year flood." That means that under normal weather cycles, the river is not forecast to reach such flood levels, except once every 200 years.

Recovery from disasters of this order are never easy for anyone. The problems, however, are often the most difficult for the elderly. When basic services are interrupted and temporarily rearranged, it is the old who have the hardest time getting back on track. They have transportation problems. They have trouble getting to relief centers. They have trouble dealing with the thicket of confusing procedures that often accompany and aggravate an already unsettling time in their lives.

The amendment I offer today is similar to a provision included in H.R. 12255, the House version of the Older American Act amendments. It would allow the Commissioner on Aging to reimburse any State upon its application for funds that State might have available from model project funds for the delivery of social services during any major disaster declared by the President in accordance with the Disaster Relief Act of 1974. The maximum dollar allotment for this service would be no more than 5 percent of the model projects funds available.

This amendment would not involve a great deal of money. In 1977, for example, $500,000 was set aside under model projects for weather disasters. Seven States used that program and spent a total of $303,785. Thus far in 1978, three States have taken advantage of the program for a total of $120,000 out of $250,000 set aside.

I point this out to the Senate, so that my colleagues will know that my proposal is realistic in utilizing unused funds for disaster purposes for the elderly. No group is more desperate for help in a disaster than the elderly and none more deserving.

This is a simple, relatively inexpensive way of giving the States the opportunity to act quickly in an emergency to aid the elderly. I hope my colleagues will support it.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana I take it his amendment does not increase the overall authorization in this section of the bill?

Mr. MELCHER. No. The amendment does not increase the authorization.

Mr. EAGLETON. Am I correct that in the House version of the bill there is a provision similar to this but that provision mandates and makes obligatory that such moneys be set aside, whereas the Senator's amendment makes it purely permissive?

Mr. MELCHER. Mine makes it not mandatory that the money be set aside but mandatory if the money is available that it will be used for this purpose on application.

Mr. EAGLETON. But the Commissioner does have, under the Senator's amendment, discretion on whether to set moneys aside at all.

Mr. MELCHER. I might reply to the Senator by saying that if the money is there in the model program then the Commission shall, but only to the extent that there is unused money available in the model program.

Mr. EAGLETON. Well, Mr. President, the amendment, as we thought we understood it or as it had been verbally described to us, had led me to believe that it was a permissive matter with the Commissioner and not mandatory. If, in fact, it is permissive, I would have no objection to it.

Mr. MELCHER. Will the chairman yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes.

Mr. MELCHER. I so modify my amendment, making it permissive, changing the first "shall" to "may."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

"(c) The Commissioner may provide reimbursements to any State upon application for such reimbursement, for such funds a State makes available to area agencies in such State for the delivery of social services during any major disaster declared by the President in accordance with the Disaster Relief Act of 1974.

"(d) Each State may receive reimbursement under Section 412 with respect to any major disaster, in amounts which do not exceed 5 per centum of the amount allotted to such State for the fiscal year involved.

Mr. EAGLETON. The amendment, now modified to read "may," is satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. I thank the Chair.

I agree with the Senator from Missouri. As I understand it now, it is optional on the part of the Commissioner that he may provide reimbursement to any State.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MELCHER. I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. President, and I thank the two distinguished Senators.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that Sally Rogers and Ed Twilley of Senator THURMOND's staff and Maryann Simpson and Sherri Kramer of Senator STEVENS' staff be granted the privileges of the floor during the debate and votes on this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that request? We cannot have any rollcall vote until after 3 o'clock.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is not a sufficient second.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am wondering whether the Senator would withhold making the request until we have a chance to talk about this other amendment. Will the Senator withhold?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order while a quorum call is in progress.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will continue to call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk continued with the call of the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objections? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 2449——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Montana, as modified. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeds to call the roll.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I would like to have a rollcall on this amendment, but there are not enough Senators present to give a second at this point, and we cannot have a vote until 3 o'clock. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from Montana be set aside until 3 o'clock.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I did not hear the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Dakota please use his microphone?

Mr. ABOUREZK. I would like to get the yeas and nays on this amendment, but there is an order that we cannot have a rollcall vote until 3 o'clock. Therefore, I ask that it be set aside until 3 o'clock.

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire, I think the Senator from Massachusetts has a major amendment. I have three or four minor ones and one major one. Does the Senator intend to ask for the yeas and nays on every amendment?

Mr. ABOUREZK. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. So the same request will be made for a vote at that time on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and that it be deferred?

Mr. ABOUREZK. Yes; because there is an order that we cannot have a rollcall vote until then.

Mr. DOMENICI. And then the Senator will ask for yeas and nays, and when the time arrives have a rollcall vote?

Mr. ABOUREZK. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I note that there are plenty of Senators now on the floor for a second for the yeas and nays, and I do not see any reason not to get that far.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there may be no rollcall votes until the hour of 3 o'clock, at which time the rollcall will occur.

The Senator from Massachusetts.

AMENDMENT NO. 2449

(Purpose: To provide a separate home delivered nutrition services authorization)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 2449, and ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), for himself and others, proposes an amendment numbered 2449:

On page 83, line 17, insert "(1)" after "(b)".

On page 83, line 19, insert before "part" the following: "under subpart 1 of".

On page 83, line 20, before "Nutrition" insert "Congregate"

On page 83, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following:

"(2) There are authorized to be appropriated $100,000,000 for the fiscal year 1979 and $120,000,000 for the fiscal year 1980 for the purpose of making grants under subpart 2 of part C (home-delivered nutrition services) of this title.".

On page 120, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following:

"Subpart 1—Congregate Nutrition Services

"PROGRAM AUTHORIZED".

On page 121, line 10, strike out "or may be home-delivered meals".

On page 121, line 15, strike out the end quotation marks and the period.

On page 121, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following new subpart:

"Subpart 2—Home-Delivered Nutrition Services

"PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 336. The Commissioner shall carry out a program for making grants to States pursuant to State plans approved under section 307 for the establishment and operation of nutrition projects for older persons which, five or more days a week, provide at least one home-delivered hot, cold, frozen, dried, canned, or supplemental foods (with a satisfactory storage life) meal per day and any additional meals which the recipient of a grant or contract under this part may elect to provide, each of which assures a minimum of one-third of the daily recommended dietary allowances as established by the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council.".

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may need.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that Letitia Chambers, Jeff Lewis, and Dave Rust of my staff be granted floor privileges during the remainder of the consideration of this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without

Mr. KENNEDY. I make a similar request for Mr. Parham and Mr. Urwitz of my staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, my amendment No. 2449 to S. 2850 provides for a separate authorization for home-delivered meals under the Older Americans Act.

Fifty-four Senators have joined me in sponsoring this amendment—Mr. CHURCH, Mr. MCGOVERN, Mr. DOLE, Mr. PERCY, Mr. CLARK, Mr. BROOKE, Mr. MELCHER, Mr. MCINTYRE, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. CANNON, Mr. ABOUREZK, Mr. PELL, Mr. BAYH, Mrs. HUMPHREY, Mr. DURKIN, Mr. CULVER, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. STONE, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. MARK O. HATFIELD, Mr. HASKELL, Mr. SCHWEIKER, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. CASE, Mr. CHILES, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. SASSER, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. WEICKER, Mr. PAUL G. HATFIELD, Mr. HART, Mr. FORD, Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. GRAVEL, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. GLENN, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. HODGES, and Mr. STAFFORD.

In 1971, I introduced legislation which created the nutrition program for the elderly under the Older Americans Act. It has become a most effective and popular program. We are all familiar with this nutrition program which provides hot meals 5 days a week in congregate settings such as churches, schools, and senior centers. If you have visited these group sites in your States, you have seen that the program's contribution is not just a good meal but also provides for other services and socialization for the elderly. The program has often been credited with drawing isolated elderly back into active participation within their communities.

The nutrition program for the elderly also supports meals delivered to the homebound. However, these home-delivered meals have been restricted because of the high cost of transporting such meals and because of the program's emphasis on congregate meals. I am told that many States still have waiting lists for the congregate program and the pressures to expand the number of meals served at these sites is great.

Therefore, the congregate program and home-delivered meals program have been forced to compete for funding. My amendment would provide for a separate authorization for home-delivered meals and guarantee this program its own support. This authorization, $100 million for fiscal year 1979 and $120 million for fiscal year 1980, would allow the home-delivered meals programs to support approximately 215,000 meals during fiscal year 1979 and 258,000 meals in 1980. This will allow for a needed expansion of the home-delivered meals under the nutrition program for the elderly which currently only serves about 72,000 meals daily to the homebound.

My amendment would not take away any support from the congregate program. S. 2850 provides for $375 million for fiscal year 1979 and $425 million for fiscal year 1980. This would enable the congregate programs to serve close to 800,000 meals daily in 1979 and 900,000 in 1980. Currently, the group meals are served to only 480,000 persons daily and the expansion of the program is certainly needed and deserving in many of our States.

Mr. President, the Senate Nutrition Committee led by Senator MCGOVERN conducted a survey of the nutrition programs for the elderly and found that there is an estimated 3 to 4 million elderly persons who are homebound. Many of these homebound persons will end up in institutions and nursing homes if adequate care is not provided to them in their homes. Home-delivered meals are a vital part of the home services which are needed to keep them in their homes. A doctor from Nantucket has testified that "the doctors will release a patient on condition he can be enrolled in a meals program."

In-home services not only provide a more dignified form of health care for our elderly, but are also very cost-effective. A recent GAO report reveals that the average public cost of in-home services in 1977—including a meal—ranges from $78 to $172 per month depending on the degree of health care. The average public cost for a nursing home in 1977 was $458 per month. We cannot ignore this difference.

There has been concern expressed that this amendment would reduce the flexibility that States should have in determining their needs for home-delivered and congregate meals. This is not necessarily true. Even with separate authorizations for congregate meals and home-delivered meals, the States have the discretion to fund the areas in accordance with their area plans. These plans specify the particular needs of each community and the State funds the local programs in accordance with these needs. If a certain area's agency's plan calls for more home-delivered meals than another area's plan, the State has the flexibility to fund accordingly. This is the purpose of the area plans which the States review and approve before allocating funding under the Older Americans Act.

Mr. President, we have seen how effective the nutrition program for the elderly has become. It could become even more effective if there is a coordinated effort between the congregate meals program and an adequately funded home-delivered meals program. Our elderly should be assured of a well-balanced meal whether they are ambulatory and can visit their community sites, or homebound due to illness or mobility problems. Peggy Sheeler, R.N., who is President of the National Association of Meals programs, describes it well. "These programs should not be either or, but work in concert with one another. First to lessen isolation and then to lessen institutionalization."

This amendment is supported by the National Council of Senior Citizens, the National Council on the Aging, the American Association of Retired Persons, the National Association of State Units on Aging, the National Association of Area Agencies on Aging, the National Association of Title VII—nutrition program—Directors, the National Association of Meals program, the National Urban League, the National Governors Association, the National Council of Jewish Women, the Community Nutrition Institute, the Food Research and Action Center, the Bread for the World, and the Interreligious Task Force on U.S. Food Policy.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will join the House in guaranteeing a home-delivered meals program for the elderly.

Mr. President, at this point, I would like to acknowledge the very substantial leadership of Senator EAGLETON and Senator CHAFEE on the whole nutrition program. They have been tireless in their dedication in pursuit of the program. I am offering this amendment acknowledging their leadership and their strong commitment to the program.

We do have a difference in terms of how we are going to provide home delivered meals. It is my very firm impression, based upon even the additional emphasis that has been given to home delivered meals in the committee bill, that we are talking anywhere from probably 12 to 14 percent of the resources being used for home delivered meals. That has held pretty constantly over the period of recent years. It was as low as 7 percent a few years ago, but it has about leveled off at the 12-percent figure. Given the need and success of congregate sites, what it does effectively say to the local agencies is, "Look, we can provide two or three times as many meals in congregate sites as we do on home delivered meals. We have need in both places."

It presents an absolutely extraordinary dilemma to the local agencies and the local personnel. It seems to me that we ought to fund a program that is going to have allocation of resources with a separate authorization and then hold Congress accountable. We have 2 to 3 million elderly people who have a need for these programs.

This is going to be a very modest program. We are going to hear complaints that it exceeds the budget and all the rest, but without doing this in a separate authorization and being able to justify and evaluate that program in a separate way, I think we are effectively putting the needy elderly people and the shut-ins in conflict with each other to try and get the scarce resources. I think that is an unjustifiable conflict.

We had a good opportunity to talk about this in the full committee. The members of that committee are aware of these issues.

Finally, I want to say in spite of our division on this particular issue, both the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Rhode Island deserve great credit from the Members of the Senate for the leadership they have provided in the whole field of nutrition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUMPERS). The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, both Senator CHAFEE and I are very sympathetic to home delivered meals for the elderly. The present programs we believe are very, very good and we see them expanding in the future. We have not been parsimonious in the committee version of the bill with respect to these nutrition sections.

The present authorized amount for nutrition, both for congregate setting and home delivered meals, is $275 million. That is existing law. Of that amount, $250 million is currently appropriated.

In the committee version of the bill we up the authorization to $375 million for fiscal 1979 and to $425 million for fiscal 1980. So our committee recommendation is a 50 percent increase over the current appropriation level, a rather substantial increase to say the least.

If we accept the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, which is an additional $100 million for fiscal year 1979 and $125 million for fiscal year 1980, the sum effect of the Kennedy amendment along with the committee bill would be about a 90 percent increase in these items.

When we are talking about nutrition for the elderly, Mr. President, I guess you could have an approach that the sky is the limit. Nothing is more near and dear to the hearts of all of us than adequate care for America's elderly, and adequate nutrition being the key element in that. But there are some limits to these budgets, Mr. President. There are some limits to these authorization bills. I think a 50-percent increase, as the committee has recommended, is justified and about all that I believe this bill can bear.

I do not know when we reach the veto point on some of these bills. I suspect between now and the end of this year President Carter is going to feel constrained to veto some bills because they not only will impose enormous budgetary loads on the fiscal 1979 budget being considered, but in the out years in terms of those enhanced authorizations they will impose even a greater budgetary impact in fiscal year 1980 and beyond.

Let me read briefly an excerpt from a letter from Secretary Califano on this particular amendment, dated July 17, 1978.

> The administration is strongly opposed to the proposed amendment.
> The Kennedy amendment—
> to the Older Americans Act to establish a separate authorization for home delivered meals. As I indicated to you in my letter of July 3, the administration supports the consolidation contained in the committee bill and endorses the local determination of programs tailored to meet the needs of each elderly community, which such consolidation allows. Adoption of a separate authorization for home delivered meals—
> And that is what the Kennedy amendment would bring into being—
> would clearly repudiate this philosophy of local control as to what is the best mechanism for serving the nutrition needs of the elderly. The new separate authorization for home delivered meals in the proposed amendment would add $100 million to the cost of the nutrition program authorized in the Older Americans Act amendments, which is an unacceptable increase to the President's budget. In the Department's view, there is already ample funding to expand the home delivery of meals in the increased authorization for nutrition programs in the bill. In addition, the specific prohibition from limiting the amount of funds to be used for home delivered meals insures that local flexibility in planning will prevail.

I think that letter, Mr. President, hits the two key elements: One, the impact on the budget; two, taking away, in essence, the local determination of how best to spend these nutrition moneys.

In some portions of a State, meals in a congregate setting may be the way to go, and after everything is discussed among the local authorities they may operate in that direction. Indeed, most of the nutrition money is spent through meals in congregate settings.

Yet, in another part of the State, meals in congregate settings may not be applicable, and in that area home-delivered meals would be the way to go. By having these two items in one authorization, it is one which affords, in my opinion, the maximum local flexibility to decide what is in the best interests of that particular community.

I would very, very much hope that the Kennedy amendment would not be adopted.

The Senator from Massachusetts has been very kind to Senator CHAFEE and myself insofar as complimenting us on the attention we have given to this bill. Let me say, no other Member of the Senate has spent as much time on matters relating to America's elderly as has the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. He attended many of the committee hearings on this matter.

In all candor I must say, and it should be part of the record, very clearly on in our hearings he indicated to me and to Senator CHAFEE that he thought home-delivered meals ought to be part of separate authorization. This home-delivered meals amendment of his has not been a late blooming item. It has been very much on the mind of the Senator from Massachusetts. He has vigorously pursued it at every opportunity in the hearing process and in committee. He is to be commended for the attention he has given to this piece of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I have a unanimous-consent request for personnel to be granted the privilege of the floor during consideration and vote on this measure: Bridget Baker, for Senator STEVENS, and Tom Wasinger, of Senator BARTLETT'S staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I want to join in the commendation that Senator EAGLETON has made of Senator KENNEDY'S efforts in this entire area. As has been said, no one has shown more consistent concern for the elderly and for their nutrition than has Senator KENNEDY. This amendment that the Senator has brought before us today is truly a difficult one.

I do not think anybody in the Senate would not gladly vote for more money for meals on wheels for the elderly but, as Senator EAGLETON has mentioned, we are in a bind here. Already we have increased the total amount for nutrition for the elderly from the $250 million that was appropriated this year. We are asking, instead of $250 million, for $375 million. That is a $125 million increase, a 50-percent increase, which is very substantial.

I think we all appreciate what difficulty not only authorizations and, more particularly, appropriations have on the floor of the Senate today. It seems to me that not only is this, in my judgment, unrealistic, but also, I want to reiterate a couple of arguments that Senator EAGLETON made.

To me, it seems like big brother in the U.S. Senate or the Congress as a whole saying to the States, "This is the way you have to spend your money. You people cannot withstand the pressures. All the pressures are to give the meals in a congregate setting. Instead, we are going to tell you that we are giving you $100 million more, and maybe you would like to use this for the congregate-setting meals, but you cannot; you have to use it for home-delivered meals. I just do not think that is the way we ought to proceed. In the committee report, we have language urging the area agencies to give deep consideration to home-delivered meals and not to leave that out of their consideration.

Second, I want to say, Mr. President, that there is a subsidiary problem that I am sure Senator KENNEDY has thought about, but I should like to bring it to the attention of the Senate, namely; the program called meals on wheels, which provides meals to the homebound, essentially started in many areas basically as a volunteer program. It is volunteers that do the driving and there is considerable concern that when the Federal Government moves in with its regulations, with its money, with its omnipresence, it is going to take away and destroy, in many instances, the voluntary aspects of the program.

So it could well be—I am not saying it will occur, but it could well occur that we shall end up getting fewer meals on wheels, fewer home deliveries, than we presently have.

But, Mr. President, it seems to me the key point is that we have increased very substantially the authorization for this program. I hope it sticks. I might say I do not know any other authorization or appropriation, anyway, that has gotten through the Senate recently that is a 50-percent increase. So we shall be lucky if we get that.

More important, I think we ought to leave it to those in the local areas, the area agencies, the people who, day to day, have to wrestle with these problems, to come up with how they think they can feed the most elderly in the most efficient way, but not solely using that criteria; not solely the most or the most efficient, but how they are going to take care, at the same time, of those who are homebound, to serve those who have the greatest need.

I might point out that in my own State, which, of course, I am most familiar with, we do see a combination of the meals on wheels and the meals in the congregate setting. As a matter of fact, those who prepare the meals in the congregate setting, prepare, in many instances, the meals that are then taken out through the meals on wheels. So they are not in competition. The volunteer groups come around and pick up the meals in the congregate setting and take it around to wherever it might be—housing for the elderly, or people living in their own homes. I have seen it in action. So, as tempting as this amendment is, Mr. President, and with as much appeal as it has, I hope that it will be defeated and that we shall proceed with the very substantial increase that we do provide for the total nutritional programs for the elderly.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The arguments that my good friend from Rhode Island makes are similar to the ones he made in the committee. The response that I make to those is that we have to look at what the fact of the matter is. The fact of the matter is, with regard to shut-ins, the program has virtually stabilized over the period of the last 3 years. It is effectively 10 percent. There have not been increases in the delivery of meals to elderly people and to those that are effectively shut in. Those hard and difficult choices are not being made as to the shut-ins as a practical matter today.

I think that, given the fact that the existing congregate-site program is vastly oversubscribed with good-quality programs—and I am sure both the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Rhode Island would agree with me—rarely do we find a program in which the actual appropriation impacts the local community as this program does. It has been an effectively run program because it is primarily sponsored by nonprofit groups, by church groups, and other groups in local settings that have been blessed, with a great deal of the spirit of voluntarism. The fact of the matter is that we are not getting the meals to those people who are, effectively, the shut-ins—both senior citizens and the handicapped. That is the question that is before us.

We have anywhere from 3 to 4 million shut-ins who are being denied, for one reason or another—the opportunity of being able to participate in this program. This amendment is providing for a very minimal Federal investment in the program. We can talk about the budget considerations, but effectively, with this program, we are talking about 215,000 meals in an eligible population of 3 or 4 million.

I respect, as I indicated earlier, the two leaders in this program, Senator EAGLETON and Senator CHAFEE, for bringing a recommendation to this body with a 50-percent increase. I admire and respect their bravery, particularly given the vote last time. The fact of the matter is that we saved the money on the HMO bill last week and we can apply it to the nutrition program this week. I can give assurance to the Senate that we shall give them an opportunity, on cost containment, to save about $50 billion by 1982 or 1983 if we really want a blockbuster that is going to do something about saving the taxpayers money and inflation.

I appreciate the comments that have been made, but I just think that the need is so critical and the value of this program has been tried and tested so well.

The final point is, if the State is not interested in this program, there is no requirement that they take any of the resources. I believe that they will, obviously, because I think that the program has been such an extraordinary success.

How much time, remains, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). The Senator from Massachusetts has 19 minutes remaining. The Senator from Missouri has 18 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas rises in support of amendment No. 2449 to the Older Americans Act, which he cosponsored originally with the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), and the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN). Our amendment calls for separate authorization for the home-delivered meals program for the elderly.

Mr. President, I find myself in agreement with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. I hope that will not be disastrous to our amendment because it is an area that is of great concern to some of us who serve on the Nutrition Commitee. Also, I think the point should be made, as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts just pointed out, that in this amendment, we are reaching another group—not just senior citizens, but also those who are homebound because of some handicap. We are talking about a half million people who fall into that category. We are talking about a total number of between 2 and 3 million Americans who cannot participate in congregate feeding programs.

Certainly, it is not the intent of the sponsors of this amendment in any way to diminish the importance of the congregate program; and certainly, I share the views expressed by the distinguished floor manager of the bill. There has been an increase in funding, and I realize it is very difficult to find enough funds to go around. Last Friday, we just approved the Child Nutrition Act. Then, too, we also had to face up to the fact that in certain programs, cuts had to be made because of constraints on the budget. But as we look at this particular program, the success we have had, and the growth that has been made in the program, it is also necessary to look at the history of the home-delivered meals program to see the need for this change.

It is obvious that home-delivered meals have never been a high priority issue within the nutrition components of the Older Americans Act.

I think the Senator from Massachusetts and perhaps others pointed out that at one time, Federal regulations placed a 15-percent limit on home-delivered meals. Although this restriction has been lifted, the Administration on Aging estimates that only about 14 percent or less of the nutrition funds are now going into home-delivered meals.

It seems to me that understanding all the demands on the budget and understanding the very worthwhile programs that could be increased to take care of any surplus we might have, there is justification for creating a separate authorization for this program. It is a program overshadowed by the popularity of the congregate meal program. Without protection of this sort, I do not see that home-delivered meals will ever be fully operational.

THE PROBLEM

Commonsense tells us that a home-delivered meals program would be more costly to operate. But I think compared to the institutional costs are if we cannot provide for ourselves. As pointed out in a letter sent to all our colleagues, a recent GAO report reveals the Government's average monthly cost providing in-home services, including a meal, ranges from $78 to $172, depending on the individual's health needs. In contrast, the GAO study showed it costs the Government approximately $458 a month to keep the same person in an institution.

So, notwithstanding the very excellent arguments made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri and the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, I am cosponsoring this amendment, I support this amendment.

In order to serve the greatest number, it is understandable when project directors opt for congregate rather than home-delivered meals. But simply understanding does not improve the diets of the Nation's homebound.

The homebound elderly have little if any voice in their Government—they cannot easily apply pressure to see that they receive their due benefits under the Older Americans Act, as do their able-bodied neighbors. I think it is a situation where in the past we have left the decision to the local authorities, and the need has gone largely unacknowledged and certainly unanswered. Because of this record, I feel we must create a separately authorized program for home-delivered meals.

COST EFFECTIVENESS

Although this amendment adds to the cost of the bill, our thrust in health care is toward preventive medicine. Authorities now agree that one of the most cost efficient practices of preventive medicine is the maintenance of a good daily diet.

Although this amendment involves an initial outlay of expenses, it holds the promise of future cost savings. This amendment is an investment in the future good health of our homebound senior citizens and homebound handicapped citizens. I think it is an amendment that we cannot afford not to approve.

CONCLUSION

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment No. 2449. It establishes our support in the importance of home-delivered meals to the homebound, as a practice of preventive medicine and as an improvement in the nutrition of homebound citizens.

I will conclude by making the point I started with, that for some time the Senator from Kansas has been concerned about the homebound handicapped. They may be 15 years of age or 35 years of age; they do not have to be senior citizens to benefit from this amendment.

It seems to me that we are depriving persons in real need, because of a handicap, of a right to have the home meal service, and I support the amendment.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I have a few brief comments and then I am going to move to table the amendment, we will get the yeas and nays and then the vote will occur some time after.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the Senator permit me to make a short speech in favor of the amendment following his remarks?

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, how much time do I have left on this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 18 minutes remaining.

Mr. EAGLETON. I will yield on my time.

Mr. CHURCH. I think perhaps we have time on the amendment itself.

Mr. EAGLETON. Senator KENNEDY is not on the floor. I will yield 5 minutes on my time.

Mr. CHURCH. I need a little more time than that.

Mr. EAGLETON. I will yield the Senator 5 minutes. By that time Senator KENNEDY will be on the floor.

Mr. CHURCH. I thank the Senator very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. EAGLETON. He is speaking in support of the amendment, I am opposed. Nevertheless, I will yield 5 minutes of my time to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I have just spoken to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and he indicated he would yield to me such additional time, if any is needed, that I may require for the completion of this statement.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of the Kennedy-Church-Dole-McGovern-Percy amendment to establish a separately authorized home-delivered meals program under the Older Americans Act.

This amendment has strong bipartisan support. A clear majority of the Senate—55 Members in all—have sponsored this proposal. It also has the strong support of leading organizations in the field of aging, including the National Retired Teachers Association-American Association of Retired Persons and the National Council of Senior Citizens.

As things now stand, the nutrition program for the elderly authorizes meals in group settings—such as senior centers, schools, churches, and other nonprofit settings—and for the homebound.

But as a practical matter, the existing funding level—as well as the projected authorizations under the committee bill—will permit only a modest effort on behalf of the homebound elderly.

Historically, only about 14 to 15 percent of the meals served have been for homebound older Americans.

The nutrition program for the elderly now provides about 480,000 meals daily to aged persons, including 408,000 at congregate or community sites and 72,000 meals on wheels.

The committee bill would authorize approximately 680,000 group meals daily and 120,000 home-delivered meals in fiscal 1979, assuming the existing ratio of congregate to home-delivered meals continues.

Our amendment would authorize more than 1 million meals daily for older Americans in fiscal 1979—about 800,000 group meals and 215,000 home-delivered meals. It would provide almost three times as many meals on wheels as under existing law and 79 percent above the projected level under the committee bill.

As chairman of the Senate Committee on Aging, I have been told repeatedly that many older Americans are unable to participate in a meals program at a senior center or elsewhere because they are confined to their homes.

Quite often these individuals are placed in a nursing home simply because other alternatives—which may include a home-delivered meal—are not available.

A separate home-delivered meals program would help to respond to these problems and provide greater flexibility in enabling these persons to continue to live independently in their homes.

It would also help to complement the congregate meals program by freeing up funds to be used for meals in group settings. The value and worth of the group meals program have been amply demonstrated time and time again. I want to insure that it continues to grow.

Finally, a separately authorized meals-on-wheels program demonstrates that good public policy can be humane and cost effective at the same time.

A recent General Accounting Office report on "Home Health—the Need for a National Policy To Better Provide for the Elderly"—reveals that the public cost to maintain a person with limited income in a nursing home is $458 per month.

In sharp contrast, services to enable older persons to live independently in their own homes, such as home-delivered meals, cost just a fraction of the charge for institutionalization. In-home services typically cost about one-sixth to one-third of the amount for institutionalization, depending upon the type of services needed and the individual's degree of impairment.

Mr. President, before closing, I would like to respond to an argument that will be made during this debate, and indeed, has already been made: Separate authorization would interfere with local discretion in determining how nutrition funds should be spent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 5 minutes yielded by the Senator from Missouri to the Senator from Idaho have expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield whatever time is needed.

Mr. CHURCH. However, State offices on aging will still have discretion in funding congregate and home-delivered meals, whether there are separate authorizations or a single authorization for both programs. If a particular area agency on aging plan recommends more home-delivered meals than another local unit's request, the State agency would still have flexibility to fund accordingly. A major purpose of the area plans is to permit a determination of local priorities. And, this would still be retained under our amendment or the committee bill.

Second, the major service deliverers and providers—the National Association of Area Agencies on Aging, the National Association of State Units on Aging, the National Association of Title VII Directors, and the National Association of Meals Programs—all support our amendment. I personally know of no one better equipped to assess the needs of localities than members of these organizations who work with and serve the elderly every day.

For these reasons, I urge adoption of the Kennedy-Church-Dole-McGovern-Percy amendment.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield me 3 or 4 minutes?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield the Senator such time as he desires.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I am very pleased to rise in support of amendment No. 2449 to S. 2850, the Older Americans Act of 1978.

My interest in the plight of the Nation's homebound elderly dates back to a hearing the Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs held in my home State of South Dakota on March 18, 1974. At that time the committee heard witnesses, many of them long-time friends of mine, describe the successes of the title VII congregate program. But they asked why something was not being done for those senior citizens who were physically unable to make it to the nutrition site. Today we can begin to answer that question by doing something for the homebound elderly—our most dependent citizens.

After this problem was brought to my attention, the Nutrition Committee developed a questionnaire designed to determine how well the title VII program was working and what improvements could be made to the program. Grassroots people were asked to design their ideal program. The results of that questionnaire published in November of 1976, in a print called The Homebound Elderly and a followup print, "Title VII Survey," led to the legislation we have before us now. Most of the recommendations made then are incorporated in this amendment.

This amendment is another very constructive part of our efforts to feed America's hungry. We have failed to reach the 3 to 4 million shut-in elderly, who, due to their physical limitations, are confined to their homes and remain largely outside the scope of current feeding programs. It is time to remedy this tragic situation.

The survey of title VII project directors under the Older Americans Act released by the committee highlighted the director's belief that a separate feeding program, operated through and in conjunction with title VII, is essential if we are to extend our agricultural bounties to the homebound elderly.

While persons of all ages share a common need for adequate nutrition, achieving a balanced diet is particularly difficult for the aged. As old age approaches, metabolic changes require a reduction in caloric intake while necessary levels for protein, vitamins, and minerals remain the same.

For the homebound elderly, this is an impossible task. These persons cannot leave their homes to shop; find it difficult to prepare food; and lack the incentives that companionship provides. Quite simply, in their isolation and loneliness, good health is a less compelling pursuit than it is for those of us who are more mobile.

Whether the cause is low income, nutritional ignorance, lack of motivation, poor health, or a wide range of other common afflictions, numerous experts tell us that, even in the general elderly population, millions are malnourished. For the homebound, these diet problems are even more severe and the incidence of malnutrition is higher.

The result has been a disturbingly high level of anemia, mental depression, subclinical pellagra, and protein deficiency, as well as higher rates of illness and longer, less complete convalescence.

In response to these unique nutritional problems of the aged, the Congress in 1972 established a nutrition program for the elderly, title VII of the Older Americans Act. Last year this program provided approximately 480,000 hot meals and various supportive services each weekday in a congregate setting.

Title VII is, by philosophy and structure, committed to providing an environment where the lonely and withdrawn senior citizen can meet with friends and enjoy their company as well as a nutritious hot meal. This idea makes as much good sense today as it did when enacted in 1972. It deserves our continuing support.

Unfortunately, however, the congregate meal philosophy, when combined with severe budgetary limitations, virtually excludes the homebound elderly. These 3 to 4 million Americans by the nature of their condition, cannot realistically attend the congregate meal site. Yet, last year only 13 percent of title VII meals were delivered to homes, a figure roughly equal to 72,000 of the 480,000 meals served.

Under the current congregate approach, feeding the estimated needy homebound would require a title VII program expansion in the area of 800 percent. Attempting to meet the need of the homebound elderly under the present design of title VII without a separate and additional commitment is obviously impractical and highly unlikely.

The evidence clearly indicates that for these several million persons, a home-delivered, nutritious meal often makes the difference between additional years in their own homes or institutionalization in costly nursing homes. When a senior can no longer shop or prepare meals, when hunger becomes a daily experience, there is currently no alternative available other than a nursing home or hospital.

A meals on wheels program would, therefore, reduce spending in the health care sector. Expenditures for nursing homes last year reached $9 billion, an increase of over 20 percent from 1974. In fact, these expenditures have grown steadily and substantially in the past 9 years, with the Government paying a major and increasing share. In 1975, public outlays were over $5 billion, 60 percent of which was paid by the Federal Government.

These costs are much higher than they need be. Studies carried out by gerontologists in numerous localities have consistently shown that from 10 to 40 percent of nursing home residents are not in need of institutional care; many are there simply because they cannot cook for themselves. Yet because of the limited choice of services, and in many cases the lack of home-delivered meals, the aged are often forced to seek an institution even though it may not be appropriate to their needs.

The cost of a nursing home is generally over $20 per day, while a home-delivered meal costs under $2. The studies conducted by the Nutrition Committee demonstrated among other things, that an investment of $80 million to provide from 125,000 to 175,000 home-delivered meals per day will reduce nursing home expenditures from $800 to $400 million.

We have as a matter of national conscience and integrity pledged ourselves to the elimination of hunger in America. We should not take this commitment lightly, nor can we in good faith now abandon our goal, because the days of unlimited prosperity seem to have ended. The fullest measure of a society is not gained during times of great wealth; we reveal our true character only when commitment requires sacrifice.

It should be noted that these figures are extremely conservative estimates. They are associated only with a first year savings of nursing home costs based on an $80 million meals-on-wheels program. They do not include the cost savings expected from reductions in the frequency and duration of hospitalization due to nutrition-related illnesses; nor do they project the potential savings of an expanded meals on wheels program reaching larger numbers of the homebound elderly.

It is true that a substantial portion of the freed funds would probably go to expanding service needs. But it is at least clear that we can take action which will insure a more efficient use of public funds in this year, while minimizing the excessive institutionalization of our homebound elderly.

Up to this time, the Federal Government has largely left the task of feeding the homebound to chance.

While local meals on wheels organizations have done a tremendous job with their limited resources, they cannot without Federal assistance tackle more than a small portion of the need.

The bill which Senators KENNEDY, DOLE, and PERCY, and I are introducing today along with 50 other Senators, starts us in the right direction.

Mr. President, this legislation actually has been in the process of development for several years. It has gone through considerable study and public hearings and analysis over a long period of time. It is an idea whose time not only has come but also is long overdue.

As has been pointed out here by the Senator from Idaho, the Senator from Massachusetts, and others, we have between 3 and 4 million shut-in elderly who, due to their physical limitations, are confined to their homes and remain largely outside the scope of the current feeding programs. Yet, there is a process by which we can reach these elderly shut-in citizens, and that is through the delivery of meals to the home.

As Senators know, we have a small program which is reaching a tiny fraction of our shut-ins in that fashion at the present time. The problem with the way the program is funded presently, aside from the fact that there is not enough money to do the job of taking care of the nutritional needs of our older people, is that we have set up a situation in which those who are participating in the so-called congregate meals program are almost invited to to declare war on those who are shut in and unable to come to the congregate feeding sites.

So we have the unfortunate situation that I think has been invited by the lack of appropriate attention by Congress and the lack of appropriate funding, under which we set up unnecessary hard feelings and divisions among the elderly themselves and among the administrators of the program, who are faced with the impossible situation of making a decision as to whether you are going to use part of too limited funds to take care of a group of people who are homebound and unable to get to the central feeding areas or whether you are going to deprive those who are participating in the congregate program. All in all, it makes for a most unsatisfactory situation for our older people.

It has been argued by some that this is a responsibility that should be met by the States, in an effort to provide more adequate funding and to relieve the conflict that now exists. The fact is that there is nothing in the amendment as now proposed that forces any State to take the funds if they do not want to participate.

What we do offer is an opportunity for more adequate funding. I do not think I need to review the specific provisions of the amendment. They already have been described on the floor by other Senators.

As one who has worked for a number of years in the field of nutrition, I cannot think of any more urgent area right now in which Congress needs to act than to meet this sad and tragic deficiency in the way we respond to the nutritional needs of the elderly citizens who are the most vulnerable, the shut-ins, those who are unable to have the benefit either of companionship or association with others or to have the benefits of the nutritional offerings that this program can bring.

It is my understanding, Mr. President, that approximately 55 Members of the Senate have now joined in cosponsoring this amendment. I think that is some measure of the support the program has. Those groups that speak for our senior citizens are supporting this measure, and I hope the Senate will see fit to adopt it.

I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for yielding me time.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, is the Senator from Maine going to offer a perfecting amendment?

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Another amendment is not in order until all time has been yielded back on this amendment.

Mr. HATHAWAY. The Senator from Maine is not offering an amendment at this time. I simply am seeking a clarification from the Senator from Massachusetts. I have asked him to yield 5 minutes, which he has consented to do.

I understand that the thrust of the amendment is to have another authorization for home delivered meals.

Under the authorization in existence now, the State can use that money for home delivered meals or for meals at congregate sites, but there is a hold harmless provision in there so that they cannot take the amounts unless new money is added.

I am concerned about this: If the amount of money the State actually receives under the Senator's amendment is not sufficient for the individual States to take care of what they consider to be their needs or what they want to spend for home delivered meals, would they be precluded from going into this first part and taking us much additional money as they want and, beyond the hold harmless, any new money that might be appropriated for home delivered meals?

Mr. KENNEDY. I know of no such restriction. I would welcome any comment from the Senator from Missouri. As I understand it, the hold harmless would apply to existing congregate sites at the present time. The increased authorization is new money, and the determination would be made under the existing title, so that they could use it for congregate or for home delivered meals. If a local judgment were to be made that any of those new funds would be used for home delivered meals, I know of no such restriction that would prevent them from using that for home delivered meals. If this amendment is accepted, there would be the other authorization as well.

Mr. EAGLETON. I am not sure that is the case. Under existing law, there is one pot of money, and out of that pot comes money for meals in a congregate site and home-delivered meals.

Under the committee bill, we keep it the same. We increase the authorization from $275,000 to $375,000. There is no hold-harmless provision insofar as that pot of money is concerned.

Mr. KENNEDY. I may be incorrect, but I understood that even with the increase, you could not reduce the amounts on congregate sites below what is being spent. Since there is no hold-harmless clause, the concerns of the Senator from Maine would be relieved; because what he is interested in is to see if moneys can be used in this particular pot from home-delivered meals as well as the amendment I offer, as I understand it.

Mr. EAGLETON. If I understand what the Senator from Maine is trying to do, it is as follows: EAGLETON and CHAFEE think there should be one pot of money for both. KENNEDY, CHURCH, et al. think there should be two pots. The Senator from Maine is for a pot and a half. On the one hand, he said, "I am for two pots; but if I do not like what is appropriated in that second pot, I want to go back a little to pot No. 1."

Mr. HATHAWAY. That is correct.

Mr. EAGLETON. So he wants various pots to look at.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I wish to make sure that the State is not bound by this new amendment to use only the money that comes under that authorization for the meals-on-wheels program. Maybe nothing will be appropriated under that, or maybe a very small amount, nowhere near the amount that the State wants to appropriate for that purpose. In that event, then, after they use up all the money they get under the new authorization of the Senator from Massachusetts they can go back to part 1 and use whatever amount they want in addition to that for the meals-on-wheels program. That is all.

Mr. EAGLETON. I understand what the Senator from Maine is trying to do.

Mr. HATHAWAY. If the Senator from Missouri will yield to me for one quick question, he said there is no hold harmless clause with respect to part I.

Mr. EAGLETON. There is none.

Mr. HATHAWAY. That means as to 100 percent of that money, if the State wished to do this, if the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is agreed to, the State could take all the money in part I and part II and use it for meals on wheels. Is that correct?

Mr. EAGLETON. No; it would not. Under the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts and his colleagues, they want two separate and distinct pots.

Mr. HATHAWAY. That is right.

Mr. EAGLETON. They are willing to take their chances with the Appropriations Committee. Either pot could be appropriated at zero. And if it is, there is no commingling. They want it separate and distinct. EAGLETON and CHAFEE want it together and to give maximum flexibility to the local people to decide how much for congregate and how much for meals on wheels.

But the Senator from Massachusetts and 54 other Senators say, "We want to decide here and now there shall be two separate programs, and if one gets no money too bad." That is what they are saying, because the way they set it up it is two separate and distinct sources of authorization. I think the Senator supports my position.

Mr. HATHAWAY. In light of what the Senator just said, I think when the time expires on his amendment I shall offer an amendment to clarify the position that I made so that a State that wishes to do so can go beyond the amount allocated to it in part 2 for the purposes of meals on wheels.

Mr. EAGLETON. If I may ask the Senator from Maine, he thinks that the State should have some local determination, I take it, in deciding how to allocate these funds. Why does he not support leaving the provision as it is in the committee bill?

Mr. HATHAWAY. I think the problem with respect to the local authorization in this case is because it is cheaper to have congregate meals. So you get the board saying, "Here is your choice," to the board, "three meals in St. Joseph's hall or one meal delivered to this poor invalid down the street." They opt for the three meals so they can serve three people that way.

This amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts sets a certain amount of money they can use only for the invalid down the street, and I think that is a good idea.

But there may be some areas of the country where all of that money that is allocated to them under this second part will not be enough for the invalids and others who they want to take care of through the meals on wheels program, and the amendment I will offer at the end of the debate on this amendment when the time expires will be to allow those States to go into part I for any additional funds they want for meals on wheels.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the authorization of Senator KENNEDY says, as I understand it, that $x$ dollars of the amount should be for meals for congregate settings. That is part I. The second authorization is meals on wheels.

So, as I understand it, and I can be corrected by the Senator from Massachusetts, under his proposal we cannot achieve what the Senator from Maine is seeking. As I understand the proposal of the Senator from Massachusetts, you will not be able to use any of the first part, that is, the meals in the congregate setting money for meals on wheels; is that correct? Certainly that is the way I understand it. So what the Senator from Maine is seeking cannot be done under the proposal of the Senator from Massachusetts and to me it just brings up all the problems of us sitting up here in the Senate and telling people down in the local community who are trying to wrestle with these problems what exactly they can do and they cannot do.

To say that they always will come down on the side of feeding more people in the congregate setting and forget the people at home, the homebound, simply does not acknowledge the facts.

In my State 20 percent of the money is spent on meals on wheels, even though they are not required to spend any of it on that.

I simply wish to support firmly what the Senator from Missouri, Senator EAGLETON, and I are working on here which is to give some latitude to the people locally because if we do not we are liable to have the equations thrown all out of whack here when the appropriations bills come through.

Under the proposal of the Senator from Massachusetts one-fifth of all the money is going to be spent on home meals. I am not sure that is the best way it should be spent. It may be in one place and maybe not in another. But also we have to realize that when you say people are homebound many of them can eventually get out to the congregate settings. I think it is good that they do, and I think every incentive should be for them to get out to the congregate areas as soon as they are able for all the benefits that come, as were so wisely pointed out by the Senator from Massachusetts in his initial remarks. There is much more to this than just meals. There is fellowship and companionship and all that comes with the congregate settings.

So I think there are many flaws in this proposal that there be separate appropriations for each.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island mind if his final comments are on his time because we are running a little short of time?

Mr. CHAFEE. I do not mind.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time do we have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Each side has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, basically, what I object to is putting the elderly people in the situation where they are fighting with each other in the local communities, in the local agencies. On the one hand, we have the situation where the one elderly group can say you can have three times as many meals if we do it in the congregate site than if we deliver that meal to the person who is shut in, who is farther down the road. That is the situation that is taking place.

Quite frankly, I would rather have them fighting with the Appropriations Committee than fighting among each other. That is rather basic, because I quite frankly think they will do better in that particular arena. Beyond that, it is interesting that the elderly groups that have been living with this program, breathing with this program, benefiting from this program, want this type of division, because they understand it, because they have seen the heartache and tragedy that is taking place in instance after instance around this country.

I salute the State of Rhode Island for the way they have been able to manage it in his home State.

The tragedy is they are forced and required, because they can serve from three to four times the number of congregate sites and they are hard pressed to allocate the resources.

The Senator from Maine asked in a particular situation, and there are rural situations, would it be objectionable to be able to transfer at least from the first section in terms of home-delivered meals. I have no objection to that particular kind of transfer. There are particular kinds of circumstances. The tragedy is unless we earmark for the home delivered meals in those areas we are going to continue what has been the record for the period of the last 3 years nationwide, and that is virtually stability at 10 percent. Given the kinds of needs that the Senator from South Dakota, the Senator from Kansas and I found in the Nutrition Committee there is a crying need for home delivered meals.

So if the Senator from Maine wants to offer that amendment for the particular needs in rural communities, I will welcome it.

I do not know how much time remains, but I am willing to yield back the remainder.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield back the remainder of his time?

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, we are about at the conclusion of this debate. Lest Senator CHAFEE and I be considered cruel and heartless, let me emphasize that our recommendation, the committee recommendation, increases the amount appropriated for nutrition by $100 million. It increases it 50 percent over what is currently being appropriated. I sometimes am bemused. Every weekend Senators go back home to their constituents. I read some of the clips around the country where Senators have been home. I hear time and again Senators saying the Federal Government is spending too much money.

I hear time and again Senators saying that the deficit is so large that it is feeding the fires of inflation. But then I find it a bit hard to understand that when it comes to the point in time where you are going to say, "Well, this is about what we can afford on this program at this time," then people say, "Let us take the spending limits off."

So far as the national senior citizens groups are concerned they are for more money being spent on the elderly. I understand that. It is part of their lobbying role to support that more money be spent for elderly services.

When I had the group before my committee I asked how much should be spent on some of these programs, and they came up with some very, very huge figures. I asked is there enough money in the Federal budget? They said, "All we know is what we think should go for the elderly." I asked, "Where do you think we ought to have a cut?" They said, "That is for you to determine. All we want to do is to spend more money for the elderly."

We all want to spend more money for the elderly. Nobody is callous, cruel, or heartless. But a 50-percent increase in one fell swoop when the word "veto" looms in the omnipresent, I think, is a very substantial increase in authorization.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SCOTT. I appreciate the Senator's yielding. I am looking at the report of the committee. I ask the distinguished floor leader if this is accurate. I notice that in 1971 from the table on page 3 it indicates an expenditure apparently for the overall program of $33 million. Then for 1978 there is an expenditure of $696 million. Now that, as I computed here roughly, just in round figures, is an increase of 21 times the amount of money expended in 7 years. I think that more than supports the position the distinguished Senator is taking on this matter.

When you multiply a program by 21 in a period of 7 years that does not indicate chintziness at all, in my judgment.

I would be concerned, not unconcerned, about the elderly because each year we get a little closer to that status, but if we would increase other budgets, other appropriations or authorizations, by that amount, why our deficit would be far greater than it is today.

I appreciate the Senator's yielding. Am I correct in my statements?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri on the amendment has expired.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield myself 1 minute on the bill.

The Senator from Virginia is correct. In 1971 the total amount appropriated for the Older Americans Act was $33 million. In 1978 it was $696 million. It has gone up in increments as follows: $33 million; the next year $101 million; the next year—this is small print here—$253 million; then $217 million; $245 million; $354 million; $492 million; $696 million, a not insignificant amount of money.

If the Senator from Massachusetts has completed his statement, I am going to move to table the Kennedy amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion to table?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes.

Mr. HATHAWAY. When all time is yielded back I would like to offer an amendment to the Kennedy amendment which will only take about 5 minutes of discussion, I am sure, because we have already talked about it.

Mr. EAGLETON. We have exhausted our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will yield back my time so the Senator from Maine can get the floor in his own right. I yield back the remainder of my time.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1474

(Purpose: Relating to "Meals on Wheels" Program)

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1474 to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unamimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of amendment 2449 to S. 2850, insert the following:

"On page 112 of S. 2850, between lines 18 and 19 insert:

"'(a) With respect to funds received pursuant to section 303(b) (1) and (2), a State may elect in its plan under section 307(a)(12) regarding part C of this title, to transfer a portion of the funds appropriated for subpart 1 to subpart 2 of part C, as the State considers appropriate to meet the needs of the area served.

"'(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title a State may use funds appropriated for subpart 1 of part C for subpart 2 home delivered nutrition services to carry out the provisions of this subsection.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, the amendment simply allows the States to take money in addition to that appropriated under the Kennedy amendment for meals on wheels, to what we have been referring to as part 1, the general authorization for nutrition, which provides for congregate meals as well as meals on wheels, and this would prevent the Kennedy amendment from being a ceiling or a cap on the amount of money the State wishes to spend for meals on wheels.

It is discretionary with the State to do this, but I think that option should be left up to the States in case their needs for meals on wheels just happened to be greater than what the amount of money actually appropriated under the Kennedy amendment would provide. Otherwise, the adoption of the Kennedy amendment, it seems to me, would result in—we are going to have two parts: One for congregate meals, the part that is now in existence and which the committee very generously provides for additional authorization, plus the Kennedy amendment, which would be for meals on wheels.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. EAGLETON. The Senator does believe there should be this amount of discretion at the local level; he believes in local determination?

Mr. HATHAWAY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. EAGLETON. How about the other way, a two-way street?

Mr. HATHAWAY. No, I do not think it should be a two-way street, because I do not believe the discretion exercised by the States has been enough for meals on wheels. I think it needs the extra prodding or incentive provided by the Kennedy amendment to have more of that money spent for the meals on wheels program.

Mr. JAVITS addressed the Chair.

Mr. EAGLETON. Does the Senator from Massachusetts accept that modification?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend? The Chair is informed that the Senator from New York has no time. That was transferred to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. JAVITS. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. HATHAWAY. I would be happy to yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. The Senator from Rhode Island has my time, so if he will yield——

Mr. CHAFEE. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, as the ranking minority member of the Human Resources Committee, and as an original sponsor of the landmark Older Americans Act of 1965 and subsequent reauthorizations of the legislation, I am pleased to join with Senator EAGLETON and Senator CHAFEE in urging passage of S. 2850.

S. 2850 reauthorizes programs under the Older Americans Act for 2 years, and will substantially improve the operation of the range of programs serving our older population by consolidating and streamlining the administration of these programs at the Federal, State, and area agency level. This consolidation, of the existing title III, State and community services; title V, multipurpose senior centers, and title VII, nutrition services, of the Older Americans Act into a single title will ameliorate the currently fragmented and occasionally duplicative approach which Federal, State, and local governments have taken in confronting the problems of the elderly.

Moreover, this legislation establishes distinct Federal priorities in the provision of a broad range of services to older persons, and requires that these priorities, which address three of the greatest needs of the elderly—for transportation, in-home services, and legal services—be implemented within each area agency on aging. This will insure that these essential services are provided to those older persons who need them, while simultaneously taking into account the often differing needs of the elderly living in various regions of the Nation.

While the existing title VII nutrition program is administered under the new consolidation, a separate authorization is provided for nutrition services, assuring that funds appropriated for nutrition will be reserved especially for that purpose. Nevertheless, nutrition services are to be provided in conjunction with, not in isolation from, social services mandated by this act and by other statutes. Nutrition sites and multipurpose senior centers have together served for many years as the focus for the effective delivery of a wide range of social services for the elderly. This legislation retains the concept of a central locale for delivery of services within communities, and provides that nutritional and other social services for the elderly are properly integrated.

S. 2850 retains the current Federal/non-Federal matching requirement of 90/10 in the first fiscal year of the bill, and increases the non-Federal match to 15 percent in fiscal year 1980. I have grave concerns about increasing this match even in the second year authorized by this bill, for our States and communities are extremely hard-pressed to come up with matching funds. These concerns are somewhat mollified by the inclusion of a waiver of the match in disaster and economically depressed areas. This extension will now also include waiver authority for areas suffering from higher unemployment.

Mr. President, after careful deliberation, the Human Resources Committee elected not to include in the nutrition program authorization in S. 2850 separate authority for home-delivered meals. It must be reiterated, however, that operators of nutrition projects will retain the discretion to determine what proportions of its funds are to be used for meals in congregate settings and for home-delivered meals. Such project operators may well determine that elderly persons in their communities may better be served through emphasis on home-delivered meals. This determination is best made, however, at the State and local level rather than at the Federal level.

Mr. President, in regard to the nutrition program, I will offer a perfecting amendment to section 331 of the bill to provide that nutrition projects provide daily at least one hot, or other appropriate nutritional meal. This will allow for seasonal or climatic variations in which hot meals may be from time to time inappropriate, but simultaneously insures that recipients of nutrition services are provided diets which have at least an equal nutritional value as a hot meal, while reaffirming the continued focus of Older Americans Act nutrition services upon hot meals.

S. 2850 requires each State to develop a formula for intrastate distribution of funds. This formula will enable each State to best meet its own unique needs under the consolidation, while simultaneously maintaining the Federal purpose of the Older Americans Act by allowing the formula to take into account the incidence of impoverished and minority elderly within the State.

Thus, the intrastate distribution formulae will not necessarily be uniform among the States, but will provide each State aging agency with sufficient flexibility to meet the special needs of particular segments of the elderly population. Furthermore, the review procedures required for the distribution formula will allow for proper public scrutiny of intrastate allocation of funds and will improve the accountability of the activities of State aging agencies.

The Older Americans Act Amendments of 1973 created a nationwide system of area agencies on aging to provide for better administration and integration of services at the State and local levels. Since the passage of these amendments, the basic administrative units for delivery of services to the elderly has been the area agency. Current law provides that a unit of local government with a population of at least 50,000 elderly, or which contains 15 percent or more of a State's elderly population, be designated as a planning and service area (PSA). S. 2850 amends existing law to allow any unit of local government with a total population of at least 100,000 to apply to the State for designation as a PSA. This will provide smaller urban areas the flexibility to better plan and coordinate services for the aging at the local level.

The 1975 Older Americans Act Amendments sought to better balance the need for national objectives for services to the aging with a flexible and practicable system of services at the local level, taking into account specific community needs. A recent study conducted for the Administration on Aging indicated that despite this effort in the 1975 act to provide greater local focus of services, services continue to be widely dispersed and unfocused at the local level, so as often to render scarce resources diffused and ineffective at meeting the needs of older Americans.

Therefore, S. 2850 attempts to better concentrate this hodgepodge of current services by requiring that 50 percent of each area agency's social service allotment be targeted for access services—transportation, outreach, information, and referral—in-home services—homemaker, home health aide, visiting, telephone reassurance, and home maintenance—and legal services. In hearings on the Older Americans Act held by the Subcommittee on Aging, these services were consistently identified by both providers and recipients as those most frequently required by the elderly. While this legislation mandates priority services, discretion as to what proportion of the 50 percent set-aside is to be targeted to each of the three services remains at the local level.

The legal service priority represents a significant improvement over existing law. S. 2850 mandates area agencies on aging to enter into contracts with current Legal Services Corporation grantees or other equally capable legal service providers. Substitution of funds provided under the new legal services authority for existing projects is prohibited, and existing levels of support must be retained. Furthermore, Mr. President, legal service projects under the Older Americans Act are subject to the same restrictions as to those assisted under the Legal Services Corporation Act, excepting income eligibility tests and composition requirements of Corporation governing boards at the local level.

S. 2850 continues most of the current provisions of the State plan of services for older Americans, and adds to the plan a significant new provision that States establish and operate nursing home ombudsman programs, which has heretofore been operated as a model project by States on an ad hoc basis. This program will provide that the health, welfare, and rights of residents of long-term care facilities are insured, and will afford such residents appropriate administrative action to investigate and resolve complaints made by them or on their behalf.

One of the most critical of Federal programs, Mr. President, has been community service employment programs for older Americans. Title IX, redesignated in this legislation as title V, was an outgrowth of Operation Mainstream, first funded in 1965 under the Economic Opportunity Act. This program has, since its initial enactment, served thousands of low-income persons aged 55 and over who have poor employment prospects. From small beginnings in 1965, the senior employment program, administered by the Department of Labor, has grown to support 47,500 job slots at a funding level of $190 million in fiscal year 1978. S. 2850 increases the authorization level to $300 million in fiscal year 1979 and $350 million in fiscal year 1980.

Currently, 80 percent of funds for the older Americans employment program are channeled through five national contractors. The remaining 20 percent of funds have been allocated to the States. During hearings on the Older Americans Act during the current and past Congresses, State, and area units on aging indicated concern with insufficient coordination between the States and national contractors in the design and implementation of employment projects. To improve such coordination, S. 2850 includes provisions for prior review and comment by the State aging agency on projects conducted in a State by national sponsors.

Finally, Mr. President, S. 2850 authorizes a fourth White House Conference on Aging in 1981 and authorizes the U.S. Civil Rights Commission to undertake a study of racial or ethnic discrimination against older Americans. These two efforts will enable us to plan our national policy on the aging for future decades. This will help insure equal opportunity for all older Americans, and will help us to further enhance the dignity and self-respect with which all older Americans should live.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support S. 2850.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would be remiss if I did not recognize the diligent and exemplary work of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Aging, Senator EAGLETON, who held 7 days of hearings on the Older Americans Act, and to thank the subcommittee staff, Marcia McCord and Steve Roling, for their tireless work on this bill. The subcommittee conducted 8 days of hearings on the Older Americans Act, during which more than 60 witnesses were heard on a wide variety of problems and issues facing the elderly. These hearings, and the subsequent findings of the committee, were critical to the genesis of this bill. I would also like to thank the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Senator CHAFEE, for his contribution to the development of this bill.

Mr. President, I should also like to bring to the Senate's attention the substantial contributions to this bill made by Senator PETER V. DOMENICI, the ranking minority member of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, and to thank him for his constructive and cooperative work with our committee on this measure.

I would also like to thank Fran Paris of Senator CHAFEE's staff, Jack Wickes of Senator CRANSTON's staff, Mary Wheat of Senator DOLE's staff, and David Rust and Letitia Chambers of Senator DOMENICI's Special Committee on Aging staff, and David Morse and Mike Hermann—who is interning for the summer—of my staff, for their hard work on this measure.

I want to declare myself as very strongly in favor of the bill. I think Senator EAGLETON and Senator CHAFEE have done a marvelous job on this bill. I know there will be amendments, but I hope the amendments will recognize the fundamental structure which has come here, which include many provisions of the most critical character. I think it is splendid work.

Lastly, Mr. President, I hope that Senator KENNEDY might find it possible, in pursuance of the structure of the bill as brought in, to consolidate what he has in mind with the money in the bill and to require that a certain proportion of it might be spent for the purposes of meals on wheels, something along the idea of Senator HATHAWAY. But I gather that may not be possible for him, and I regret it.

I can only say that as one of the conferees, I will do my utmost, if the amendment does carry. I am going to stand with the committee, I wish to make that very clear, but I would hope we can work something out which will keep the unitary character of this particular fund.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. HATHAWAY. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Just in terms of the comments of the Senator from New York. Basically, the House has two separate items, two separate authorizations. It also includes effectively the amendment of the Senator from Maine. So rather than dividing or going back into one pot in a different form, I would be willing to urge the Senate to accept the proposal of the Senator from Maine. I think it will have application in rural communities and in rural States, and that is where, it seems to me eminently wise it should be for that purpose. Then effectively we will be in agreement with the House except for some difference in the level of authorization.

It will reduce actually the items of difference and really the fundamental issue will be the question of authorization. So I, at an appropriate time, would urge the Senate to accept the amendment of the Senator from Maine. I would have asked consent to move it but, as I understand, since we do have—we have no order, am I right, Mr. President, we have no order, there has not been an order for the yeas and nays yet?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to table has not been made.

Mr. KENNEDY. But have the yeas and nays been ordered yet?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. KENNEDY. Then I would move that the Hathaway amendment be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. HATHAWAY. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY).

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Hathaway amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been requested. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, at a later time, then, I will move to table the Kennedy amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator why he does not move to table the Kennedy amendment and the Hathaway amendment?

Mr. EAGLETON. You can modify yours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If Senators will suspend, the yeas and nays have been ordered on the Hathaway amendment to the Kennedy amendment, but the unanimous-consent agreement is that no rollcall votes will be taken before 3 o'clock.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. EAGLETON. If I move to table the Kennedy amendment, and if that motion were to prevail, that would then take in both the Kennedy amendment and the Hathaway amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator made such a motion, and it prevailed, then the Hathaway amendment would fall along with the Kennedy amendment.

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes. I move to table the Kennedy amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. For the purposes of everyone understanding what our position is, I want the Members to know that, were the amendment not tabled, we would accept the Hathaway amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, could I ask unanimous consent to have the Hathaway amendment accepted as a part of my amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is asking unanimous consent to have the Hathaway amendment accepted as a part of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. Is there objection?

Hearing no objection, the Hathaway amendment is adopted as a part of the Kennedy amendment. Without objection, the yeas and nays on the Hathaway amendment are vacated.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1475

(Purpose: To authorize a project for transition to private employment of public service jobholders)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1475.

On page 146, between lines 2 and 3——

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will read the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 146, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following new subsection:

"(e) The Secretary is authorized, in addition to any other authority contained in this title, to enter into agreements designed to assure the transition of individuals employed in public service jobs under this title to employment opportunities with private business concerns. The Secretary is authorized, from amounts reserved pursuant to section 506(a)(1)(B) in any fiscal year, to pay all of the costs of any agreement entered into under the provisions of this subsection.

On page 149, line 2, insert "(A)" after "(1)".

On page 149, between lines 22 and 23, insert the following:

"(B) From sums appropriated under this title for each fiscal year after September 30, 1978, the Secretary shall reserve an amount not to exceed one per centum of the amount appropriated in excess of the amount appropriated for the fiscal year 1978 for the purposes of entering into agreements under section 502 (e), relating to improved transition to private employment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, while we are all very proud of the fact that this legislation, both the past language and the new language, authorizes part-time public service employment for senior citizens—in fact we are providing about 47,500 job slots—I am genuinely concerned about the fact that while in most programs similar to this, such as the basic CETA programs, we have made somewhat of an effort to move those that we are training and getting ready for employment through a full-time or part-time employment mechanism for making some effort to try to move them over into the private sector, the fact is that in this particular program for our senior citizens, we are making no such effort. My amendment provides the following: The 1 percent of the new money provided can be used by the secretary to provide demonstration programs for our senior citizens to move out of the public service or quasi-public service employment rolls into the private sector.

We believe such an approach can work if the resources are provided. If it works, what we are doing is providing more opportunities for our senior citizens to fill the part-time slots we provide.

As I have stated, Mr. President, we now have a part-time public service employment program with an authorized strength of approximately 47,500 job slots. This program, which is authorized as part of the Older Americans Act, is administered by the Department of Labor. The older workers are part-time employees who are involved in a number of community-oriented projects across our Nation. Part of the program is adminstered by the State, and part by a number of "national contractors" who have been directly involved in this program since its inception.

This program has been a tremendous boom to those senior citizens who are low income and, for the most part, poorly skilled in terms of our modern and highly sophisticated economy. It has given these individuals added income, self-respect, new skills, and the all-important feeling of being needed, wanted, useful and active in their community. At the present time, however, we are serving less than one percent of the eligible older workers. For those older workers who are fortunate enough to be involved in this program, many opportunities for service have been opened. For those needy individuals who are still on the outside, there is a crying need for a meaningful opportunity to remain useful members of their community.

My amendment would seek to increase the turnover in the title V program. As older workers come into the program and develop jobs skills, improve working habits, and renew self-assurance; the opportunity begins to arise for placement in the private sector. Up until this time, little if any effort was made to take advantage of this opportunity. My amendment would authorize the Secretary of Labor to set aside 1 percent of the new money appropriated for this program above the fiscal year 1978 level. With that money, the Department could operate demonstration programs designed to test various techniques for helping title V employees make the transition from the public payroll to the private sector. This may not be possible in all cases, Mr. President, and in fact it may not be possible in the majority of cases. Where it can be done, I think it will benefit the older worker, the program, and those yet unserved.

Mr. President, I hope that the distinguished managers of this bill would agree with me that the Secretary of Labor should have the flexibility to pursue this avenue for increasing employment opportunities for older workers, and would accept this amendment and work for its retention in the Conference Committee.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Merle Cox of the Senate Budget Committee be accorded the privilege of the floor at all stages in this proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, first, I ask whether the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Missouri have any objection to this amendment.

Mr. EAGLETON. We have looked at this amendment, which would set aside 1 percent of title V funds above the 1978 funds. This is a provision in the bill that I think Senator DOMENICI introduced late last year and goes along with the Senate CETA bill. On the whole I think it is a commendable idea.

Mr. JAVITS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I might say that I am offering an amendment later on in the discussion which will give the States notice. There is no effective coordination now between the States and the contractors who handle this type of employment. My amendment will bring about such coordination and notice to the States without restricting the contractors so they cannot do their job, but enabling the State to bring about a better coordination than exists today. It will fit in with the amendment which the Senator has just offered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator from New York.

Does the Senator from Rhode Island have any objections?

Mr. JAVITS. I understand he does not.

Mr. EAGLETON. The Senator from Rhode Island spoke to me and he has no objection.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. EAGLETON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. The time of 3 o'clock having now arrived, do we now vote on the three amendments: The Melcher amendment, the motion to table the Kennedy amendment, and now the Domenici amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Since there is no other amendment pending, that is the case.

Mr. DOMENICI. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is the present order that we commence voting at this hour?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was that we would not vote before 3 o'clock.

Mr. EAGLETON. It would be permissible to go ahead and take other amendments, is that correct, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the parliamentarian that the order was that we would not vote before 3, but would start voting at 3, if no other amendment was pending at that time. The Chair is informed that there is now another amendment upon which a vote has been ordered. So the vote will be in the following sequence: First, the Melcher amendment; second, the motion to table the Kennedy amendment, and, third, the Domenici amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, a parliamentary inqury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOMENICI. Would the floor managers object if additional amendments are offered and we back them up after the ones we have agreed upon?

Mr. EAGLETON. I would object to that. We might have 22 votes backed up and we would not know which ones were which.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time on the second and third votes be 10 minutes.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an amendment I had planned to offer, which is acceptable to the manager of the bill, be considered at this time. I have the assurance of the Senator from South Dakota that he will not call for a rollcall vote. This could be handled in just a minute's time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, how will we make that kind of decision on the other amendments we have pending?

Mr. CHURCH. By unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing no objection, the Senator from Idaho is recognized.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1476

(Purpose: To provide for supportive services in the delivery of nutrition projects for a two-year phase-out period)

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I send an unprinted amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1476.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 101, line 11, strike out "and".

On page 101, line 22, insert "and" after the semicolon.

On page 101, between lines 22 and 23, insert the following:

"(G) each State agency may, only for fiscal years 1979 and 1980, use not to exceed 20 percent of the amounts allotted under part C to the State for supportive services directly related to the delivery of congregrate or home delivered meals;

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, this amendment to S. 2850 continues for 2 years the support for other services under the nutrition program for the elderly.

Current regulations allows States to use up to 20 percent of their nutrition program budgets to support other services which are necessary to operate a nutrition program effectively. These supportive services—transportation, information and referral, nutrition and health counseling, and recreation activities—combine with the well-balanced meal to provide a comprehensive services package for the participants.

The Senate bill, S. 2850, would eliminate this authority because it consolidates the nutrition and social services titles under the Older Americans Act. The bill assumes that the nutrition program will be coordinated with other services which are provided through the area agencies to offer comprehensive services to older persons. But this will take time.

Therefore, my amendment would allow the States a 2-year grace period to permit funding for the nutrition program to be used to support other services directly related to the delivery of congregate and home-delivered meals. During this time, the States can work with nutrition projects to develop a comprehensive service system that will satisfactorily coordinate the nutrition services with other programs.

This coordination was intended by the consolidation of titles under both the Senate (S. 2850) and House (H.R. 12255) bills. This consolidation, though, must be gradual. We do not want to interrupt the delivery of services to the elderly and must allow the States to make these adjustments efficiently and in a timely manner.

Mr. President, the nutrition program would not be as effective if transportation were not available to take the elderly to and from meal sites. Oftentimes, the participants need medical care and other services. The nutrition sites are ideal settings for delivering services or informing the elderly about other programs.

S. 2850 offers other waivers that might be necessary for the State and area programs to use to reach the goals of consolidation. I think a 2-year grace period for the nutrition projects to support other related services is also necessary to assure a smooth transition.

The effect of this amendment would be to permit the 20-percent requirement to continue to be used in the interest of an orderly transition. It would limit the time to a 2-year period. This simply means that we avoid an immediate cutoff of one practice with the substitution of another and allow the agencies sufficient time to make the transition. I understand that the amendment is wholly acceptable to the manager of the bill. I urge the Senate to agree to this amendment.

I ask for the comments of the manager of the bill before moving the amendment.

Mr. EAGLETON. May I ask the Senator from Idaho, in the actual body of the amendment, the exact language of which I have not seen, is there a 2-year expiration clause?

Mr. CHURCH. Yes. That 2-year limitation is included in the text of the amendment itself.

Mr. EAGLETON. So the purpose of the Senator's amendment would be to allow ample time for the kind of transition in these nutrition projects as is set forth in the bill?

Mr. CHURCH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. EAGLETON. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CHURCH. I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield back his time?

Mr. EAGLETON. One minute, if we may, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAFEE. I have no objection.

Mr. EAGLETON. I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator from South Dakota indicate whether he has any criteria in regard to which amendments we will consider?

Mr. ABOUREZK. I have no criteria. I just asked for rollcalls on several amendments.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thought the procedure would be a little different.

Mr. ABOUREZK. So did I. There was a little misunderstanding between Senator CHURCH and myself. I thought he had the Mormon Trail amendment.

I want to explain to my colleagues that I have been informed by the leadership that the chairman of the Energy Committee (Mr. JACKSON) has agreed with the leadership that the natural gas deregulation bill will come up next week. They are holding back, and apparently this is a joint decision between the House and Senate leadership and the administration, the President and Secretary Schlesinger, the major part of the President's energy package to use as some sort of leverage to try to deregulate natural gas. That is a kind of pressure that none of us have any control over, obviously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time to the Senator from South Dakota?

The Senator has no time.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Will the Senator from Missouri yield a couple of minutes?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I just wanted to explain to my colleague that the leadership properly has the prerogative for scheduling and those of us who are Members of the Senate do not have many prerogatives except to create some sort of counterpressure against the pressure applied by the leadership. I do not know any better way to do it than to get us all on record on a lot of these amendments. That is the only thing. I assumed the Senator from Idaho was going to bring up the Mormon Trail bill. I had no idea it was going to be an amendment on the Older Americans Act.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

MELCHER UP AMENDMENT NO. 1473

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana. All time has been yielded back. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN), the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), and the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON) would each vote "yea."

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 89, nays 0, as follows:

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DEBATE ON MOTION TO TABLE KENNEDY AMENDMENT

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Oklahoma be permitted about 2 minutes on the motion to table the Kennedy amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—is it 12 minutes to either side?

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be 4 minutes, equally divided, on the motion to table the Kennedy amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON).

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I commend the Human Resources Committee for the administrative efficiency and consolidation this bill would achieve. There is no group more deserving of our assistance than our senior citizens. They have given many years of productivity to our country; and they will be best served by a coordinated program delivery system, with a minimum of overlap and a maximum of administrative efficiency. I must, therefore, add my voice to that of the manager of the bill in opposition to the Kennedy amendment.

Senator KENNEDY would have us enact a separate authorization for home-delivered meals. On the surface of it, this sounds like home, hearth, and motherhood. Who can be against home-delivered meals for shut-in senior citizens? But I remind my colleagues that this bill already carries an authorization for home-delivered meals. As presented to us today, the act would allow States to decide the appropriate mix of home-delivered and congregate meal activities, based on the needs of each of their populations. This seems to me the sensible approach and the approach most consistent with the theme of consolidation under this act.

The Kennedy amendment, on the other hand, Mr. President, would fragment the authorization presently in the bill for both congregate and home-delivered meals. (That authorization is $375 million for fiscal year 1979, which represents an increase of $100 million over the fiscal year 1978 authorized level, and $425 million for fiscal year 1980.) The Kennedy amendment, however, would add a separate authorization of $100 million for fiscal year 1979 and $120 million for fiscal year 1980 for home-delivered meals.

The administration regards the level of authorization in S. 2850 as already too high. If all the authorizations included in the bill were fully funded, or even if the past ratio of appropriations to authorization for older Americans programs were to prevail, the appropriations would exceed the assumptions contained in the first budget resolution targets. (The bill authorizes expenditures of $1.1 billion in fiscal year 1979, and $1.2 billion in fiscal year 1980.) Appropriations for programs under the Older Americans Act have increased over 2,000 percent—from $28,360,000 to $696,700,000—between 1970 and 1978.

None of this is to imply that I begrudge 1 red cent we are spending to assist our senior citizens. Nor do I take the position that this authorization breaches the targets in the first budget resolution. The Appropriations Committee has given every indication that it will exercise restraint in this and other appropriations this year.

My point is, Mr. President, that there is nothing that can be done under the Kennnedy amendment that cannot be done under the bill before us; and there is absolutely no justification for, indeed no need for, the increased authorizations included in the Kennedy amendment. If the proponents of the Kennedy amendment want more funding for home-delivered meals, let them argue their case in appropriations. Let us not confuse the issue in debating this authorization; and let us not undermine the Senate position in favor of consolidation in the conference by adding categorical programs of our own. I urge all my colleagues to oppose the Kennedy amendment and to support the committee-reported bill.

The amendment would have the effect only of making the bill more difficult to administer, and in this way it defeats the purpose the committee had in mind when S. 2850 was brought before us.

I feel strongly that we should stay on target and try to write a bill that has the minimum of overlap and the maximum of administrative efficiency; and I believe that the Kennedy amendment goes in the opposite direction.

EXPANDING THE HOME-DELIVERED MEALS PROGRAM FOR OUR ELDERLY

● Mr. CULVER. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of this amendment to provide for a separate increased authorization for home-delivered meals under the Older Americans Act, I wish to express my support of the concept and urge my Senate colleagues to adopt it.

I believe there are few things the Federal Government can do that are more important than providing elderly Americans with well-balanced meals at least once a day. Title VII of the Older Americans Act, the nutrition program, currently provides some 480,000 meals per day. Approximately 410,000 of these meals are served in a congregate setting such as a church or senior citizen center. This highly effective and popular congregate meals program not only furnishes hot meals at least five times a week, but also offers a significant opportunity for many senior citizens to share one another's company. The remaining 70,000 meals per day—or about 15 percent of title VII meals—are delivered directly to the homes of older Americans who are unable to participate in the congregate meals setting.

However, since both congregate meals and home-delivered meals are funded by title VII appropriations, the two programs must compete for the limited funds available. Yet the emphasis in title VII is on congregate meals. The unfortunate result is that the present level of mobile meals delivery falls far short of the need. The U.S. Commission on Aging estimates that about 14 percent of people 65 and older who are not in institutions are either homebound or bedfast. Studies have revealed that some 3 to 4 million elderly Americans are homebound and cannot partake in the congregate meals program.

Many of these people are actually unable to prepare a meal, because they are bedfast or suffer failing health. Others may lack the incentive to cook meals regularly, particularly if they live alone. Still others, willing and able to fix a meal, cannot get to a grocery store because they are homebound.

Mr. President, this amendment is also beneficial from the standpoints of the individual preferences of senior citizens and the savings the public realizes by avoiding institutionalization for many elderly citizens. Most senior citizens would prefer to stay in their homes rather than live in a nursing home. These home-delivered meals, in conjunction with homemaker services and home health care, can perform a vital role in helping thousands of elderly citizens stay in their homes and avoid institutionalization. A recent General Accounting Office study demonstrated that the average public cost of in-home services, including a meal, ranges from $78 to $172 a month, depending on the degree of health care. This contrasts rather sharply with the average public cost for nursing home care of $458 per month. In other words, supportive services delivered in the home cost the public from one-sixth to one-third of the cost of nursing home care.

Mr. President, as reported from committee, this legislation would authorize approximately 680,000 congregate meals and 120,000 home-delivered meals daily in fiscal year 1979. Our amendment would authorize some 215,000 home-delivered meals daily and, by freeing funds for congregate meals, would permit about 800,000 group meals each day. This amendment would create a separate authorization for mobile meals of $100 million for fiscal year 1979 and $120 million for fiscal year 1980, and would eliminate the competition for funds between the congregate meals and mobile meals programs.

Mr. President, I have received numerous communications from responsible Iowa officials in support of this concept of a separate authorization for mobile meals. I urge my Senate colleagues to recognize the unique roles both the congregate meals program and the home-delivered meals program fulfill, and support this amendment to separate and expand the funding for each.●

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, as amended. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSON) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) and the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON) would vote "nay."

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would vote "nay."

So Mr. DOMENICI's amendment (UP amendment No. 1475) was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1477

(Purpose: To continue existing law with respect to the State share of expenditures under the State plan)

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), for himself and Mr. CRANSTON, proposes unprinted amendment numbered 1477.

Mr. JAVITS. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 113, line 22, beginning with the word "Beginning", strike out through "per centum" on line 23 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For each fiscal 1 year, not less than 25 per centum".

The following Senators requested and, by unanimous consent, the privilege of the floor throughout debate and votes on S. 2850 was granted in behalf of the following staff members: Mr. DANFORTH: Nancy Altman; Mr. EAGLETON: Terry Swanson; Mr. DURKIN: Bob Lawrence; Mr. HASKELL: Susan Manes; Mr. CLARK: Helen Colvin; Mr. WALLOP: Dale Wheeler; Mr. CHILES: Rick Farrell; Mr. GRAVEL: Hilda Woods; Mr. BUMPERS: Gregg Jones; Mr. CANNON: Bruce Eggers; and Mr. DOLE; Mary Wheat.

Mr. GRAVEL. Will the Senator from New York yield to me? I have a very brief amendment. I do not know what his amendment is. If the Senate is prepared to accept it——

Mr. JAVITS. Mine is brief, too, Mr. President.

Mr. GRAVEL. Then I shall wait.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I offer for myself and Senator CRANSTON this amendment to continue the public share of the State match at existing levels.

Section 309(b)(1) of S. 2850 doubles to 50 percent the portion of the State-local match which must be met from State or local public sources. Currently the State-local share is 10 percent of the total funds provided for a State under the act, with the Federal share being 90 percent. Of the 10 percent provided by a State, 25 percent must be met from State or local tax revenues.

The increase from 25 percent to 50 percent is counterproductive for several reasons. First, all levels of government work under fiscal limitations; even at the 25-percent level it is difficult for many counties in my home State of New York, and nationwide, to secure matching resources. They are often hard pressed to provide the local matching funds in order to utilize much-needed Older Americans Act allocations which have been reserved for them.

Second, beginning October 1, 1979, non-Federal matching requirements will be raised from 10 percent to 15 percent, with the States being required to provide the increased matching resources. The progressive increase in Federal funds appropriated under the Older American Act, when adjusted to the increase in non-Federal matching requirements, will cause the public share of the State-local matching requirement to increase greater that 50 percent.

For example, in my home State of New York, according to the New York State Office on Aging, currently operating programs under titles III and VII of the act are now funded at a level of $34,405,986, with the required commitment of local public resources being $1,064,527. Under the provisions of S. 2850 this amount would double almost immediately to $2,129,155. In addition, the same provision would apply to any funds allocated to senior center projects now supported under title V, for which no such requirement now exists. On the basis of current title V allocations, the increased State-local obligations will amount to $566,666 for a total commitment of $2,695,821. This represents an increase of $1,631,294, more than 150 percent above current levels.

New York is not a special case. Many States will be hard-pressed to secure matching funds under this provision of S. 2850, and any projected increased allocations, for any State, will result in comparable increases in public resource requirements.

Third, such a steep increase in the public share would be counterproductive in that it will reduce volunteer involvement in Older Americans Act programs. The aid given by private sources has been invaluable to the program. Private volunteer sources provide much of the equipment and many of the sites for the nutrition program; the increase to 50 percent would act to reduce the share of volunteer activity which contributes so greatly at the community level to these Older Americans Act programs.

The primary reason put forth for doubling of the portion of the State-local match which must be met from public sources is to generate additional funds and activity at the State and local level. However, the unforeseen result of the increase could be to curtail many of the services which most States are able to provide for their older citizens. I, therefore, urge that my amendment to return to the existing 25-percent public share of the State-local match be accepted by the Senate.

Mr. President, the increase, in my judgment, is counterproductive, because at the 25-percent level, it is very difficult for many counties to secure matching resources. The matching here is of 10 percent. That is, the Federal-State program is 90–10 and the State can raise a portion of this money from private sources. But the committee has now required that they raise it only from public sources to the extent of 50 percent. Hence, that is very seriously circumscribing the many counties. It is a very steep increase in the public share and will tend to reduce volunteer and other voluntary organizations and foundations involvement in Older Americans Act programs.

As these volunteer sources not only provide some money, but also provide equipment and other facilities, Mr. President, I hope very much that the managers may see fit to accept the amendment.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. I ask unanimous consent that Paul Laudicina of my staff be granted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I am going to call up a package of four amendments designed to improve and strengthen the Older Americans Act of 1978.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until the Senator calls up the amendments, he has no time. The Senator must call up the amendment.

Mr. HEINZ. Yes. I send copies of the amendments to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

Is the Senator asking that the amendments be considered en bloc?

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I do so request that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consent is not granted. The amendments must be called up one at a time.

The clerk will state the first amendment.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1478

(Purpose: To strengthen the involvement of the agency administration in long-term care policy alternatives)

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1478.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 75, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following:

(2) Section 202 is amended by redesignating subsection (b) and all references thereto as subsection (c) and by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) In order to strengthen the involvement of the Administration in the development of policy alternatives in long-term care and insure that the development of community alternatives is given priority attention, the Commissioner shall—

"(1) develop linkages with health planning agencies (as defined under the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act of 1974);

"(2) participate in all departmental activities which concern issues of institutional and noninstitutional long-term health care services development; and

"(3) review and comment on all departmental regulations and policies regarding community health and social service development for the elderly.".

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, this is the first of four amendments I will be calling up this afternoon.

At the outset, I wish to commend the distinguished members of the Human Resources Committee, particularly Senator EAGLETON and Senator CHAFEE, for the exceptionally fine job they have done in developing this act.

Mr. President, as I reviewed S. 2850, I felt the bill could benefit from certain changes which I believe will make the legislation even more responsive to the needs of our elderly citizens.

I am especially pleased to present these amendments because I think they represent a good example of grassroots democracy.

Let me just say that several weeks ago I had the privilege of participating in the Pennsylvania Fifth Governors Conference on Aging. During the 3 days of the conference, thousands of older Americans and those concerned with the needs of our elderly met to discuss and debate the critical issues faced by our older citizens. I was fortunate to be able to participate in these stimulating and very challenging discussions.

The amendments I offer today result, in large measure, from the discussions and concerns expressed by thousands of my fellow Pennsylvanians.

The amendments are intended to address the problems or fill in gaps in the proposed Older Americans Act of 1978 which were identified by those directly concerned with improving the quality of life of our older citizens.

Mr. President, might I inquire of the Chair which of the amendments has been called up?

Mr. EAGLETON. If the Senator will say which of the amendments it is, I think we can dispose of it. Which amendment is this?

Is there an amendment pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending. The amendment pending bears No. 1478.

Mr. EAGLETON. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania give us a brief description so I can determine if it is on my list?

Mr. HEINZ. Yes.

Mr. President, this is the amendment to strengthen the involvement of the Administration on Aging in long-term care policy alternatives.

LONG-TERM CARE—ALTERNATIVES FOR THE ELDERLY

Mr. President, this amendment to S. 2850, the Older Americans Act, is designed to strengthen the involvement of the Administration on Aging in long-term care policy alternatives.

Section 202 of the act, as drafted by my distinguished colleagues of the Human Resources Committee, seeks to make the Administration on Aging "the effective and viable advocate for the elderly within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and with other departments * * *" My amendment would modify section 202 by adding a new subsection which specifically requires that the Administration on Aging be involved in developing policy alternatives in long-term care. Specifically the Commissioner shall, first, develop linkages with the health planning agencies (as defined under the National Health Planning and Development Act of 1974); second, participate in all departmental, that is, HEW-wide activities concerning long-term care and third, comment on all HEW regulations and policies regarding health and social services for the elderly.

On the surface this would appear to be a minor administrative point. However, on closer examination, a realistic appraisal of the situation shows that it is essential if the viewpoint of the elderly is to be heard at HEW. The HEW bureaucracy is vast and disparate and no consultation is made unless responsibility is formally directed. A mandatory requirement for comment is essential to insure proper consideration of the views of one of the Nation's significant population groups, the 22,934,000 citizens over 65.

Passage of this measure will insure formal and effective representation of an important and respected group in our society, the elderly. This is critical because of the impact of illness and of the cost of health care on the lives of the elderly. At meetings I have held with senior citizens in Pennsylvania the cost of health care is a recurring theme. In letters which have been received by the Subcommittee on Federal Spending Practices—in preparation for hearings on nursing homes, the cost of paying for nursing home care is the most prevalent theme.

While it would seem logical that those components of HEW making policies on health care and health financing would solicit the views of the parts of HEW reflecting the needs of the most affected group, this is frequently not the case. In the bureaucracy, if a health policy is to be considered, health agencies will be involved—not aging agencies—unless such involvement is mandated.

I urge my fellow Members to support this amendment which would at no cost have the potential to provide an opportunity for the elderly to participate in the discussion of issues which significantly affect their lives and well-being.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I am prepared to accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. HEINZ. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment (UP No. 1478) was agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EAGLETON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1479

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I call up my second amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1479.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 122, line 18, insert after "aging" the following: "including as part of such assessment, the needs for personnel in both institutional and non-institutional long-term care settings,".

On page 122, line 18, after "programs" insert a comma and the following: "including institutional and non-institutional long-term program,".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is the amendment to assure the study of manpower needs and long-term care which bears No. 1479.

Mr. EAGLETON. I thought that was just passed.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask for a clarification of the amendment just passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment just passed is amendment No. 1478, to strengthen the involvement of the agency administration in long-term care policy alternatives.

Mr. HEINZ. I thank the Chair for that clarification.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. GRAVEL. If the Senator will withhold that, just briefly, this could be handled in 1 minute's time.

Mr. HEINZ. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. GRAVEL. All I would do is ask unanimous consent to have my amendment brought up without the Senator losing his right to the floor, and that the amendment be in order to an amendment already agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. I agree to the Senator's request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1480

(Purpose: To provide for supportive services in the delivery of nutrition projects)

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1480 to UP amendment No. 1476 by Mr. CHURCH.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of paragraph (G) immediately following the colon insert the following additional language:

"however, the Commissioner may approve an application from a State or territory to use up to 50 percent of its amount allotted under part C in areas with unusually high supportive services costs;"

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to add the corrections to the amendment that passed earlier by Senator CHURCH. There was a limitation placed of 20 percent on the spending for support of services with respect to meals and home-delivered meals.

With respect to Alaska, we have high labor costs and high transportation costs. This would not be terribly meaningful, so I would ask the Commissioner be given the power to waive the 20 percent and as high as up to 50 percent.

The Older Americans Act includes two programs designed to assure adequate nutrition for the elderly—congregate meals and home-delivered meals. These programs have succeeded foremost in providing nutritious meals for the elderly who are low income and/or minority.

The popular congregate meal program has enhanced the life of the elderly by assuring them not only a well-balanced meal but also the companionship of their peers. For those unable to leave their homes, the home-delivered meals program has allowed thousands of elderly to convalesce at home and/or avoid institutionalization. Many communities have responded enthusiastically in adopting this program for the isolated and disadvantaged as part of their title VII meals program.

In Alaska, there is an increasing need for both the congregate meals program and the home-delivered meals program. Our elderly population is rapidly increasing but our efforts to meet their nutrition needs have incurred obstacles.

HEW limits support services under title VII to 20 percent of the State's nutrition program budget. In a State with communities experiencing living costs anywhere from 60 percent to 110 percent above the U.S. average it is difficult to contain support service costs within a strict budget even though that restriction may be reasonable for areas with lower costs and more concentrated population.

To illustrate the dilemma we face in Alaska in administering the title VII nutrition program let me point out the transportation costs in our State are 80 percent higher than the average costs for transportation in the continental United States. Our labor costs are legend as is illustrated by the breakdown of our costs for the title VII program in fiscal year 1977. To serve 126,402 meals in Alaska, $172,599 was spent on food, $306,041 on labor, and $59,673 on other costs. The average program cost per meal was $6.70, or more than 40 percent higher than the average program cost per meal in the lower 48.

We need to expand the program, especially in the area of home-delivered meals, known in Alaska as the trays on sleighs program. However, with our elderly scattered throughout the State it is difficult to perform the outreach and informational services and other supportive services necessary to successfully implement the nutrition program with the budget limitation placed on these services.

I greatly appreciate Senator CHURCH's understanding of our problem. When we brought Alaska's problem to the attention of the Special Committee on Aging they were extremely sympathetic, as has been the Administration on Aging; they agreed that a secretarial waiver would be appropriate to alleviate the restriction on supportive service spending. Therefore, I urge the Senate to accept this amendment which would give the Commissioner of Administration on Aging the discretion to raise spending limits on supportive services to 50 percent of the State's nutrition program budget if necessary to successfully implement the title VII nutrition program. While this amendment will not allocate more funds to Alaska, it will provide us with the flexibility we need to adapt the program to our economic situation and thus, provide better services to our elderly.

I understand the leadership is prepared to accept the amendment and, if so, I am prepared to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. JAVITS. Does the Senator yield back his time?

Mr. GRAVEL. I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. CHAFEE. I would like to ask the sponsor, how would he amend the Church amendment?

Mr. GRAVEL. Simply by permitting the Commissioner to have the power, where now it is limited to 20 percent, to go from 20 percent to 50 percent if he deemed it in his judgment so warranted.

Mr. CHAFEE. That is what the Church amendment did.

Mr. GRAVEL. No. That only put a limitation of 20 percent.

Mr. EAGLETON. May I ask a question?

Mr. GRAVEL. I am happy to have the Senator ask a question.

Mr. EAGLETON. The Senator's amendment, in essence, perfects the Church amendment and, like the body of the Church amendment, is merely permissive?

Mr. GRAVEL. Very much so.

Mr. EAGLETON. Something may be done, but there is nothing mandated or obliged to be done?

Mr. GRAVEL. No question. That is exactly the interpretation I place on it.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRAVEL. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska.

The amendment (UP No. 1480) was agreed to.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAVEL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GRAVEL. I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1479

Mr HEINZ. Mr. President, as I understand it, the pending amendment is to assure the study of the needs of long-time care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, this amendment will provide for an assessment of current health manpower needs in long-term care. This study is needed to accurately determine the adequacy of current health manpower programs, to define the goals to be met to satisfy these health manpower needs, and to identify the training and development resources needed to meet these goals in the long-term care field.

Section 402 requires the Commissioner to conduct an assessment of existing and future personnel needs in the general field of aging. My proposed amendment would specify that this overall assessment include a major focus on both institutionalized and noninstitutionalized personnel needs in the field of long-term care.

This study on long-term care training is necessary because physicians and other health care providers can get no training in, and have little knowledge of the health problems, particularly clinical health problems, of our elderly. Despite the fact that a significant portion of our population is over 65 there is concurrently only one medical school with a program in geriatric medical practice. It is estimated that there are only a handful of residences nationwide which provide specialty training in geriatrics. In Pennsylvania—a State with a proud tradition in medical education—and more than 1,272,000 residents over the age of 65—there are no programs for medical students which provide training in the medical and social needs of the aged.

Witnesses before a recent grand jury in Philadelphia attested to both the reluctance and inability of family physicians to give meaningful rehabilitative treatment to the elderly. The Commissioner on Aging, Robert Benedict, blamed poor diagnostic procedures in hospitals as a major cause of the misplacement of fully one-third of the entire nursing home population. The present generation of doctors appears simply unprepared to deal with the one universal malady, old age.

A report presented at a 2-day conference on treatable diseases in the elderly at the National Institute of Health disclosed that 10 to 20 percent of the elderly senile are really not senile at all. They are suffering instead from other conditions and diseases that go untreated because they are not properly diagnosed by physicians.

Compounding the problem is the fact that much of the day-to-day care will be provided by attendants who are often characterized as poorly trained and frequently having low morale. Due to the great and increasing demand for long-term health care these attendants are responsible for a great deal of the treatment that an older American receives. Nevertheless there have been no studies made to look into the possible positive effects which increased training might have upon these attendants.

The expanding need and changing population picture have made it a necessity for the development of innovative training procedures and for better uses and allocation of existing personnel. We must begin to evaluate institutionalized and noninstitutionalized long-term care manpower needs as soon as possible. To delay is to doom thousands of elderly citizens in our Nation to a substandard quality of care. We cannot afford to wait if we are to provide an opportunity for the elderly to spend their autumn years in a climate of health, hope, and dignity.

Mr. President, I respectfully ask my colleagues in the Senate to give favorable consideration to this amendment.

Mr. President, I have discussed this amendment with the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON) and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. CHAFEE). I understand they have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. EAGLETON. This is which amendment?

Mr. HEINZ. This is the amendment entitled "To assure the study of manpower needs in long-term care."

Mr. EAGLETON. It amends title IV. It deals with long-term care both in institutional and noninstitutional centers.

Mr. HEINZ. The Senator is correct.

Mr. EAGLETON. We will accept the amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HEINZ. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEINZ. I yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mary Everest, of Senator BELLMON's staff, have the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1481

(Purpose: To insure that area agencies on aging are involved in the development of the State plan)

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I call up my amendment the purpose of which is to insure that area agencies on aging are involved in the development of the State plan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1481.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 91, line 14, insert after the period the following: "Each such plan shall be based upon a uniform format for area plans within the State prepared in accordance with section 307(a)(1).".

On page 96, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following:

"(1) contain assurances that the State plan will be based upon area plans developed by area agencies on aging within the State designated pursuant to section 305(a)(2)(A) and that the State will prepare and distribute a uniform format for use by area agencies in developing area plans under section 306;

"(2) provide that each area agency on aging designated pursuant to section 305(a)(2)(A) will develop and submit to the State agency for approval an area plan which complies with the provisions of section 306.

On page 96, line 5, strike out "(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 96, line 10, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

On page 96, line 20, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(5)".

On page 96, line 25, strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(6)".

On page 97, line 5, strike out "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(7)".

On page 97, line 11, strike out "(6)" and insert in lieu thereof "(8)".

On page 97, strike out lines 14 through 17.

On page 97, line 18, strike out "(8)" and insert in lieu thereof "(9)".

On page 97, line 24, strike out "(9)" and insert in lieu thereof "(10)".

On page 98, line 5, strike out "(10)" and insert in lieu thereof "(11)".

On page 98, line 10, strike out "(11)" and insert in lieu thereof "(12)".

On page 100, line 1, strike out "(12)" and insert in lieu thereof "(13)".

On page 101, line 23, strike out "(13)" and insert in lieu thereof "(14)".

On page 104, line 1, strike out "(14)" and insert in lieu thereof "(15)".

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering today to the Older American Act is intended to insure that the concerns of local area agencies on aging are taken into account during the development of the comprehensive State plan required by section 307 of the legislature before us, S. 2850.

The Older American Act provides for the establishment of area agencies on aging to serve as a focal point for planning for the needs of elderly citizens. These AAA's have made great strides in involving the elderly at the local level in the plans and decisions which will affect their lives. Concerned citizens have become active participants in these AAA activities, and have found renewed hope and vigor as they view their concerns being addressed at the local level.

Although many accomplishments can be attributed to this planning process, I believe the original intent of the legislation was to use the AAA's as the building blocks on which the State plan would rest. In actual practice, however, the planning process has been largely "top down," with States developing a State plan and area agencies conforming to that plan once it has been approved by the Administration on Aging in HEW. Although a number of States do involve the area agencies in the development of a State plan, such involvement by sub-State planning units is not required. Thus many local needs and concerns are not taken into account when State plans are developed and sent off for approval.

The amendment which I offer today would provide that the State plans take area agency plans into account as the process for development of the State plans get under way. The intention of my amendment is not that the State plan become limited to a mere compilation of area plans. Rather it is an attempt to right the ship and get things back to the point where the concerns and needs of local AAA's are considered in the formulation of an overall plan. In this way we would hope to avoid the unfortunate situation where AAA's painstakingly define what they perceive to be their most pressing concerns, and those concerns are then either ignored or overlooked by the State plan.

I am convinced, Mr. President, that this change in the planning process will result in service delivery systems that are more responsive to local needs; a greater participation by the aging in the AAA and advisory group activities; and a more effective and efficient use of resources target at areas of greatest need.

We have, I believe, designed a program which makes maximum use of opportunities for people to help themselves; to define and identify their own problems; and then to plan to do something about them. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment which will make a good system of planning even better.

I have discussed this amendment with Senator EAGLETON and Senator CHAFEE, and I understand that they have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. That is correct.

Mr. EAGLETON. This deals with the area agency on aging?

Mr. HEINZ. The Senator is correct.

Mr. EAGLETON. It requires that the State plans be based on the area plans as prepared by the area agency.

Mr. HEINZ. The Senator is correct.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I think it is an excellent amendment, and I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HEINZ. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EAGLETON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1482

(Purpose: To provide for utility and home heating cost demonstration projects)

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I call up my amendment the purpose of which is to provide for utility and home heating cost demonstration projects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1482.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 131, line 17, strike out the end quotation marks and the period the second time it appears.

On page 131, between lines 17 and 18, insert the following:

"'UTILITY AND HOME HEATING COST DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

"'SEC. 416. (a) The Secretary may, after consultation with a State agency designated pursuant to section 305(a)(1), make grants to pay for part or all of the costs of developing model projects which show promise of relieving older Americans of the excessive burdens of high utility service and home heating costs. Any such project shall give special consideration to projects under which a business concern engaged in providing home heating oil to the public or is a public utility provides home heating oil or utility services to low-income older Americans at a cost which is substantially lower than providing home heating oil or utility services to other individuals.'".

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, distinguished colleagues, I am introducing an amendment to the Older Americans Act of 1978 to authorize a program of demonstration projects to explore methods of alleviating the impact of everincreasing utility costs on the elderly. This amendment would add to the model projects authority under the training, research and secretarial programs a new section authorizing the Secretary to support model projects which show promise of relieving older Americans of the excessive burdens of high utility service and home heating costs.

While the Secretary will be encouraged to support a variety of projects, special consideration shall be given to those programs which involve the utility and home heating firms as active participants in the demonstrations.

In such a program, for example, a utility company would determine elderly customers with incomes which are inadequate to meet their daily living needs—that is—at or below the poverty level, and would provide them with a discount on their utility bills. In exchange for providing this reduction in cost to the needy elderly the State or local government unit involved in the experiment would provide a tax credit to the utility. In this way the cost of the reduced rates to the elderly are borne by the general public rather than transferred to other utility users in an arbitrary manner.

Mr. President, I do not believe that anyone in this Chamber is unaware of the increased cost of utilities over the past 10 years. I am concerned today because the cost of fuel oil alone has risen more than threefold since 1967. This increase, together with an unprecedented increase in the rate of inflation, has taken a heavy toll on this Nation's most vulnerable group, the elderly poor. For those living on fixed incomes, the cost of weatherizing their homes has been absorbed by the Federal Government's conservation program. But the monthly cost of utilities has been abated only occasionally during the winter months.

I frankly am motivated to offer this amendment for a demonstration program under the Administration on Aging because I have been greatly disappointed by the dismal failure of the Community Services Administration's program of assistance to the elderly for utility costs. The relief offered by CSA can best be characterized as "too little too late." Many eligible citizens were unable to take advantage of the program because they were not aware that such a program existed until the deadline for application had passed.

Mr. President, I believe there must be a better way to provide relief for the elderly from the high cost of utilities. They should not have to suffer the anxiety and fear of interrupted service because one Federal agency cannot get its administrative act together. I believe a demonstration program is an efficient and responsible approach to seeking a more rational and effective solution to this problem.

The cost of utilities is still rising and the number of elderly citizens is expected to double in the next 50 years. I believe we must try now to fashion some long term relief for those who are no longer able, because of fixed incomes, to keep pace with the monster of runaway inflation.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of this much-needed amendment. I have discussed this amendment with the managers of the bill, and I understand that they have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. EAGLETON. Is there authority in existing law to do this? To put it the other way, does it expand authority beyond that which exists in existing law?

Mr. HEINZ. My understanding is that this does not add any money to the bill.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I have had an opportunity to examine the amendment in brief. It appears to me that it is a purely comprehensive authority under the model projects concept. There is nothing that would be mandated or obligatory. Thus, if my reading is correct, I would not object to the amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. I concur with the Senator from Missouri and support the amendment.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HEINZ. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EAGLETON. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1483

(Purpose: To provide for national housing demonstration projects for older Americans)

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ) proposed an unprinted amendment numbered 1483.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 125, strike out lines 4 through 14.

On page 125, line 15, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(1)".

On page 125, line 21 strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

On page 126, line 1, strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 126, line 8, strike out "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

On page 126, line 12, strike out "(6)" and insert in lieu thereof "(5)".

On page 126, line 18, strike out "(7)" and insert in lieu thereof "(6)".

On page 131, line 17, strike out the end quotation marks and the period the second time it appears.

On page 131, between lines 17 and 18, insert the following:

"'NATIONAL HOUSING DEMONSTRATIONS

"'SEC. 416. (a) The Commissioner may, after consultation with the State agency, make grants to any public or nonprofit private agency or organization or contracts with any agency or organization within such State for paying part or all of the cost of developing or operating statewide, regional, metropolitan area, county, city, or community model projects which show promise of expanding or improving the ability of the elderly to remain in their own homes.

"'(b) In making grants and contracts under this section, the Commissioner shall give special consideration to projects designed to assist in meeting the special housing needs of older individuals by—

"'(1) providing financial assistance to such persons, who own their own homes, necessary to enable them to make the repairs or renovations to their homes, which are necessary for them to meet minimum standards,

"'(2) studying and demonstrating methods of adapting existing housing, or construction of new housing, to meet the needs of older individuals suffering from physical disabilities,

"'(3) demonstrating alternative methods of relieving older individuals of the burden of real property taxes on homes they own or rent, and

"'(4) demonstrating methods of relieving older individuals of the excessive burdens of utility rates through discounts on utility bills.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I think the managers of this bill, Senator EAGLETON and Senator CHAFEE, have done a marvelous job. This amendment, the purpose of which is to provide for national housing demonstration projects for older Americans, in no way reflects on the wonderful job they have done in this legislation.

The purpose of the amendment is clearly to try to get the Administration on Aging to use the authority to demonstrate new and improved ways for allowing our elderly citizens to remain in their own homes, as a positive alternative to institutionalization.

In brief, the fact is that although under section 308 the first priority of the existing demonstration authority is stated by Congress to be the special housing need for the elderly, there have been little, if any, demonstrations in this area. About all that the Administration on Aging has accomplished, in fact, is that they have stipulated some guidelines and application procedures for applicants for model projects which do not even mention, let alone include, housing demonstrations as program priorities. This, it seems to me, is quite contrary to the intent of Congress, particularly if one reads the act.

AOA has given priority to proposals to develop and demonstrate improved organization structural models within State governments to maximize the efficient and effective administration of programs in aging. I think that is well and good. That is outstanding, and I have no doubt that the organizational linkages are important. But I have difficulty comparing the trauma of organizational linkage failures with the more devastating trauma of what it is like to lose a home. I think that the past performance of AOA clearly demonstrates that it simply has not been true to the stated intent of Congress.

Mr. President, this proposed amendment to the Older Americans Act of 1978 is designed to demonstrate new and improved ways for allowing our frail elderly citizens to remain in their own homes as a positive alternative to institutionalization. Institutionalization is the greatest fear that many older Amercans have—a fear of being taken from friends, loved ones, and familiar surroundings. Institutionalization is also very expensive, taking a toll emotionally and financially on the elderly and their families and on the Government as well. Yet it is frequently forced upon our citizens because the rising rate of inflation makes it impossible for them to remain in their own homes.

My proposed amendment would create a program of national housing demonstrations which would focus on several of the primary causes of older citizens' having to move from their own homes. The amendment would encourage and give priority to projects which assist in meeting the special housing needs of older persons by providing financial assistance to, first, enable them to make repairs and renovations to their homes; second, adapt existing housing, or construct new housing, to meet the needs of older persons suffering from physical disabilities; third, to demonstrate alternative methods of relieving older persons of the burden of real property taxes on their homes; and, fourth, to explore means of reducing the impact of the spiraling costs of utilities.

With the exception of the demonstration of innovative ways to combat the problems of rising utility costs, the other priorities are currently included within section 308, the Model Project Authority. While authority for this type of project would be continued under section 412—model projects in the Older Americans Act of 1978, I am gratefully concerned that it will continue instead to be ignored.

Even though the current Model Projects Authority requires the Commissioner on Aging to give special consideration to the problems of the Americans who own their homes (through demonstrating methods of adapting existing housing to meet the needs of those with physical disabilities, demonstrating alternative methods of relieving the elderly of real property taxes, and providing methods of helping older Americans renovate their homes to meet required standards) these projects have received little or no support.

I believe the past performance of AOA clearly demonstrates how the intent of Congress has been frustrated as far as the funding of these model projects is concerned. The record is abysmal: over the life of this law, the total number of rehabilitation projects—two projects for a total of $70,000.

To demonstrate construction projects to aid those with physical handicaps, the number is zero, none.

In terms of any projects to find a way to give homeowners or renters, or both, real property tax relief, the total number of experimental projects is none, zero.

So I offer this amendment, Mr. President, in order to make clear our original congressional emphasis and our desire that this kind of effort be supported.

To say that AOA has not given priority to these model demonstrations would be a gross understatement.

In contrast to the performance of AOA in this area, the housing demonstration priority added by this amendment would provide a new and needed impetus for demonstration projects to explore different ways of reducing the impact of soaring utility costs.

It is clear to even the most casual observer that there is an urgent need in America today to provide relief from the cost of fuel and utilities which have more than doubled since 1970. The cost of fuel oil alone is more than triple what it was in 1967. These increased fuel costs have left a large segment of our elderly almost destitute.

These rising utility costs are most burdensome to those elderly who are on limited or fixed incomes. This amendment is and will be even more vital to the elderly as inflation continues to force energy and utility costs skyward. Many of our senior citizens are forced to make a choice between paying the utility bills or purchasing food.

My amendment, in essence, creates a "targeted, selective lifeline program." The concept is much like the one which provides for reduced fares for the elderly on public transportation.

Because of the particular importance to the elderly of being able to maintain their own residences, and with it to maintain their pride, and dignity and independence I urge that you support the amendment to create a program of housing demonstrations under the Older Americans Act of 1978. Let me say that I am sympathetic to the viewpoint of those who argue that their program should be supported under the various housing programs. Yet on balance I am convinced that as demonstration projects it is appropriate to nurture them within the supportive confines of the programs of the Older Americans Act. Clearly if these programs demonstrate the significant impact that I believe is possible, then full programs (as opposed to pilot projects) would appropriately be considered for location within other settings.

I am also sympathetic to the fact that except for the utility demonstrations, the other priority areas are already included within the current model project authority. However, the Commissioner on Aging has elected not to encourage these projects. I hope by identifying these programs for separate consideration, the Congress will be able to motivate the Administration on Aging to seriously reconsider its attitude toward supporting demonstrations designed to assist the elderly to remain in their own homes.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I listened attentively to the remarks of my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania. I understand the point he is seeking to make.

I think the problem is that we expect too much to be accomplished out of one basic piece of legislation, to wit, the Older Americans Act, and we expect too much to be done out of one particular agency, that is, the Administration on Aging.

Not everything that should be done for senior citizens can be done in one bill, nor is there enough money to do it.

What we found when we commenced this year's reauthorization hearings was that the Administration on Aging was trying to do little tidbits of bits and pieces, with a few dollars here, a few dollars there, and truthfully we were doing many, many things terribly cosmetically and not doing too many things very substantially.

We were trying to do too much with too little dollars and two little focus.

So the thrust of our bill that came out of committee, if there is still some thrust left to it after the avalanche of amendments, is that we should try to concentrate on a limited number of things where there is a known and identifiable need and try to spend the finite amount of money we have available for such things as nutrition, transportation, in-home services, and the like. If we were to attempt an in-depth look into the area that is suggested by our distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania, I do not know where the money is going to come from.

Our colleague earlier pointed out the enormous escalation in the spending on this bill in just the past 7 or 8 years.

I wish we had more, but I think the sad truth is that we do not and we have to draw the line somewhere.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I wish to just say briefly that I share the concern of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the points he has raised but, as has been mentioned, one of the primary thrusts of this program is to care for the nutritional needs of the elderly and as such we have made very substantial increases and, in fact, the Senate today added to the increase we had already provided, so there are limits in what can be done. As the Senator from Missouri indicated, the costs of this program have gone up far more sharply than the costs of other programs that the Nation supports, and authority needed in the act to achieve the goals that the Senator from Pennsylvania was earlier suggesting he wishes to achieve.

I think what we really need is perhaps a couple of billion dollars more money, but I do not think the act needs any further authority. I think perhaps if the Senator will consider the remarks he has made as an admonition to the administrator, perhaps he might give some thought to withdrawing the amendment and proceeding on with the weight of his remarks appearing in the RECORD, and we will see what happens in the following year or the next year when we come up to renew the authorization here.

Mr. HEINZ. I understand and hear exactly what the Senator from Rhode Island is saying. I appreciate his comments. Indeed, I think it is very important that we do make clear to the Administration on Aging that they do have under section 308 of the present act, which I understand becomes section 412 in this very comprehensive and excellent rewrite, that they do have the authority under the model projects section under this legislation, the amendments of 1978, to do this kind of model demonstration program.

I shall ask the managers of the bill one further question, if I might have either Senator EAGLETON's or Senator CHAFEE's attention just for a moment: Is it not the understanding of the managers of the bill that section 412, the model projects section, which my amendment seeks to expand, shall enable the Office on Aging to make repairs or renovations; shall allow the adaptation of existing housing, or construction of new housing, to meet the needs of older persons suffering from physical disability; shall allow the demonstration of alternative methods of relieving older persons of the burden of real property taxes on their homes; and shall allow the exploration of means by which the impact of the spiraling costs of utilities might be reduced? Will those not be permitted under the bill as it is now written?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes, they are permitted under the model project authority in the present law and shall also be permitted in the committee bill.

Mr. HEINZ. Then, I think the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island is a good one. I do not wish to insist on my amendment. I think it is very important that we make clear to HEW and the Administration on Aging that they do have this authority and I, therefore, will accept this suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island. I do withdraw the amendment.

Mr. EAGLETON. I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Missouri: Did he have an amendment that he wanted to present that is noncontroversial?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes, I have an amendment.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1484

(Purpose: To strengthen provisions relating to the Federal share for employment and Indian programs, to modify a benefits provision, and to strengthen provisions relating to nutrition)

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON) for himself, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BELLMON and Mr. HEINZ proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1484.

On page 78, beginning with "any" on line 22, strike out through "law" on line 25 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 78, beginning with "any" on line 22, strike out through "law" on line 25 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "any eligible individual (other than any wage or salary to such individual) for the purpose of any other program or provision of State or Federal law. No income or benefits received under title XVI, XVIII, XIX, or XX of the Social Security Act or under the United States Housing Act of 1937 shall be treated as income for the purpose of determining eligibility of any individual under title V of this Act".

On page 100, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

"(C) each project will permit recipients of grants or contracts to charge participating individuals for meals furnished pursuant to guidelines established by the Commissioner, taking into consideration the income ranges of eligible individuals in local communities and other sources of income of the recipients of a grant or a contract;

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Rhode Island has the time.

Mr. CHAFEE. We are waiting for the proponent of the amendment to return. So the Senator may go ahead and speak in opposition.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield a minute to the Senator from New Mexico on the amendment?

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Might I ask the Senator from Missouri did he have any remarks he wanted to make on the amendment which I understand, is a composite of a number of sections? Does the Senator from Missouri have any comments on the amendment? If he has none, I would make a few at this point.

Mr. EAGLETON. The amendment pending before us is the amendment sponsored by myself, Senator JAVITS, Senator DOMENICI, and Senator BELLMON.

This amendment, in addition to some technical changes deals with the following items: It deals with disregard of benefits.

First, the amendment would modify the provision in the committee bill which disregards any cost of any project under the Older Americans Act as income or benefits to any participant for the purpose of any other Federal or State program. This amendment would narrow that provision so that wages and salaries under the Older Americans Act would no longer be exempt from being counted against eligibility for the purposes of other Federal and State law. If this provision of the amendment is adopted, the bill will continue to exempt the cost of services received under the act.

A second facet of this amendment would deal with an element of the nutrition program in that it reinstates a provision of existing law allowing nutrition projects to charge participating individuals for a part or all of the costs of the meal, taking into account the income ranges of eligible individuals and other sources of income of the receipients. This provision is not mandatory. It simply allows nutrition project recipients to charge all or part of the cost of a meal to those participants who can afford to make a contribution.

Next, the amendment would also deal with the Federal share in the community service employment program.

This amendment conforms the matching provisions under title V of the older workers community services employment program with the matching provisions adopted in title III of the bill—that is, to retain the existing 90-to-10 Federal, State, local match for fiscal year 1979, and increase the non-Federal share to 15 percent in fiscal year 1980.

There are matters in this amendment dealing with a separate title for Indians. The portion of the amendment sponsored by myself as well as Senators DOMENICI and BARTLETT, provides for full cost of services for elderly Indians under title VI of the bill. The committee bill creates a separate title for funding social services for elderly Indians. As reported from committee, the bill requires tribal organizations applying for funding under the separate title to provide a 15-percent match in fiscal year 1979, and an 80-percent match in fiscal year 1980.

As many of my colleagues know, there are both historical and operational reasons for limited involvement of Indian tribes in Older Americans Act programs. From a historical perspective, many States have long regarded provision of services to Indians as a Federal rather than a State responsibility because of the direct relationship to the Federal Government that Indian tribes have traditionally had. Under these relationships, the Federal Government has exercised responsibility for the provision of community services such as health, education, and public safety, without any assumption of responsibility or involvement by the States in these areas. Thus, the committee included a separate title for social services for elderly Indians.

With regard to matching requirements, the federally recognized Indian tribes occupy a unique position due to the law affecting the terms of treaties signed with the United States. For example, tribal lands are often nontaxable under the provisions of a treaty. Thus, the tribe has no tax base from which to derive the non-Federal match. For this reason, I propose that title VI be amended to allow the Commissioner to pay all of the costs of social services on tribal lands.

The amendment also deals with advocacy training, insofar as it clarifies that training funds under title IV may be used for advocacy and leadership training.

There is also a portion of this amendment that has to do with American Samoa and the Marianas; it modifies the committee bill as it relates to the allotment formula for American Samoa and the Northern Marianas.

S. 2850 includes the Northern Mariana Islands as eligible for funds under the act for the first time. The bill establishes the same minimum percentage amount for the Marianas as it does for the Trust Territories, the Virgin Islands, and Guam. It also continues the inclusion of Samoa at the same percentage level.

Given the small population over 60 in both Samoa and the Northern Marianas, this provision creates substantial inequities.

Under the committee bill, each person aged 60 or over in Samoa would receive $1,151; in the Northern Marianas, $1,520 per elderly person. By way of comparison, the allotment per person in Wyoming is only $46.

I propose to reduce the minimum percentage amount for Samoa and the Northern Marianas from one-fourth of 1 percent of the total allotment to one-sixteenth of 1 percent. This would bring both areas more closely in line with allotments to the States and the Trust Territories. Under the amendment, the allotment per person in Samoa would be $270, and in the Northern Marianas the allotment would be $400.

There is a provision in this amendment that adds emphasis to multipurpose senior centers encouraging that they be given special consideration in the designation of a focal point of service delivery within the communities.

There is a portion of this that deals with the Commissioner on Aging insofar as he may not disapprove a State plan solely because the State applies for a waiver of eligibility.

Likewise a portion of the amendment strengthens the language of the committee bill as it relates to cities of 100,000 or more to receive designation as planning and service areas.

There is a portion of this amendment requiring the General Accounting Office to evaluate the interdepartmental coordination required by section 203 of the bill and to assess whether or not specific age-targeted programs deter serving that population through more broadly based untargeted programs. This is a provision Senator BELLMON is very much interested in.

There is a modification in this amendment to title V of the committee bill requiring national contractors to coordinate their employment programs with State agency allocations.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. I just wanted to be sure that that amendment substitutes a new section for section (d)(1) on page 145 so that the requirement is for a 30-day notice to the State for review and comment rather than the provision in the bill as reported.

Mr. EAGLETON. If I understand the Senator correctly, this tracks the amendment that the Senator was going to propose——

Mr. JAVITS. That is right.

Mr. EAGLETON (continuing). Requiring each contractor to notify the State in which it proposed a project at least 30 days prior to implementing the project.

Mr. JAVITS. Right, and giving the opportunity to review and comment but not giving the State a veto.

Mr. EAGLETON. That is right. There is no State veto but a State has the right to give a critique.

Let me move on to another portion of the amendment, one which is supported by Senator JAVITS. This portion of the amendment would reinstate the word "hot." It adds language "hot" or other appropriate to modify "meals" under the existing provisions. Existing law requires the serving of one hot meal per day, and Senator JAVITS wants specific attention paid to that. This thus continues the emphasis on hot meals but permits, where appropriate, some degree of flexibility.

Mr. JAVITS. Exactly. I thank my colleague.

Mr. EAGLETON. There is one matter of importance in this amendment that deletes specific reference to the phrase "meals on wheels" in the nutrition program.

I might take a minute or two just on this because it has been a matter of some controversy. In order to meet the objections of many of the meals on wheels groups which believe that specific reference in the statute will adversely affect their efforts to continue voluntary participation, this amendment provides that the specific reference to meals on wheels be deleted. The bill would still require area agencies on aging to give consideration to groups of demonstrated ability to provide home-delivered meals effectively, efficiently, and reasonably.

I believe there is some merit to the concern of some meals on wheels groups, that once written into the statute, the public will receive the entire meals on wheels effort as a Federal program, and once that perception is established they fear private resources will be channeled elsewhere.

Although admittedly this amendment will really not change the substantive provisions of the bill it will serve, I hope, to alleviate some of the fears of meals on wheels people who are very sincere, very well-motivated people, who render excellent service and volunteer a great deal of their time and effort to make sure that meals are delivered to home-bound elderly.

There are also some matters that could be classified as technical changes in this amendment.

I yield to my colleague from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. I have no further comments. I think the points that the Senator from Missouri made regarding meals on wheels were important.

We discussed that in our debate on the specific sum of money that goes into the home-delivered meals. Certainly we would want to do everything we can to encourage those volunteers who are presently serving meals on wheels to continue their superb efforts which mean so much to the program.

I have no other remarks.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, at this point I would like to offer a composite packet of our amendments. First, I am pleased to join in offering an amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Aging (Mr. EAGLETON) which would achieve a number of objectives.

It would delete the provision requiring Indian tribal organizations to put up local matching funds under the new title VI program—"Grants For Indian Tribes." When I introduced S. 2609 on February 28 it incorporated the concept of a separate, direct funding mechanism for Indian tribes. I am pleased that the Human Resources Committee included this title in S. 2850. In my original proposal, we provided for 100 percent Federal funding of services for elderly Indians. S. 2850 added a local matching requirement which will be deleted by the pending amendment. I support this move and think it will go a long way toward getting much needed services to our neediest older Americans.

A second provision in this composite amendment would add a provision to S. 2850, clarifying the role of multipurpose senior centers in the overall aging network.

As you will recall when I introduced S. 2609, I recommended that we consolidate the social service program and the senior center program into a single title. My objective was to correct what I believed to be a serious deficiency in the 1973 amendments to the Older Americans Act. The Older Americans Comprehensive Services Amendments of 1973 separated senior centers from the remainder of the aging apparatus. Attention was focused on the Administration on Aging, the State offices on aging, and the new area agencies on aging. The multipurpose senior centers were authorized in a separate title—title V—which was, for many years, not funded by Congress. This served to slow the growth of multipurpose senior centers, and prevent them from developing as a logical part of our aging network. In S. 2609, I sought tc correct this oversight by recommending a more direct role in the aging network for multipurpose senior centers. They are a logical community focal point for outreach and other activities involving older Americans, and an excellent place for the colocation of services. I am pleased that Senator EAGLETON and the members of the Subcommittee on Aging reflected that philosophy in S. 2850, and reinforced it in the accompanying report. My amendment is designed solely to clarify that point and to insure that proper attention is given to the role of senior centers by the Administration on Aging, the State units on aging, and the area agencies on aging.

Mr. President, in the annual report of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, the role of senior centers was discussed at some length. I ask unanimous consent that pertinent portions of that report be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RIEGLE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRESENT AND FUTURE IMPORTANCE OF SENIOR CENTERS IN RURAL AREAS

Maurice Endwright, director of the Indiana State Commission on Aging, described (at the Terre Haute hearing) senior centers as "lifesavers to the rural elderly." He asked for changes in Older Americans Act title V regulations to permit the use of funds for center operations.

At the same hearing, Louise Johnson, former university extension agent for the area and now vice president of the State advisory council on aging, gave this acount:

"We have had experience at Greencastle in Putnam County at our senior center and we have several examples of isolated people. One lady was just sitting with something over her shoulder to keep her warm, her thermostat was turned down. She had used all of her money and had bought a little home and she was just sitting there. We did have the nutrition site at our center and we were able to get her to come because she happened to know the director for the nutrition program and she has worked for about 3 years now and that was the thing that she had to look forward to day after day. She was not physically able to do heavy work but she would set the table and put the flatware on the table and this sort of thing, and it has enriched her life tremendously."

Sharon Lindsay, director of the Champaign County Office on Aging, said at the Illinois hearing:

"One method of providing coordination of services for the rural elderly is through multipurpose senior centers. Title V is a welcome funding source to help initiate such centers. There are two problems, however. In some communities, there simply is no suitable structure to be purchased or renovated for a center. Funding for new construction where there is no feasible alternative is needed. Also, after the center is developed, there will be an ongoing need for funding for staff and operating costs. In our State it is unclear what funding units can and should be responsible for local funding."

A third provision in the composite amendment is designed to strengthen the States waiver authority with regard to the consolidation of the programs authorized under the Older Americans Act.

In drafting S. 2850 the Senate Human Resources Committee recognized that a difficult and in some cases delicate transition will have to occur between the way these programs are now administered and the way they will be administered in fiscal year 1981. I am referring in particular to the administrative consolidation of the title III and title VII programs. In many areas this consolidation has already taken place and those States and localities should encounter little if any difficulty in implementing S. 2850. In some States, however, a wide gap exists between the administrative structure of the title III social service program and the title VII nutrition projects. In other States, such as my own home State of New Mexico, there is concern about how this new system will operate and a certain amount of "uneasiness" about the speed with which these changes are being mandated here in Washington.

The Human Resources Committee has wisely granted waiver authority in S. 2850 that would, if fully implemented, alleviate many of these concerns. My amendment does not change the basic language that appears in the Senate bill but it adds to it language which will transfer most all of the decisionmaking process from Washington to the States regarding the exercise of this waiver right.

The language in S. 2850 reads as follows:

(2) The Commissioner, in approving any State plan under this section may, for the fiscal years 1979 and 1980, waive any particular requirement relating to the delivery of services or the establishment or operation of centers which such State agency cannot meet because of the consolidation authorized by the Older Americans Act of 1978 or because meeting such requirement would reduce or jeopardize the quality of services under such Act.

My amendment would stipulate that: "The Commissioner may not disapprove any State plan * * * solely on the ground that a State has requested a waiver" as prescribed in the text of the bill. The effect of my language would be to limit the Commissioner's authority for the 2-year life of this bill and vest primary responsibility for the exercise of this waiver authority with the States.

I was concerned, Mr. President, that in their zeal to implement this consolidation concept the Administration on Aging might not approve any or most requests for waiver during the 2-year transition period. When you grant to a program administrator the authority to allow such a waiver you also grant him the authority to disallow such a waiver request. I wanted the States, who are dealing on a day-to-day basis with the area agencies on aging and the title VII directors, to have greater flexibility in the exercise of this waiver authority.

This language in no way prohibits the Commissioner from disallowing a State plan which is faulty in other respects. Nor, in recognition of Senator EAGLETON's concerns, do I believe that it would totally prevent him from rejecting a State plan if it contained an outlandish or unreasonable abuse of this waiver authority.

Mr. President, I feel that my amendment adds safeguard and I would stress that it would give the States greater flexibility in bringing about the transition from our present administrative arrangement to the new consolidated approach mandated in S. 2850. I would also stress that it is my understanding that the States may use this waiver authority on a nonstatewide basis. If a State can work out the consolidated administrative structure in some or most of its planning and service areas, I see no reason why that waiver authority could not be narrowly used in those areas where difficulties exist. Thus I believe that the State should clearly have the authority to waive certain aspects of the consolidation mandated in this bill, either on a statewide basis or on a selective basis as the circumstances may dictate.

Mr. President, I would hope that the distinguished managers of this bill will agree with me that a more flexible—State oriented approach to this problem is desirable and that they will accept this amendment and work for its retention in the joint conference committee.

A fourth and final provision in this composite amendment would strengthen the language now in S. 2850 regarding designation of area agencies on aging.

When I introduced S. 2609, on February 28, 1978, it contained a provision that would have mandated the designation of municipalities with a population of 250,000 or more as a separate planning and service area. It was my intention to grant to the larger urban areas in this country the right to serve as separate planning and service areas and to establish their offices on aging as the local area agency on aging (AAA). After due consideration the Human Resources Committee has chosen a somewhat different approach. The committee has also expressed its desire not to place mandatory language in the bill which would preempt the right of the States to organize themselves as they deem most appropriate.

As a former elected official in the city of Albuquerque, N. Mex., I have a special sensitivity to the difficulties many larger urban areas have in providing services to their senior citizens. In many cases urban areas are lumped together with a number of surrounding subdivisions in a multicounty area agency on aging. In some areas this system works very well and it is not my intention to split up an existing AAA if all parties are convinced that it is the best possible vehicle for coordinating and delivering the services mandated under this act. But in other areas the cities have tended to be forceably lumped with subdivisions that are often insensitive to the special needs of the urban elderly. In addition, in many areas the multicounty AAA advisory board have tended to reflect a disproportionately low level of representation for the major urban component in the planning and service area. I was seeking to correct these problems by establishing a mechanism that would make it easier for larger municipal areas to establish themselves as separate and independent area agencies on aging. Since this program has traditionally been a State administered program, it can be argued that mandatory language requiring the designation of urban area agencies on aging runs counter to the philosophy of this legislation. I accept the fact that the Senate does not wish to be that restrictive in its shaping of this provision. Thus the amendment that is now pending before the Senate is designed to strengthen the procedure so that a large general purpose local government, whether it is a county or a metropolitan area of greater than 100,000 population, can seek designation as a separate planning and service area. If that designation is denied, they will have an appeal procedure to the Commissioner on Aging. The Commissioner could review the data and decide whether or not the State's decision was appropriate.

I agree that this approach curtails somewhat the State's right to divide itself up in a manner which it deems most appropriate. I believe, however, it would also prevent a State from acting in an arbitrary or capricious manner. This approach is a reasonable and responsible effort to redress a specific problem or grievance that affects a number or larger political subdivisions across this Nation. Mr. President, I would note, for the RECORD, that Senator CRANSTON has expressed to me his concern about the problems underlying this amendment. There are a number of urban areas in California that are seeking designation and this amendment would be of assistance to those areas.

I hope that the distinguished managers of this bill will accept this amendment and join with me in attempting to resolve this matter in a fair and reasonable manner.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I would like to support that portion of the amendment which amends section 331 (1) of S. 2850, now before us in order to clarify that the Congress intends to maintain its commitment to provide hot, nutritious meals for all older Americans covered by the act.

Section 331(1) of S. 2850 provides that nutrition projects will "provide, 5 or more days a week, at least one meal per day and any additional meals which the recipient of a grant of contract under this title may elect to provide, each of which assures a minimum of one-third of the daily recommended dietary allowances as established by the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Academy of Science—National Research Council."

This provision drops from existing law the requirement that meals served be "hot." The word "hot" was deleted simply to provide more flexibility in the program, to allow for those circumstances which effectively preclude ideal services. The committee did not delete reference to "hot" in order to express a preference for, or an approval of, reliance on cold meals in nutrition programs.

I emphasize this point not only because a hot meal program is preferable, but also because a reliance on cold meals would be detrimental to older Americans participating in the nutrition program. A cold meal program would only perpetuate living conditions which often characterize the lives of many senior citizens—for without a hot meal program, many older Americans stay at home, prepare inadequate cold meals, or haven't the resources and, in some cases, the ability, to prepare nutritious hot or cold meals. We must reaffirm our commitment that the Older Americans Act shall provide hot meals. Thus, section 331(1) should be amended by inserting after the word "one", the words "hot, or other appropriate." This amendment will permit flexibility in nutrition programs in order to anticipate any circumstances which might make a solely hot meal service inappropriate.

The amendment utilizes the words "hot or other appropriate" in order to assure that the Older Americans Act nutrition program continues its emphasis upon hot nutritious meals, while permitting flexibiltiy where appropriate.

Mr. President, that portion of the amendment dealing with section 502 (d) (1) now before us will provide greater flexibility with respect to notice to State offices on aging by national organizations conducting older Americans community service jobs programs within a State.

The provision in S. 2850 raised concerns among the national organizations that inordinate delays might result. In order to assure that no such delays result, I propose the following substitute language:

"(d) (1) Whenever a national organization or other program sponsor conducts a project within a State such organization or program sponsor shall submit to the State Agency on Aging a description of such project to be conducted in that State, including the location of the project, 30 days prior to undertaking the project, for review and comment according to guidelines the Secretary shall issue to assure efficient and effective coordination of programs under this title.

Mr. President, I met Friday with representatives of the national organizations, including Mrs. Ruth Kobel, representing the Farmers Union, which conducts the highly respected Green Thumb program, and William F. Hutton, the executive director of the National Council of Senior Citizens, who had written to me expressing their concerns with this provision. The amendment I propose will provide State offices on aging 30 days advance notice of jobs programs conducted by national organizations within a State, and directs the Secretary of Labor to establish guidelines to assure efficient coordination of the jobs projects conducted pursuant to the Older Americans Act. This language fully meets the concerns expressed by the national organizations and was agreed to by the organizations with which I met.

I wish to take this opportunity, Mr. President, to recognize the cooperative efforts of the Farmers Union, the National Council on Aging, the National Council of Senior Citizens, and the American Association of Retired Persons, to improve the operation and coordination of the vital job programs undertaken to assist low-income, unemployed, older Americans.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, Senator EAGLETON has kindly included my evaluation amendment in this package of noncontroversial amendments. I would like to thank my distinguished colleague. Unlike the bill passed in the House, the legislation before us today makes a quantum leap toward consolidation and decategorization of programs for older Americans. The 2-year reauthorization, in anticipation of future administration proposals, likewise is evidence of the Senate committee's responsible approach to this legislation. I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that the Senate conferees will be able to persuade the House of the wisdom of this approach, when they go to conference on this bill.

I have long supported consolidation and coordination in Federal programs which serve the same needs and the same constituencies, Mr. President. To that end, and in support of the movement toward consolidation and decategorization embodied in this bill, my amendment requires evaluations of duplication and overlap between the Older Americans Act and other Federal programs which serve older Americans.

First, Mr. President, my amendment requires the General Accounting Office to examine the relationship between and among the programs listed in section 203 of the proposed act—CETA, ACTION, title XX, several pieces of housing legislation, the Economic Opportunity Act, the Community Schools and Comprehensive Community Education Act, and the Urban Mass Transportation Act—as they relate to the purposes of the Older Americans Act, along with the administrative costs of programs under the act, and then report to Congress. The GAO report will also address the extent to which programs under this act affect the response of other programs to the needs of older Americans. It will include recommendation as to how unnecessary duplication and overlap can be reduced or eliminated in Federal programs which serve older Americans; and it will include recommendations for cost savings to be achieved by eliminating unnecessary duplication. My amendment will also require an enumeration of Federal expenditures for services to senior citizens, under all of the programs listed in section 203 of the act.

Second, my amendment will require the Secretary of HEW to submit a one-time report to Congress describing the steps being taken at the Federal and State levels to coordinate planning processes and service delivery operations under the Older Americans Act and under title XX of the Social Security Act. (Title XX requires that at least three social services be provided to senior citizens on a State-wide basis. The identical services can be funded under the Older Americans Act. Both programs involve preparation of detailed State plans which are presently prepared through totally separate planning processes.)

It is my view, Mr. President, that having the results of such evaluations, available before another reauthorization of the Older Americans Act is considered 2 years from now, can further the work of consolidation and decategorization begun in this bill. Moreover, such evaluations can lead to increased administrative efficiency and better service delivery.

I urge the adoption of my amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON).

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN), the Senator from Montana (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) and the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON) would vote "yea."

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 90, nays 0, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 241 Leg.]

So Mr. EAGLETON's amendment (No. UP 1484) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I send to the desk an unprinted amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Will the Senator yield, Mr. President?

Mr. DOMENICI. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I would like to inquire as to how many more amendments will be called up.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I will have a substitute to the Domenici amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Senator JAVITS will have a substitute for the Domenici amendment. Are there other Senators with amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind that Senator BIDEN has requested time.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. And I am advised that Senator DOLE has an amendment.

May I say it is the leadership's intention to complete action on the bill today, and hopefully, to proceed with the supplemental appropriations for the Department of Agriculture. I hope that Senators will stay around.

I also hope that on innocuous amendments, rollcall votes will not be requested so that Senators will not be discommoded by having to stay around too late in order to finish action on this bill and on the supplemental appropriation bill.

As I see it now, there are four amendments—the Domenici amendment, the Javits amendment to the Domenici amendment, the Dole amendment, and the Clark amendment—and the Biden amendment. That makes five.

Could we get an agreement on the rollcall votes, 10 minutes to each rollcall vote?

I ask unanimous consent to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I am sorry that that objection was entered, for that will just cost the Senators about 25 additional minutes on five rollcall votes, if that is what we have.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. If the Senator from New Mexico will yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I wonder if the Senator will tell them in addition who is costing them the additional 25 minutes? I am happy to take the credit for it.

Mr. BAYH. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield.

INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATIONS, 1979

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on H.R. 12240, as amended.

There being no objection, the Chair appointed Mr. BAYH, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. HATHAWAY, Mr. HART, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. MATHIAS, and Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR., conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield.

ORDER FOR RECESS TODAY UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the majority leader that the request has been granted earlier.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Are there any orders for recognition of Senators on tomorrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are. Senator JAVITS is scheduled for 15 minutes.

ORDER FOR RECESS TOMORROW UNTIL 10 A.M. ON WEDNESDAY, JULY 26, 1978

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business tomorrow, it stand in recess until the hour of 10 o'clock on Wednesday morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. YOUNG. Reserving the right to object, I wonder if I may have about 3 minutes on tomorrow morning?

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATORS TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, Mr. MOYNIHAN be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized; that Mr. YOUNG be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes and that Mr. JAVITS be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it recess until 9:30 tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ABOUREZK. I object.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Will the distinguished Senator from South Dakota inform Senators as to whether or not he expects to ask for a rollcall vote on the supplemental appropriation bill later today?

Mr. ABOUREZK. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I thank the Senator.

OLDER AMERICANS ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of S. 2850.

UP AMENDMENT 1485

(Purpose: To provide expanded services under the Older Americans Act of 1965 to the rural elderly.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1485.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 83, line 25, beginning with the word "as" strike out through "States" on page 84, line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "as the product of the population aged 60 or over in such State and the allotment percentage of that State bears to the sum of the corresponding products in all States".

On page 84, lines 10 and 11, strike out "ending June 30, 1973" and insert in lieu thereof "1978".

On page 84, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) The allotment percentage of each State shall be 100 per centum plus one-half of that per centum of the population of the State which resides in rural areas in that State.

"(B) For the purpose of this paragraph, the term 'rural area' means any area not included in a standard metropolitan statistical area as established by the Office of Management and Budget.

On page 84, line 16, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 89, line 18 after the period, insert the following: "The State is encouraged in carrying out the requirement of clause (1) of this subsection to include the area covered by the appropriate economic development district involved in any planning and service area designated under that clause, and to include all portions of an Indian reservation within a single planning and service area, if feasible.".

On page 92, line 19, insert "(A)" after "(4)".

On page 92, line 22 after the semicolon, insert "and".

On page 22, between lines 22 and 23, insert the following new subparagraph:

"(B) provide that the State agency will establish outreach activities designed to assure that needy elderly individuals in rural areas are better served by programs assisted under the plan;".

On page 123, line 15, strike out "as paragraphs (6) and (7)" and insert in lieu thereof "as paragraphs (7) and (8)".

On page 123, line 16, strike out "paragraph" and insert in lieu thereof "paragraphs".

On page 123, line 21, strike out the end quote, and the period.

On page 123, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

"'(6) to assist in paying the costs, in whole or in part, of special courses of training designed to meet the needs of service providers in rural areas,'".

On page 126, line 7, strike out "or".

On page 126, betwen lines 17 and 18, insert the following:

"'(7) meet the special needs of older individuals residing in rural areas;'".

On page 126, line 18, strike out "(7)" and insert in lieu thereof "(8)".

On page 127, line 15, strike out "(8)" and insert in lieu thereof "(9)".

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I say to my fellow Senators that I shall try not to take too long, although I do believe this is one of the most significant amendments that will be offered to this bill.

Before I explain it, and I shall try to do that as succinctly as possible, let me list the cosponsors of this amendment: Senators BELLMON, THURMOND, HART, HELMS, SCHMITT, WALLOP, DURKIN, MORGAN, BAYH, HATCH, HODGES, RANDOLPH, CLARK, and ANDERSON.

Mr. President, I think that any Senators that have looked at the problems we are having in delivering the various services under the Older Americans Act to the senior citizens who live in rural areas would quickly acknowledge that what I found in New Mexico is basically what they will find in more than half of the States of the Union. That is as follows: It costs more to deliver the services to those who live in small communities in the rural parts of our respective States, than it does in big cities.

I think it is logical that our country foster a policy of preserving the rural environment for our senior citizens. The only way to do that is to make it as attractive as possible in terms of the services available. To put it another way, if we want our senior citizens to continue to move into and live in rural parts of our respective States, we have to acknowledge the fact that it is going to cost more to deliver the services to them. That is the situation I have found in hearings in my State—I have not found it different in any State with a substantial rural population. This amendment does not increase the authorizations in the bill. They were increased by the committee. I would take those same dollar figures and reallocate them under my new formula.

First, this amendment would modify the formula for distributing these funds under consolidated title III so as to allow a greater recognition of the special needs of the older Americans who live in rural areas. It would encourage the development of closer links between rural area agencies on aging and the Economic Development Administration district offices which administer a number of programs under the auspices of the Department of Commerce.

Second, what we have found is that in the rural areas, the Economic Development Administration is an extremely good Federal program for the construction of facilities. What we are trying to do here is coordinate, as much as we can, EDA with the Rural AAA's.

Third, this amendment would encourage the States, when they are designating rural area agencies on aging, to include all parts of an Indian reservation in a single area agency. That is a particular problem in my part of the country where we have often subdivided many Indian reservations instead of preserving the homogeneous nature of the reservation. This amendment would say that the unity of Indian reservations should be preserved for purposes of programmatic emphasis.

Fourth, my amendment would increase the outreach efforts in rural areas in an attempt to reach needy elderly individuals with the appropriate services.

Fifth, it would expand the training efforts designed to provide the personnel needed to improve the service delivery mechanism in rural areas of America.

I know that this amendment will be controversial and some of my colleagues who represent the very large States—not large in geography, but with large metropolitan areas—will object. I am sympathetic with the attitude that they will express in this debate, but I think we often overlook the needs of the rural elderly because they are outside of the mainstream of media coverage.

They are a relatively invisible portion of the population. They are more isolated and they are less well served. They simply do not command the Nation's attention in a manner proportionate to their needs.

In the January–February 1978 issue of Perspective on Aging, the publication of the National Council on Aging, there was published a guest editorial by Dr. Louise Gerrard, executive director of the West Virginia Commission on Aging. In this editorial, the clear indication was that the rural elderly are neglected; they are "a neglected minority within a minority—the most disadvantaged of America's elderly population."

> Statistics * * * make it clear that rural elderly persons are more likely to live in poverty than their city cousins, to have substandard housing, to find it difficult to secure needed services, to lack the mobility to get from their homes to health clinics, to Food Stamp offices, to senior centers.
> Though they need employment, they may not be able to reach the job site, because there is no public transportation for that either.

Later in the editorial Dr. Gerrard noted that many policymakers—> * * * continue to talk and act as if older rural residents with their farms and families and fresh air don't need the benefits from government programs as their urban counterparts do.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of Dr. Gerrard's editorial be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, in that same issue of Perspective appeared an article by Dr. Joyce Barry, a specialist on the rural elderly with the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Dr. Barry noted that—

> The most common barriers to the delivery of services in rural areas are: Low population density, higher costs of services, lack of an organized communications network, lack of public—or any—transportation system which keeps older people from obtaining services that are available, lack of local monies to match federal funds and/or to finance services on a long-term basis, emigration of rural residents.

Dr. Barry went even further to note that—

> To be elderly in America can be a liability, but to be old and rural can be hazardous. The kinds of services keyed to human survival most often remain invisible in rural areas. Somehow, program efforts have continued to be cosmetic and fail to address older persons' urgent needs in non-metropolitan communities in the United States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of Dr. Barry's article entitled "A Silent Minority Often Unserved," be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, a Washington-based organization known as Rural America has compiled some information on the magnitude of the "discrimination" against rural areas which have existed and continues to exist in most of the major federally funded programs. Rural America has compiled a brief fact sheet showing how this discrimination impacts upon the rural elderly in the fields of housing, health, and transportation. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that portions of this fact sheet be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 3.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, in order to be fair to the larger States, I have provided in my amendment a hold harmless provision which will insure that no State will receive less than it received during fiscal year 1978. Thus, there will not be a dimunition of services as a result of the new formula. I would also note, Mr. President, that New Mexico does not gain from this formula change. I say this because it would be easy for opponents of this amendment to say that I am doing this solely to benefit my home State. I am offering this amendment because rural areas are underserved in the distribution of Federal funds. That local services are more scarce. That transportation and service delivery costs are greater. That specially trained personnel are more scarce and that these and other factors all work against the efficient delivery of social and nutritional services to the rural elderly.

The State of New Mexico is a small State and we come under the minimum funding provision in the existing act. New Mexico receives one-half of 1 percent of the funds appropriated for services. That is true under the current act and it is true under the formula containd in my amendment. I think that it is appropriate to incorporate the concept of a rural service delivery mechanism in this bill so that we can rectify the shortcomings of our present system and begin to more equitably meet the needs of our low income and needy rural elderly.

I have prepared a computer printout showing how this new formula would work if we increased the appropriations by 20 percent. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that this table be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 4.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would hope that the Senate will act favorably on my amendment and that it will become a precedent for future legislation.

EXHIBIT 1

THE MOST DISADVANTAGED

(By Louise Gerrard)

The rural elderly are a neglected minority within a minority—the most disadvantaged of America's elderly population.

Statistics given elsewhere in this issue of Perspective make it clear that rural older persons are more likely to live in poverty than their city cousins, to have substandard housing, to find it difficult to secure needed services, to lack the mobility to get from their homes to health clinics, to Food Stamp offices, to senior centers.

Though they need employment, they may not be able to reach the job site, because there is no public transportation for that, either. I know one determined foster grandparent who in even the foulest weather walks six miles, then hitches a ride by truck to reach the center for retarded children where he works.

Certainly no one today would dare to claim that blacks are happier than whites, that they are content without money, singing spirituals and sitting by the riverbank waiting for fish to catch on their lines. Yet some policy makers—the gatekeepers of our society—continue to talk and act as if rural older residents with their farms and families and fresh air don't need the benefits from government programs as their urban counterparts do.

It is specious to generalize about rural people. Some have been farmers most of their lives, but many more were what census takers term "non-farm": Coal miners, timbermen, employees in stores, on road crews, in food processing plants, teachers, gas station attendants, practical nurses, or carpenters. The older spent few years in jobs covered by Social Security, so what money they have is in or comes from savings, and private pensions are virtually unknown in many rural communities.

Laws passed since the sixties have made a slight difference—though the supreme irony is that Medicare, the Older Americans Act, community mental health centers, Supplemental Security Income, transportation and housing programs were designed to meet urban needs and to avoid duplication of services to city residents. Rural America was not part of the package. Social services in rural areas are minimal—if they exist at all—and urban programs cannot serve as guidelines to span the yawning gap in rural service delivery.

Medicare premiums under Part B are the same for rural as for urban dwellers. But if medical services aren't available, and all too often they are not, the rural policyholder pays for what someone else is getting. He does without. The trained manpower needed to write a proposal for model project funds cannot be found in rural communities. So, even with legislation that should equally benefit urban and rural areas, rural projects receive comparatively few dollars.

In many rural counties, a conscientious outreach worker may be busy eight hours a day, yet see only three or four people. Distances are vast, back-up services sparse. For a meals-on-wheels program, transportation costs more than the food.

Visits from service agency staff—in theory supposed to serve everyone—are infrequent. Social Security workers may be in a county two days a month; the Farmers' Home Administration representative may come one morning a month and leave for another county while people are still waiting in line to see him.

Rural health clinics are opening, but in all too many places the nearest health worker is two hours away, over roads impassable in bad weather, and then only if an older individual can find or persuade someone with a car to drive him there.

Rural counties are hard pressed to pay for water and sewer lines and to maintain their roads. They cannot pick up the costs of programs started with Federal funds, then thrown onto the community as its responsibility after three or four years. "If the community cares, it will pick up the program" is a favorite maxim of guidelines writers. As those of us in rural areas know, the community may care passionately yet lack the economic base to support even the worthiest program. A county receiving $30,000 in revenue sharing funds a year takes heroic measures if it earmarks $5,000 for a senior center or transportation program.

The National Council on the Aging is committed to establishing a new emphasis and a new focus on the rural elderly. At a time when the Administration is preparing its long-promised rural strategy, this special issue of Perspective reminds us that America desperately needs a rural strategy, as well.

EXHIBIT 2

A SILENT MINORITY OFTEN UNSERVED

(By Joyce Berry)

Anyone with a social conscience realizes our Nation's neglect of the older American. To be elderly in America can be a liability, but to be old and rural can be hazardous. The kinds of services keyed to human survival most often remain invisible in rural areas. Somehow, program efforts have continued to be cosmetic and failed to address the older persons' urgent needs in non-metropolitan communities of the United States.

In the past, the elderly people held meaningful roles in the rural community and within the family structure, a pattern rapidly changing due to the emigration of those who seek more gainful employment and better opportunities in the cities. The rural elderly, often with intense, emotional ties to land they have worked and cultivated for most of their lives, are extremely reluctant to join the outward flow.

The inadequate service delivery system for the rural elderly usually means a condition of dispair and isolation. The lack of transportation, home repair services, health care and sufficient incomes prevent them from maintaining independence and dignity in their later years. The most common barriers to the delivery of services in rural areas are:

Low population density.

Higher cost of services.

Lack of an organized communications network.

Lack of public—or any—transportation system which keeps older people from obtaining services that are available.

Lack of local monies to match Federal funds and/or to finance services on a long-term basis.

Emigration of rural residents.

Reports from hearings on the rural elderly conducted by the Senate Committee on Aging indicate that transportation is the major problem. Few would argue that, until social service programs abandon the categorical utilization of vehicles, fragmented systems of transportation will continue to exist. Agencies must work towards actively implementing, on a broad scale, what is put into the interagency agreements.

HOUSING ALSO SERIOUS PROBLEM

Housing is another serious problem. Data show that 60 percent of the nation's substandard housing is in rural America. One out of four such units is occupied by an older individual. Sixty percent of the rural elderly live in homes built prior to 1915. Older persons can no longer rely on family members to fix leaky roofs or put doors back on hinges.

Requests by the rural elderly for home repair services far exceed the program assistance available through the Community Services Administration, Administration on Aging, Farmers Home Administration and other agencies. There is a need for more resources and a redirected or expanded effort in manpower development to assist the elderly in maintaining their homes.

Though it is known that the majority of elderly persons in the nation's rural areas suffer from chronic illness, there is nevertheless an absence or scarcity of physicians and other trained health personnel to attend to them. The gap is crucial, its dimensions only partly bridged now by the Rural Health Clinic bill that helps by providing the elderly with reimbursable medical care.

An expansion of the homemaker home health aide program is needed to provide chore service, as well as health care, to help the elderly remain in their homes as long as possible. A recent study by the General Accounting Office encourages the provision of home health care as a preventive measure to institutionalization. Aside from reducing costs, it is the most responsible and feasible means of caring for the elderly whose condition does not warrant institutionalization.

POVERTY IS APPALLING

The poverty among the rural elderly is appalling, particularly in the South where there is a significant concentration of low-income, minority groups. Close to 60 percent of the older persons who are minority group members live far below poverty levels. Insufficient income affects their total lifestyle and well-being.

It was recently reported that an older woman in Mississippi had lived in a tent for two years because she could not afford to pay the taxes and repair costs for her home.

In the ongoing battle for resources, it should not be necessary to pit the urban elderly against older persons who live in rural areas. A valid policy on aging must reflect integration and encompass planning for the needs of both populations. Factors particular to each group must be scrutinized, understood, fitted properly into a mosaic of services that meet both requirements.

The increased cost of service delivery in rural areas—as well as the widespread inaccessibility of services—must be considered. These elements must be part of the decision-making process in allocating funds to support programs serving older persons.

OUTREACH EFFORT LACKING

An outreach effort is desperately needed in rural America to find elderly persons who never heard of an area agency on aging. Unfortunately, older residents of rural areas are not a vocal group; others must speak on their behalf; others, aware of their dire need for homemaker aid and medical care, must locate them, apprise them of services that do exist and are available—and bring one to the other.

Little effort at present is being made to help the rural elderly organize and become skillful in gaining the attention of those who could hear—and help with—their concerns. We in the field of aging—as we plan, analyze and make legislative recommendations—must begin to think rural as well as urban. It's time we recognized that more than a third of the country's older population is in the rural United States. Their number is rapidly increasing—far in excess of the amount of available services.

A "state of the art" report is not needed to tell us about the condition of the rural elderly. We need a commitment from key officials within the executive and legislative branches of government to develop strategies to implement fully and to institute legislative mandates to provide aid to this target group.

---

THE RURAL ELDERLY

(Prepared by Rural America)

For the rural elderly, the problems of poverty, isolation, poor health, inadequate housing and lack of transportation are compounded. With 40 percent of the nation's elderly population, rural America is home to 60 percent of the nation's elderly poor.

In 1977, 81 percent of the rural elderly had annual incomes below $4,000. Despite these figures, Federal outlay data for 1976 indicates that less than 11 percent of all Administration on Aging (AoA) expenditures went to the rural elderly.

HOUSING

Substandard housing perhaps best illustrates the conditions experienced by the rural elderly. Many of their homes lack even the most basic facilities, thus aggravating health and other problems associated with poor housing.

Fifty-four percent of the 1.2 million substandard elderly dwelling units are located in rural America.

The incidence of elderly-occupied units that lack some or all plumbing facilities is approximately five times greater in rural areas than in metropolitan areas.

Currently there are more than 670,000 substandard housing units occupied by the rural elderly. At the rate FmHA has been financing new units for the last five years, it will take 70 years to replace the units which are substandard now.

HEALTH

Rural America has widespread problems in health care. A serious shortage of qualified health personnel, a scarcity of primary health care services, and a range of other problems including inadequate transportation have resulted in a standard of health among the rural elderly that is deplorable.

Estimates indicate that over 50 percent of the rural aged suffer from continuing poor health, with 87 percent of these suffering from some form of chronic illness and 36 percent of these compelled to restrict their activities.

Only 25 percent of the total funds allocated for health services go to rural areas even though nearly 60 percent of all medically underserved persons reside there.

TRANSPORTATION

In many rural counties there is no public transportation system to meet the needs of its elderly residents. For many of these residents the availability of another mode of transportation other than the private car often means the difference between obtaining necessary services or simply going without.

About 70 percent of the rural poor or near-poor are without adequate transportation.

Nearly half of the rural elderly are not even licensed to drive.

Almost half of persons over 65 living in rural areas have no automobiles.

Of the total funds allocated under the National Mass Transportation Act four years ago, only 4½ percent was allocated to meet the transportation needs in rural areas.

CONCLUSION

Old people have a lot of problems which become problems for all of us who care. This country does not do a very good job on the problems of any of the elderly—but we do far less for those in small towns and rural areas. Federal and state agencies assigned the responsibility for serving the elderly are not giving equity to almost half of our nation's elderly population, and must be required to do so.

Isn't it time somebody spoke up for the rural elderly? We do, and we need your help.

Rural America is a nonprofit membership organization set up to give people in rural areas a stronger voice in Washington. Our membership is made up of concerned and active people who share a common sense of the richness, vitality, and diversity of rural America; people who recognize the economic and social needs of rural people; and people who have come to the belief that, collectively, we can significantly improve the lives of rural Americans—and all citizens.

Rural America has raised the needs of the rural elderly with Congress and with the executive agencies administering programs designed to assist the elderly, while at the same time working with community leaders involved in aging issues. Recently, for example, we presented testimony before Congress on the extension of the Older Americans Act in which we offered specific recommendations—such as new funding for construction of senior centers in rural areas and a more equitable allocation formula—to make the Act more responsive to the needs of the rural elderly.

We are convinced that, through an organized effort, much can be accomplished for the rural elderly. We believe that rural America, working through its membership, can make a substantial contribution in the formulation and implementation of programs and policies affecting the rural elderly. To this end, we have established the Rural Elderly Council, a broad coalition of individuals and organizations interested in working on these issues. This advocacy network will serve to monitor legislative and administrative developments, to publicize current issues and developments, and to exchange pertinent information on aging matters. It will also be used as a means of mobilizing collective resources on matters critical to the rural elderly.

But in order for this to be successful, we will need your help. We urge you to become a member of rural America, and of the Rural Elderly Council. Moreover, we need your assistance in contacting others who share your concerns and would be interested in receiving information about rural America. We are especially interested in contacting people active at the local level who can help provide the guidance and leadership the Council will need if it is to be effective.

Complete the form on the reverse side and send it to us today. Speak up for the rural elderly.

NOTES

All estimates are based on 1977 estimates of the population 60 plus and 1970 census counts for metro and nonmetro population.

Current factor: Current formula without 1973 hold-harmless. Each State receives an amount proportional to its population 60 plus, with a minimum of ½ of 1 percent of appropriation. The column totals to 99 percent since 4 territories each receive a minimum of ¼ of 1 percent.

Proposed factor: Proposed factor without 1978 hold-harmless. Each State's allocation is proportionate to its 60 plus population weighted by 100 percent plus ½ of that percentage of that population living in nonmetro areas.

Percent over current factor: The percent by which the proposed factor exceeds the current factor.

Fiscal year 1973 allocation: State allocation in fiscal year 1973 for title III, area planning and social services.

Fiscal year 1978 allocation: State allocation in fiscal year 1978 for title III, area planning and social services.

Current factor fiscal year 1978 plus 20 percent: Current formula with 1973 hold-harmless at an assumed appropriation level 21 percent above fiscal year 1978.

Proposed factory fiscal year 1978 plus 20 percent: Proposed formula with 1978 hold-harmless at an assumed appropriation level 21 percent above fiscal year 1978.

Mr. DOMENICI. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to this amendment. I think it is perhaps the most important amendment that will be offered to this bill today. I think it goes to not only the guts of the bill, but, if adopted, may well set a precedent which will apply to a whole host of subsequent legislation wherein a formula may be involved.

I think the motives of the Senator from New Mexico in offering it are very sincere and direct. He is an admirable person. Perhaps if I represented his State I might view it from his context. In fact, I am told that under the Domenici formula, even my State would benefit.

But I am opposed to the Domenici amendment, Mr. President, because it is wrong. It is just dead wrong.

We have had a very simple formula in this bill for the 13 years it has been on the statute books, a formula that everybody in the country can understand, that is fair and equitable across the board. It says, count the number of people in your State 60 years of age and older and that is how the moneys are allocated.

Since 1965 to 1978, 13 years, that has been the formula. Now it is suggested that we scrap that and we build in a rural bias.

I have a large rural area in my State. Based on the computer printout, Missouri would make a few dollars under the Domenici amendment.

But, Mr. President, it is a very expensive proposition to live in a city, not just New York City, or Providence, or Saint Louis, or Kansas City, cities of even more modest size. To see there is to be built in an inherent bias, a tilt, in formula in favor of rural America to the detriment of urban America, I think is to belie the fact of where the great social needs of this country exist today and, Mr. President, will exist for many years to come into the future.

I think at this time when we know that in urban America there is enormous unemployment, incipient bankruptcy in certain cities in the country, great civil unrest, a recession, et cetera, to say at this time, knowing the colossal needs that obtain and exist in urban America, that after 13 years of a neutral formula, an absolutely neutral formula that does not tilt urban or rural and says count everybody 60 years of age and older, that is how the money will be allocated, to scrap that neutral, even-handed formula, a formula with 13 years of precedent, to say now that in this bill we are going to consciously and by design enact a rural bias in this formula and set a precedent thereby for subsequent legislation, Mr. President, I think would be a very serious mistake.

Mr. JAVITS. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. I ask the Senator to yield only for one reason. That is because there is a central fact which has not yet been mentioned. The central fact is that whereas the formula of the older Americans program for years has been based upon the number of people over 60 in a given State, compared to all the people in the United States over 60, the Domenici formula is based not upon age, it is based only upon those who live in rural areas.

He has not got aged in it, though he argues that the elderly cost more to look after in rural areas. But there is no provision respecting elderly in this new formula.

It just says rural people, compared to all the rural people in the United States—they can be 2 years of age.

It simply is a way to dip into the grab bag and take more money.

Now, I offered, I might say to my colleague and to Senator DOMENICI, and the Senator did not join in this, Senator EAGLETON or Senator CHAFEE, I did this myself, and I said, "If you need more money, let's set up a fund of money in which the commissioner can take care of any State where the costs are excess to normal costs."

But my colleague would not have that. So, for this purpose, which does not need this in order to serve it, we are going to prostitute—that is what we are doing—a decent and honorable formula which has worked for 13 years.

That is why I am opposing it just like Senator EAGLETON.

Mr. DURKIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JAVITS. Senator EAGLETON has the floor.

Mr. EAGLETON. I am glad to yield to my colleague from New Hampshire.

Mr. DURKIN. I thank the Senator from Missouri.

When we were in a similar position with respect to the public works funding, there were some problems between the rural areas and the metropolitan areas.

Is the Senator from New York and the Senator from Missouri disposed to follow the pattern set in the public works EDA money and increase the minimum formula from one-half of 1 percent to three-quarters of 1 percent?

Did I detect that in the dialog?

Mr. EAGLETON. I made no mention of the EDA formula. Perhaps my colleague from New York would want to respond.

Mr. JAVITS. Would the Senator restate that?

Mr. DURKIN. As the Senator from New York, I am sure, remembers, the Senator from New York and I and others collaborated here on the Senate floor when we had reached an impasse on the funding formula for the EDA public works money. It was resolved by increasing the formula, the minimum funding formula, from one-half of 1 percent to three-quarters of 1 percent.

I wonder if the same compromise might not be mentioned this afternoon?

Mr. JAVITS. I am going to offer a compromise. The compromise is that we take $5 million, which is roughly one-half of 1 percent of the aggregate appropriation, and make it available to the commission to pay to any State which has excess costs because the elderly live in rural areas.

I am perfectly willing to pay the bill. That is why I used a strong word. If Senator DOMENICI is offended, I apologize.

But I used the strong word because why take this formula which has worked so well and completely distort it without any relation to the aged when what he wants can be done perfectly properly. I agree with the Senator, whether we do it by taking $5 million, which, by the way, is roughly the same amount of money which is involved in his amendment, or whether we do it by his amendment which, if we take it, will simply distort the whole reason for dealing with the elderly.

It has no relation to the elderly. It just deals with the rural population.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. Of course.

Mr. DOMENICI. Was the Senator from Missouri finished?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say, it is rare that I would disagree with the good Senator from New York, however, I really believe, the technical language in this amendment indicates we are considering as the base rural people aged 60 or older. Let me emphasize that there is no attempt in this amendment to base our formula on the rural population at large, but rather, the rural population over 60.

Mr. President, it is my undestanding that the present formula was first enacted in 1973; thus, we are only about 5 years from that point in time. Prior to that this was such a small program it worked more on a grant basis than a formula.

Second, there was a tremendous argument in 1972–73 about this formula, which has now become so nearly perfect that we should not look at it. There was a deep split in the committee over the funding formula. We have not looked at this issue for 5 years. Now we find that it costs more to give exactly the same thing to a senior citizen in a small town in Maine or New Mexico or Missouri as it does in a major metroloplitan area.

Let us not about what is fair on the basis of what we did 5 years ago is going to be fair forever. That to change that formula is going to perpetrate some kind of prostitution on somebody. If it was not working to begin with, we have a chance to look at it. If it was working from the first, we can defeat the Domenici amendment.

The purpose of this bill is to provide services, to senior citizens; and the fair way is the equitable way. The equitable way is to recognize that there is one group of senior citizens in the United States who are being penalized in every way, and it is the rural senior citizens.

Do we know of any program of our national Government that is doing as much in terms of resources to help rural America as we are going to help metropolitan America?

Do we see any new bills since the passage of the legislation which gave the Department of Agriculture all kinds of glorious goals for rural America? What new bills have we seen to help them? They are all for urban Americans, while at the same time rural senior citizens are going without services, without transportation, and so forth because we cannot even afford to deliver it.

Housing is better in the cities than in the rural areas. Social services are better in the cities than in the rural areas. The nutritional services are better in the cities than in the rural areas.

How can it be in absolute fairness that everyone is being treated alike, on a per capita basis, under this bill?

I do not believe my amendment is unfair. We are being fair. I do not believe there is anything sacrosanct about a 5-year formula. If it is not working right, let us change it, and my amendment would change it.

In fact, most States would get a substantial increase—not quite as much as they would on straight per capita formula, but a substantial increase if appropriations were to rise by 20 percent. The State of New York would get a substantial increase, but not quite as much as it would get under the present formula. For those who wonder what it will do to New Mexico, we do not get any more money under the new formula because we receive the minimum allotment to which we are entitled.

It appears to me that as rural elderly populations grow we should provide for it now and give them fair treatment in the formula. That is what this amendment will do. It is trying to be fair, rather than continue an unfair formula for another 2 years.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I will be brief.

The Older Americans Act was passed in 1965. Prior to 1973, there was an allocation made to the States, and the allocation was made on a per capita basis—60 years and older.

The pattern has been the same since 1965: per capita, 60 and older. I do not have all the demographics or the statistics readily at my disposal, but I submit this, and I think common sense will bear it out: If we were to compare the cost of running a nutrition site in a section of the city of St. Louis with the cost of operating that nutrition site in a small city such as Maryville, Mo., I think the facts would bear out that the cost of operating that nutrition site is much more expensive per person in the urban setting than in the rural setting. The cost of everything is more expensive in a city vis-a-vis a rural area.

Although certain transportation costs might be higher in rural America, I think that, on balance, the high cost of operation of a nutrition center in an urban area would about offset what transportation costs there might be in a rural transportation program. That is why I think the formula should be even-handed, and that is why the formula is, and that is why I would not change it.

I cannot think of a more bizarre time to start cranking into Federal formulas a conscious bias in favor of rural America vis-a-vis urban America, when we know that many cities in this country are fighting desperately just to stay alive fiscally, including some of the very biggest. It could only be interpreted as a slap in the face, to urban America, to say the least, that after a formula has been operating basically the same as it has for 13 years—it was a per capita formula prior to 1973—and now has been operating on an even-handed basis, we are going to say to urban America, "We think you are getting too much."

We know it is expensive to live in big cities, that there are problems of poverty, and so forth; but if we are going to take money from urban America and sprinkle it around in rural America, I think it would be a mistake.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I support the position of the Senator from Missouri.

So far as my State is concerned, it would not be affected under this formula, anyway.

I do see great dangers in bringing a new formula into effect in this program. How are we going to do it? Are we going to do it as suggested by the Senator from New Mexico, based on rural population? Should we do it based on the cost of living in a State? Under that, it seems to me we could have all kinds of varied programs. One State could get more because it is more expensive to live there. I am surprised that somebody from Alaska does not say that they should get much more than the formula provides, because everybody knows it is far more expensive to live in Alaska.

It seems to me that there are great dangers and difficulties in varying from the formula which has worked with some success for these many years. So I oppose the amendment by the Senator from New Mexico, artful though it may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I join the Senator from New Mexico in supporting this amendment.

This amendment, by adding a rural weight to the allocation formula, would allow the millions of elderly persons in rural areas to receive the same level of services now available to senior citizens in urban areas. It is a matter of equity, and will benefit rural elderly in North Carolina and the Nation.

In rural areas, having smaller projects serving larger geographical areas, the cost of operation is much greater than it is in urban areas per person served. The cost of support services, such as transportation, planning, administration, and outreach efforts, are all much higher in rural areas.

At the present time, these additional support costs can only be met by reducing the amount and quality of services available to the elderly. Thus, the present practice of allocating funds simply on the basis of the number of elderly in a given State amounts to discrimination against millions of elderly only because they live in rural areas.

An amendment being offered to this bill by Senator CHURCH highlights the problem. His amendment limits any nutrition project's expenditures for support services, in this case primarily transportation, to 20 percent of the total, but allows the 20 percent ceiling to be waived up to a maximum of 50 percent in areas with unusually high support costs. Senator CHURCH, who as chairman of the Special Committee on Aging is one of the Senate's leading experts in these matters, is giving clear recognition to the fact that some areas in this country must deal with higher transportation costs in their nutrition projects. It seems clear to me that these areas Senator CHURCH is concerned about are rural areas. Now, in these rural areas, simple equity would demand that rural nutrition projects should not have to pay for their extra transportation costs by taking meals away from needy elderly. And this is what is happening now.

The purpose of this amendment is not to take away required services in urban areas, but only to allow rural elderly to receive the same level of services. In order to prevent the reduction of existing services in urban areas, rural areas will only be allowed to bring their services to an equal level at a gradual rate over the next several years. The existing injustice will only slowly be corrected, because we do not want to make any elderly, anywhere in the country, suffer.

Mr. President, I do not think anyone in this body can say that the Senate has made a raid on the urban areas of this country. Many times in the Senate we have voted to shore up the urban areas of this country. I believe this amendment will do what is fair and equitable for the rural people.

This amendment has been carefully constructed to bring about equality in services, and it should be adopted.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? If no one yields time, the time will run equally against both sides.

Mr. CHAFEE. Who wants time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 17 minutes remaining, and the Senator from Missouri has 19 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield back his time? I will yield mine back. I understand the Senator from New York will then offer a substitute.

Is that correct?

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. I have an amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. He is prepared to yield back his time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators yield back their time.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1486

(Purpose: Allows up to $500,000 for extra costs of financing elderly in rural areas)

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the Senator's amendment is now in order.

The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1486.

At the end of paragraph 4 of Domenici amendment add the following:

"(d) Notwithstanding the foregoing the Commissioner may reallot an amount no greater than up to one-half of one percentum of the amount appropriated pursuant to section 303 of this title for the purpose of making additional payments to any State to meet the excess costs, over and above those costs estimated by the Commissioner for non-rural areas, of providing services under this title to older Americans located in rural areas."

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I modify the amendment to include the figure of "5 million" or one-half of 1 percent whichever is higher, and I send the corrected amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

At the end of paragraph 4 of Domenici amendment add the following:

"(d) Notwithstanding the foregoing the Commissioner may reallot an amount no greater than up to one-half of one percentum of $5 million whichever is greater of the amount appropriated pursuant to section 303 of this title for the purpose of making additional payments to any State to meet the excess costs, over and above those costs estimated by the Commissioner for non-rural areas, of providing services under this title to older Americans located in rural areas."

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if I may be recognized, I am only seeking to prove to the Senate that I am practicing what I preach. One-half of 1 percent will be taken away from many States and given to other States, and we have this classic business always of 22 States will benefit, 14 will lose, and 12 will be unaffected, and there we go—equity, principle, forget it—and that is what we are contending against, both myself and the managers of the bill.

If it costs more money to administer the same equal nondiscriminatory services to residents of rural areas, who are elderly and proper beneficiaries, here is roughly the same amount of money to do it, except that if it costs very much more in South Dakota and costs nothing more in some other State, for example, Georgia, then the Commissioner will give the money to South Dakota that it needs and to Georgia that it needs and not just this across-the-board allocation of one-half of 1 percent based strictly upon rural population having no relation to the elderly and no relation to costs.

In short, there is no element of bad faith here. We want the rural elderly to fare as well as the city elderly, but in order to do that it is not necessary to take this formula and destroy it, as I have just demonstrated by this substitute, which I will vote for gladly and happily. I have no desire whatever to do anything else.

Let us see how this actually works. Take my State, which I know a lot about. We have 9 percent of the rural population of the country. That is a lot of people. But, nonetheless, under this formula of Senator DOMENICI my State will be cut 10 percent of what it would otherwise get. Instead of getting $16 million it would get $14.5 million.

Let us take another look. We heard that these were small sums that did not amount to much. Alabama instead of getting $1,179,000 would get $2,438,000, about $1.3 million more.

Mr. PERCY. What about Illinois?

Mr. JAVITS. The Senator asked me to give the figure on Illinois. Illinois would get $500,000 less under this particular formula. Iowa would get $400,000 more. These are appreciable sums. It is completely arbitrary and has no relationship whatever either to elderly or to costs, and at least what I am offering has a relationship both to elderly and to costs and it is about the same amount of money.

We totaled it all up, and it is about $5 million that would be taken away from some States and given to others. The fund we are giving the Commissioner to pay actual costs—if they are greater he will pay them—is $5 million.

I respectfully submit I offered this amendment—by the way, I suggested it to my friend and colleague—and I really hope he will take it because it represents what I consider to be an honorable resolution of a problem which he has raised and which I am not contesting.

All that I say is at least relate it to the elderly and relate it to costs, and I hope very much the Senate will adopt this amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, is it fair for me to assume that I have the time in opposition to the amendment to my amendment?

Mr. CHAFEE. Good.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask the Senator from New York to explain this to me again. First of all, I truly believe that is the same chart that he was reading in terms of who gets what under my proposed formula. I hope that the distinguished Senator from New York believes me that this formula is based upon the percentage of 60-plus in rural areas—not just the rural population.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will cease for a moment, the Senator is in opposition to the amendment. He does not have control of the time. The manager of the bill does have control over the time, unless he favors the amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, how much time do we have on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 15 minutes in opposition, and in this case if the managers of the bill oppose the amendment or are in favor of the amendment, they may yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may control the opposition time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is that agreeable?

Mr. CHAFEE. That is agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York, if he will tell us again what his fund will do? Will it negate my new formula and set up a new fund that will be used by the Secretary?

Mr. JAVITS. It will not deal with the Senator's formula at all. It does not negate it or accept it. It is not included in the bill. It sets up one-half of one percent of this particular appropriation, or $5 million, whichever is more, for the purpose of paying excess costs, that is, over and above what it costs to service nonrural area elderly for any place in any State where those excess costs are incurred.

Mr. DOMENICI. So if the Senate adopts the Senator's amendment because of it, notwithstanding the nature of it, my amendment is defeated.

Mr. JAVITS. The Senator's amendment is adopted with that amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. So that it is a nullity.

Mr. JAVITS. No. I do not think it is a nullity. We would have accomplished $5 million for the Senator's purpose.

Mr. DOMENICI. I understand.

Mr. JAVITS. It is not a nullity at all.

Mr. DOMENICI. But if we look at the State of Alabama or Idaho or Indiana, where I have indicated that these States would receive more money under my proposed formula that basically is not going to be the case with what Senator JAVITS is proposing. Instead Senator JAVITS would allow rural States to share $5 million or one-half of 1 percent which is greater.

Mr. JAVITS. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. First of all, I construe that to mean that a fair and equitable readjustment of the formula is not going to take place this year but rather that the Javits approach of setting up this fund will be the case. I say, in all deference to my good friend from New York, that I truly do not believe this will do the job. First of all, I do not believe it is only a question of increased administrative costs. I believe the programs themselves cost more. I believe it costs more for rural transportation than it does for transportation in large urban areas, and I believe on a per capita basis, we have evidence that, it costs 150 percent more for transportation in rural areas than in the major cities.

With reference to nutrition, I believe it costs more to try to furnish, whether it is meals on wheels or in the little congregate settings of rural America. It costs more per capita there than it does in the cities.

My formula would give an additional bonus for that cost. Senator JAVITS' amendment in lieu of mine will set up a national block of not less than $5 million or one-half of 1 percent, whichever is greater, to be used by the Secretary if the rural programs cost more to administer than they do in the cities.

I hope the Senate will defeat the Javits amendment and then will express itself on whether or not it is now time to change the formula for the rural elderly of America.

I do not agree with the Senator from Missouri in terms of the timing. I think this is exactly the time to do it. We do not have very many programs trying to help the rural areas of this country, especially the elderly, and this is not appropriate. It is time to give recognition to the needs of furnishing services to the rural elderly, and develop a policy to reflect this.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute. All I want to do is have the Senate understand what I am doing. I did not confine it to administrative costs. Any costs, costs of any kind, transportation, anything that goes into servicing the elderly in the rural areas like we service them in nonrural areas, exactly the same. That is what the amendment says, "over and above those costs estimated by the commissioner for nonrural areas of providing services under this title to older Americans located in rural areas."

I cannot see how you can be any plainer than that. It seems to me very honorable. It will deal with costs. Different States will have different costs. Some States may have programs which cost less to administer in rural areas, in which case under the Domenici amendment they would get a windfall.

Under this amendment they would be reimbursed for whatever it cost.

I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MELCHER). Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. First of all, I want to thank the Senator from New York for the discussions we have had about this problem and for the consideration he has given to it. However, I am sorry that in this instance we could not work out a compromise.

I do believe the Senator has tried in good faith to provide something in lieu of my proposal and that would, in the Senator's opinion, take care of the situation.

I just do not happen to think it will, but I do appreciate the Senator's consideration.

Mr. JAVITS. I reciprocate all of those sentiments.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield 2 minutes on the bill?

Mr. JAVITS. I ask unanimous consent that Senator HARRY F. BYRD, JR., may have 2 minutes.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Does the Senator have time remaining?

Mr. DOMENICI. I have time remaining in opposition to Senator JAVITS' amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island does have time on the bill which he would be free to yield.

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield 5 minutes.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I thank the Senator. I did not intend to speak at this point, but I am wondering how much longer this Senate is going to continue adding millions of dollars to this bill.

When this bill came out of the committee it already had been greatly—the sum had been greatly—increased over last year.

The bill as it now stands before the Senate provides for a 47-percent increase in funding authorizations over the current year.

The bill as it now stands, without adding Senator JAVITS' amendment, is a whopping 74 percent over the current year's appropriations. How are we going to get this spending under control when we keep on adding these vast sums to these authorization bills? I think the time has come to call a halt.

I supported the Older Americans Act, and I supported the 1972 legislation providing nutritional services for the elderly. I supported the amendments of 1973 and 1975. I think the bill reported from the committee and that is now before the Senate further improves the Older Americans Act.

I favor the Older Americans Act. But I cannot vote to increase in 1 year the authorization by 47 percent and to increase the authorization to a point where it is now, even now, 74 percent greater than the appropriations for the current year.

So I am going to have to vote against this legislation. I am going to vote against the amendment of the Senator from New York because I am not willing to take a bill that is already inflated, already bloated, and add more money to it.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Sure.

Mr. JAVITS. My amendment and Senator DOMENICI's amendment do not add one penny to the bill. It simply reallocates the money which is already provided.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I understood the Senator from New York to say it increased it by $5 million.

Mr. JAVITS. It does not. It is limited to an expanditure of $5 million.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I want to apologize to the Senator.

Mr. JAVITS. It is within the context of the bill. Whatever the Senator does is fine. I do not want him to misunderstand me.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am delighted that the Senator from New York corrected the Senator from Virginia. I understood him to say the proposal of the Senator from New York would add $5 million to the bill.

Mr. JAVITS. It would not. Neither would Senator DOMENICI's add——

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I know Senator DOMENICI's would not, but I was not sure of the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. It would not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield back the time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York, as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. HART), and the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON) would vote "nay."

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 70, as folows:

So Mr. JAVITS' amendment (No. UP 1486) was rejected.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I think we are moving along more expeditiously. It is my understanding——

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, may we have order?

Mr. EAGLETON (continuing). That Senator BIDEN has an amendment that may be disposed of briefly. We have to conclude on Senator DOMENICI's amendment. I do not know if Senator DOLE's amendment will be pressed to a vote. I think we are moving rather expeditiously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator concur on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. EAGLETON. I would suggest we voice vote the Domenici amendment and then move on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. EAGLETON. I would suggest we voice vote the Domenici amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May we have order in the Senate?

The yeas and nays on the Senator's amendment have been ordered. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent to vitiate the order?

Mr. EAGLETON. I so ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1485, AS MODIFIED

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I send to the desk a modification of my amendment which will take care of the point raised by the Senator from New York. This modification clearly indicates that the rural population of 60 or over was the population to be considered. On page 2, line 4, I added four words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent——

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to modify my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JAVITS. Reserving the right to object, I think the Senator is being very honest with the Senate. I think the Senators who voted for it voted on that assumption. I think the Senator is very correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the amendment is so modified.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 83, line 25, beginning with the word "as" strike out through "States" on page 84, line 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "as the product of the population aged 60 or over in such State and the allotment percentage of that State bears to the sum of the corresponding products in all States".

On page 84, lines 10 and 11, strike out "ending June 30, 1973" and insert in lieu thereof "1978".

On page 84, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following new paragraph:

"(2) (A) The allotment percentage of each State shall be 100 per centum plus one-half of that per centum of the population of the State aged 60 or over, which resides in rural areas in that State.

"(B) For the purpose of this paragraph, the term 'rural area' means any area not included in a standard metropolitan statistical area as established by the Office of Management and Budget.

On page 84, line 16, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)".

On page 89, line 18 after the period, insert the following: "The State is encouraged in carrying out the requirement of clause (1) of this subsection to include the area covered by the appropriate economic development district involved in any planning and service area designated under that clause, and to include all portions of an Indian reservation within a single planning and service area, if feasible.".

On page 92, line 19, insert "(A)" after "(4)".

On page 92, line 22 after the semicolon, insert "and".

On page 92, between lines 22 and 23, insert the following new subparagraph:

"(B) provide that the State agency will establish outreach activities designed to assure that needy elderly individuals in rural areas are better served by programs assisted under the plan;".

On page 123, line 15, strike out "as paragraphs (6) and (7)" and insert in lieu thereof "as paragraphs (7) and (8)".

On page 123, line 16, strike out "paragraph" and insert in lieu thereof "paragraphs".

On page 123, line 21, strike out the end quote, and the period.

On page 123, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

"'(6) to assist in paying the costs, in whole or in part, of special courses of training designed to meet the needs of service providers in rural areas,' ".

On page 126, line 7, strike out "or".

On page 126, between lines 17 and 18, insert the following:

"'(7) meet the special needs of older individuals residing in rural areas;' "

On page 126, line 18, strike out "(7)" and insert in lieu thereof "(8)".

On page 127, line 15, strike out "(8)" and insert in lieu thereof "(9)".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, as modified.

Mr. EAGLETON. The yeas and nays have been vitiated, have they not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was no objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr DOMENICI. I reserved the right and the Chair did not rule after my reservation. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I ask if there is objection. If there is objection, let the Chair hear it.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, as modified.

The amendment (No. UP 1405), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which my amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1487

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I send an unprinted amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware proposes an unprinted amendment No. 1487.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

To delete section 306, paragraph (a), subsection 2 which requires each area agency an agency to "provide assurances that at least 50 per centum of the amount allotted to the planning and service area will be expended on the delivery of (A) services associated with access to services (transportation, outreach, and information and referral), (B) in-home services (homemaker and home health aide, visiting and telephone reassurance and chore-maintenance) and (C) legal services, and that some funds will be expended for each such category of services;".

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I will not take more than 5 minutes. I do not expect the managers of the bill will require more than 5 minutes.

The amendment I have offered, Mr. President, will delete from the bill the provision that would require 50 percent of the money to be targeted in the block grant program. Presently the way in which the Older Americans Act works is that there is no requirement that the money be spent in any particular way, but the new provision in this bill would require that 50 percent of the dollars be targeted into three particular areas. I have a number of concerns generated as a consequence of that. I might add, to the best of my knowledge, the House bill does not have such a 50 percent provision in it.

First of all, if the managers of the bill have a moment, we may be able to clear up some of this without having a record vote. I should like to ask the managers of the bill a question.

One of the concerns that I have is that this 50 percent provision would tend to give less money to senior citizen centers in my State and other States than presently they would get—maybe not in absolute dollars, but my concern is that by having a 50 percent provision written in, it takes away a considerable amount of flexibility that presently exists within the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend for a moment? It is almost impossible for the Chair to hear the Senator. I think that is true of the other Senators. We shall make better progress if we listen to the explanation of the amendment so that we can reach a conclusion on it quickly.

Mr. BIDEN. To reiterate, Mr. President, my concern is that senior citizen centers will have less money to operate their facilities. I believe that the senior citizen centers are the most useful and most versatile element within this act. They tend to be the providers of care and service for the senior citizens. I am concerned that, by requiring that 50 percent of the money in this bill be spent as a consequence of the direction required in the bill, they will lose flexibility and, in the long run, will end up with fewer dollars with which to operate senior citizen centers.

I wonder whether the manager of the bill could respond to my criticism of both lack of flexibility and a diminishment in the amount of money that would be available to senior citizen centers.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, under the bill, in title III, Social Services, $467 million would be authorized. Of that $467 million, 50 percent of it—roughly $233 million—would be targeted for services associated with access in-home services, and legal services, which were added on by Senator KENNEDY. That would leave the other $233 million to do a wide-range of other permissible things, including senior citizen centers.

Under title V of the existing law, $40 million nationwide was appropriated for senior centers last year, so there is considerably more than ample money in that $233 million to encompass the current $40 million figure for senior centers.

Let me explain, for one moment, why we went into this target business. As we were evaluating the effectiveness of the Older Americans Act in recent years, trying to plan ahead for the future, we found that we were doing some things with a little money here and a little money there, a dab here, and so on and so forth. We attempted in this bill to say, "Look, you can do a host of things and let the local people decide what ought to be done. If they need the senior center, fine, let them have it, but in certain priority areas, a substantial effort ought to be made, rather than just a dutiful or a cosmetic one."

Originally, we selected nutrition, transportation and in-home services, in-home services being the particular priority of Mr. Benedict, the new Commissioner on Aging. We then moved nutrition back to its separate authorization, because people wanted it to have a separate focus, it being the most popular of all the older Americans program.

As we moved on, Senator KENNEDY suggested that legal services be made one of the priority items. He prevailed on that in committee.

So senior citizen centers will be permitted. Indeed, there will be an abundant amount of money to take care of them, well beyond the $40 million currently appropriated, because there is still half of that whole title III, half of $467 million, available for a wide range of services, including senior centers. So unless I miss my guess very dramatically, more than $40 million will be spent next year on senior centers.

Mr. BIDEN. The purpose of consolidating the titles, I presume, was to provide more flexibility. Unless I am mistaken in that.

Mr. EAGLETON. The consolidation was intended to provide better coordination. The targeting provision was to say to a local area, "Here are some needs, focus some attention on those." The testimony was almost unanimous that transportation was one of the great unmet needs. In-home services is also an area of great need. We have had some debate on that today because meals on wheels is a type of in-home service. It is without a question one of the great unmet needs.

We tried to focus on some of the major areas of concern, but we left half the social services funds open and unencumbered for any discretionary use, including senior centers, that the local people involved with aging people would deem fruitful.

Mr. BIDEN. In my State, the single most worthwhile, in my opinion, and most popular element of the entire program of aiding senior citizens is the senior citizen centers. It is not so much that people are not able to get to these centers—at least in my State. The problem is that once the urban poor get to the centers, there are not enough services at the centers that are able to be provided for them. My concern with this targeting provision has been—and I acknowledge that I am not sure I am right, and it has been partially answered—my concern is that we burden States by requiring them to spend 50 percent of the dollars available to them on in-home, transportation, and legal services, when, at least in my State, that is not the big problem. Granted, we could spend a great deal more money in every category and use it fairly well with regard to older Americans. But the fact of the matter is that with the limited dollars we have, I was very concerned that, No. 1, senior citizen centers not have less money but more money; No. 2, that flexibility be available to them; and No. 3, that we do not penalize that independent branch, so to speak, the private sector, which, at least in my State, provides an incredible service.

They are much more desired by the senior citizens than the directly State-related programs that are available. They like going in their neighborhoods, they like being with people of their own choice, they like gathering at the senior centers. They like having that as a focus of their life.

Mr. EAGLETON. We do not want to penalize the private sector at all on senior centers. We have some in Missouri and we think they have been very, very useful. I would also point out to my colleagues that there is a waiver authority in the bill. Any State, any area agency on aging can apply for a waiver as to any of the provisions of the bill insofar as unusual circumstances or compelling circumstances in that locale. The waiver would say, "Look, our transportation program is pretty good because of X, Y, and Z, and our legal services are very good because we have a very aggressive bar association and it is being well responded to; our big need in a certain county in Delaware is that we desperately need a senior center." I think they could still get funded out of the unencumbered portion of the funds in the bill in the first place, but if that were not available for some reason I cannot foresee, they can get a waiver from the targeting requirement of the title.

Mr. BIDEN. And they could get into any area that the dispensing agency felt was most necessary?

Mr. EAGLETON. That is right. Absolutely.

Mr. BIDEN. In light of that, Mr. President, and not wanting to take more of the Senate's time, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATSUNAGA). The Senator has a right to withdraw his amendment.

The amendment was withdrawn.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1488

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I send to the desk two related amendments and ask unanimous consent that these two amendments be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The amendments will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1488.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 124, line 25, add a new sentence:

"The Commissioner shall give special consideration to the funding of rural Area Agencies on Aging to conduct model projects devoted to the special needs of the rural elderly. Such needs shall include but not be limited to alternative health care delivery systems, advocacy/outreach programs, and transportation systems.

On page 140, line 4.

Delete: a.

Add: The Federal or a.

Will read: including national organizations, agencies of the Federal or a State government . . .

On page 144, line 4, add a new subparagraph (Q)

Paragraph (Q) will read:

"(Q) The Secretary is authorized to join with the Environmental Protection Agency in the establishment of a Senior Environmental Employment Corps, and shall establish, issue, and amend such regulations as may be necessary to effectively carry out such a program."

On page 144, line 14, add a new subparagraph (4).

Subparagraph (4) will read:

"(4) Tht Secretary is authorized to enter into a formal agreement with the Environmental Protection Agency to establish a Senior Environmental Employment Corps."

On page 149, line 11, after 1975, add the following:

The Secretary may reserve such sums as may be necessary for the Senior Environmental Employment Corps.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I shall need only 3 or 4 minutes to discuss my amendment.

Mr. President, today we are considering legislation in which I have a deep interest. I have discussed the Older Americans Act in this Chamber before, and cannot over-emphasize the importance of this bill to the people of Iowa.

As you may know, the State of Iowa has the third highest percentage of senior citizens of all other States in this Nation. The programs authorized by the act are vital to the livelihoods of many elderly citizens, and therefore demand the critical consideration of this body.

First, the amendment which will target model projects moneys to be used for demonstration projects to be developed by rural area agencies on aging. Historically, no model projects funds have been used for projects in rural areas. Because of limited staffs and small administrative budgets, rural area agencies on aging simply cannot compete with large national and regional organizations or with urban area agencies with large support staffs in competitive grant writing. Much of the model projects moneys goes to fund higher education institutions to study aging problems. It is clear to me that we should invest some of this money in providing services in the areas of primary and continuing needs already identified. As was said to me by Mr. G. Richard Ambrosious, executive director of the Iowa Lakes Area Agency on Aging, "we could literally be studying our elderly to death."

It is inexcusable that no model projects money has gone to rural areas. According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, 65 percent of this Nation's counties fall into the nonmetropolitan classification. As we have learned before, the cost of delivering services in rural areas is often higher than in urban areas because of the problem of accessibility to services. It is clear that there is a real need to target model projects moneys to rural areas.

I propose that the Commissioner on Aging shall give special consideration to the funding of rural area agencies on aging to conduct model projects devoted to the special needs of the rural elderly. Such needs shall include but not be limited to alternative health care delivery systems, advocacy/outreach programs, transportations systems, comprehensive planning, and administrative support.

In addition, the amendment will authorize the senior environmental employment corps. This program provides jobs for senior citizens and is currently being conducted as a demonstration project in 10 States. It is administered by the Department of HEW in cooperation with the Environmental Protection Agency. I am pleased to say the House included this program in the bill which they passed.

I hope that the sponsors of the bill can accept this amendment. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, we have considered the Clark amendment. We think it is a very worthy contribution to the bill.

I am prepared to accept the amendment and yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PAUL G. HATFIELD). All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment (UP 1488) was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1489

(Purpose: To encourage volunteer meals on wheels programs to continue)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an unprinted amendemnt to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1489.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 101, line 17, strike out "and" and insert in lieu thereof a comma.

On page 101, line 22, before the semicolon insert a comma and the following: "and (iii) agree to accept Federal assistance under this Act only for the cost of food".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, my amendment is simple and straightforward. It is designed to preserve the volunteer support in meals on wheels programs as they are now run. My amendment would encourage voluntary groups who participate in the home delivered meals program to use, where feasible, Federal money for the cost of food alone.

S. 2850

I have long been supportive of an expanded home delivered meals program. The maintenance of an adequate level of nutrition among our elderly citizens is vital health care. We now accept that a nutritious daily diet is one of the most effective practices of preventive medicine that we know. It is only sensible that we promote good nutrition among our senior citizens.

Through the congregate meal program, we have recognized the importance of nutrition. Now, it is time to recognize that the dietary needs of the homebound are just as important. As S. 2850 is presently drafted, it encourages the area agency on aging to work through existing groups, such as meals on wheels, for the delivery of home delivered meals.

THE PROBLEM

At first reading of the bill, this concept seems harmless. Most of us would prefer seeing a local, volunteer effort take care of a problem, rather than direct the Federal Government to step in. In recent months, though, there has been growing concern that as volunteer groups accept Federal aid, they will forfeit their identity of volunteerism, and become known as just another Government program.

STAR EDITORIAL

I do not think we want to see this important program lose the special identity it now has. In last Friday's Washington Star, an editorial focused on this very issue. It made some pertinent observations concerning Government intervention or helpfulness; "that huge role can distort individual perceptions, and, thus, motivation. Despite massive good intentions, the Feds tend to suffocate motivation, and replace it with a structure that often suffocates itself."

The Star editorial voices a legitimate concern, and it is one shared by hundreds of small, local programs who now serve meals to the homebound. They worry that the availability of Federal dollars will undermine voluntary support.

THE VOLUNTEER PROGRAM

Usually operated by churches and synagogues, meals on wheels has been very successful in communities scattered across our country. The persons with whom I have talked feel that this successfulness is derived from the fact that the programs are staffed with volunteers who bring meaning and commitment to the services they provide. To finance the operation, the volunteers collect money from each recipient, based on his ability to pay. The outreach of the programs is determined by the amount of food the program can purchase.

These volunteer groups now serving meals have demonstrated their concern in helping to meet the needs of homebound citizens. It is understandable that if money becomes available to expand this nutrition service, the volunteers would like to help. Because they already have the equipment, the experience, and the volunteers to deliver the meals, it seems expedient for us to make use of the opportunities at hand. It also becomes necessary that the volunteers support be gained without sacrificing the voluntary element of meals on wheels.

CONCLUSION

Toward this end, my amendment emphasizes that where feasible, voluntary home delivered meals programs may use Federal funds for the cost of food alone. As the bill is now written, Federal money could be used to cover any cost, as long as the organization furnishes assurances that efforts will be made to maintain volunteer support, and that non-Federal funds will not be supplanted. With my amendment, emphasis is given to the use of Federal funds to go for the actual food cost. This would mean that in the future, today's volunteer groups would still be manned by volunteers, but that they would have the opportunity to increase the number of meals served. It seems to me that this amendment would safeguard the volunteer identity in a volunteer program, as well as allow for existing volunteer groups to expand their service and to provide invaluable help in serving meals to our Nation's homebound.

I would urge my colleagues to give this amendment their favorable consideration, for I think it is needed to assure that the volunteer component will be maintained in the future operation of meals on wheels.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would just like to make clear in the RECORD and hear from the sponsor of the amendment that this does not prohibit funding of voluntary programs which provide home-delivered meals for costs other than food.

In other words, if, per chance. other than the cost of food were covered, that would not prohibit the funding of that program, would it?

Mr. DOLE. That is true. In fact, the present language says it will give consideration "where feasible." We think that takes care of that possibility.

Mr. CHAFEE. That is an acceptable amendment as far as I am concerned.

Mr. EAGLETON. I think the question by the Senator from Rhode Island was a very useful one.

With that response, I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. DOLE. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment (UP No. 1489) was agreed to.

● Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President. first of all I support this legislation and commend the committee for its diligent work in behalf of our elderly citizens.

Besides extending the Older Americans Act for 2 years, the bill before us has made significant improvements in current law.

First, the bill consolidates existing programs for State and community services (title III), multipurpose senior centers (title V), and nutrition services (title VIII). This consolidation will improve administration of the act, provide greater administrative flexibility, substantially reduce the paperwork burden on State and local agencies, and expand nutrition services for the elderly at home and in congregate centers.

Further, the bill increases emphasis on in-home services, legal services, and services associated with access. And the bill authorizes a White House Conference on Aging in 1981. Increases in authorizations will insure continuation of current programs and permit significant expansion of social and nutritional services.

In short, Mr. President, this bill underscores our commitment to improving the lives and circumstances of our Nation's elderly.

Since 1965, the Older Americans Act has provided needed assistance to millions of elderly Americans. It has proven to be a popular and successful program.

This bill would improve upon the excellent groundwork we have laid in previous years.

So I support this bill enthusiastically.

Let me emphasize, Mr. President, that the bill, as reported from committee, authorizes a substantial expansion of the nutrition program. It would authorize $375 million in fiscal year 1979, an increase of $100 million from the 1978 level of $275 million.

The bill as reported would provide for the delivery of 800,000 meals each day in fiscal year 1979, an increase of 320,000 over the current program.

I would also point out that there is sufficient authorization in the committee bill to cover a major expansion of the home-delivered meals program.

I believe all of us would like to do more for our elderly citizens, particularly in the area of nutrition. Nutrition programs for the elderly in Maine have been very popular and successful.

I have visited many of the meal sites and have seen first hand the nutritional and social benefits of this program.

And I congratulate the committee which has provided for a reasonable expansion of the program.●

● Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I support S. 2850, the Older Americans Act of 1978. I am especially pleased that the bill includes several provisions which are either identical or similar to measures I advanced in my proposed Older Americans Act amendments, S. 2969.

However, there are some features in S. 2850 which I do not support. But overall, I believe the desirable provisions greatly outweigh the undesirable features. I want to stress, though, that only a few measures in the committee bill cause me concern. A House and Senate conference meeting will provide a further opportunity to improve these provisions in S. 2850.

Special tributes, it seems to me, are also in order for Senator EAGLETON, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Aging, and Senator WILLIAMS, the chairman of the Human Resources Committee, for their leadership in guiding the 1978 Older Americans Act amendments to the Senate for consideration.

In the interest of time, I would like to comment briefly on certain key features in my proposed Older Americans Act amendments, which the Human Resources Committee incorporated in S. 2850.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a listing of cosponsors of S. 2969 be included at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COSPONSORS OF S. 2969, OLDER AMERICANS ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1978

Kennedy, Chiles, Williams, Clark, Humphrey, Pell, Randolph, McIntyre, Abourezk, Brooke, Cannon, Hatfield (Oregon), Bayh, McGovern, Anderson, Riegle, Durkin, DeConcini, Burdick, Sasser, and Culver.

FEDERAL COUNCIL ON THE AGING

Mr. CHURCH. First, I am pleased that the committee bill continues the Federal Council on the Aging, which was established in 1973 to advise the President and Congress on issues affecting older Americans.

As chairman of the Senate Committee on Aging, I think that it is important for the Congress and the administration to have the input of private citizens in shaping policies influencing the lives of elderly persons.

The Federal Council on the Aging can be further strengthened by giving it independent staff to be appointed by its chairperson, instead of being dependent upon the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and specifically the Administration on Aging for staff.

My bill and the House-passed version of the Older Americans Act amendments include this provision to enable the Council to be more of an independent advocate for the elderly. I hope that this feature can also be included in the House-Senate conference agreement.

ADVOCACY

S. 2850 spells out the advocacy role for the Administration on Aging, as well as State and local offices on aging. If these units are to be effective focal points at the national, State, and local levels, they must be effective advocates, working wherever possible with other agencies on behalf of the elderly.

The Older Americans Act of 1978 would make it clear that advocacy is a primary function of local, State, and Federal offices on aging.

NURSING HOME OMBUDSMAN PROGRAM

One way to build upon this advocacy function is to strengthen nursing home ombudsman programs. The Senate bill includes authority for the State ombudsman to investigate and resolve complaints made by or on behalf of nursing home residents.

This measure is similar to my proposal but differs in one important respect: It would require a State to use at least 6 percent of its administrative allotment for this purpose.

I am concerned that this provision may dilute State administrative funds even further. A preferable approach, I believe, would be a separate authorization for the nursing home ombudsman program—along the lines in my bill and the House-passed Older Americans Act amendments.

I urge the House and Senate conferees to support this alternative.

CONSOLIDATION

The committee bill would attempt to streamline the administrative responsibilities of State and area agencies on aging by consolidating the services titles—title III Social Services, title V Senior Centers, and title VII Nutrition—into one title.

This would allow title III to have one overall administrative structure which would include one State plan on a 2-year cycle, one allotment formula based on the States' 60-plus population, one State administrative allocation, and one system of channeling all of the new title III authorizations through the State and area aging on aging network.

A 2-year planning cycle would help to streamline the Older Americans Act by reducing the administrative and paperwork burdens for State and local personnel.

The committee bill, though, has one feature which deeply concerns me. It would require that at least 50 percent of the funds allotted to planning and service areas be expended for in-home, access, and legal services. This provision, however, would remove considerable local discretion in making priority judgments about community service needs. Fortunately, this target requirement can be waived if area agencies on aging can demonstrate that they are already meeting these service needs.

I believe the approach in my bill and the House-passed Older Americans Act Amendments is preferable.

Briefly, our proposal would consolidate the service titles into one new title for administrative purposes but with separate funding authorizations for social services, congregate meals, home-delivered meals, senior centers, legal services, and the nursing home ombudsman program.

This would help to retain the separate identity of these programs, while streamlining the administration of these essential services.

Moreover, our approach would provide funding for certain vital services—such as legal and ombudsman services—which may not be as readily supported by local or State governments.

Model projects under the Older Americans Act have amply demonstrated the importance of special legal services and nursing home ombudsman programs for older Americans. We do not need any more proof that these programs work. What is needed is a means to convert them from the demonstration stage to an ongoing, permanent program.

I also urge the conference committee to adopt the approach recommended in S. 2969 and the House-passed Older American Act amendments.

DIRECT FUNDING OF INDIAN TRIBES

S. 2850 would establish a separate title to permit direct funding of nutritional and social services for Indian tribes. Direct funding is available now under limited circumstances, but this provision has never been exercised by the Commissioner.

This measure has proved to be inadequate because the existing formula provides a small amount of money—so small in fact, that Indian tribes have difficulty in funding an adequate services program.

A separate authorization would help to correct this problem by enabling the Commissioner to fund a larger scale services effort. Indian tribes have a unique relationship with tne Federal Government. Many other Federal programs—such as Indian health services, the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act, revenue sharing, and others—now provide direct funding to Indian tribes.

The committee bill recognizes this relationship and builds upon it.

LIMITED CONSTRUCTION OF SENIOR CENTERS

Another important improvement in S. 2850 is the provision to permit construction of senior centers in areas where the State agency on aging determines that there are no suitable facilities available to serve as focal points for the delivery of services.

This authority will be especially helpful in rural areas where structures may not exist for use as senior centers. However, the overall emphasis—as it is now—will continue to focus on the acquisition, alteration, and renovation of existing facilities because this will enable the funding for senior centers to have a greater impact.

SENIOR COMMUNITY SERVICE EMPLOYMENT

S. 2850 would also continue and expand the Senior Community Service Employment program. It now provides a wide range of employment opportunities for persons 55 or older, including environmental aides, home repair workers, health aides, legal aides, and others.

This program has proved to be enormously effective in enabling low-income older persons to help themselves while helping others in their communities at the same time.

Nearly 47,500 older Americans are expected to participate in the senior community service corps this year. The authorized funding in S. 2850 would permit enrollment to increase to about 64,000 positions next year and 71,000 in 1980.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON AGING

I am especially pleased that S. 2850 includes my proposal to authorize a White House Conference on Aging in 1981. Two prior conferences in 1961 and 1971 have helped to sensitize our Nation to the problems and challenges of older Americans. Both conferences paved the way for important and far-reaching legislative developments, including Medicare, Older Americans Act, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, the nutrition program for the elderly, the senior community service employment program, several social security increases, and others.

A third White House conference is needed to assure that the momentum generated by previous conferences does not falter and die. Equally important, it would provide a means to take stock of the progress in implementing the recommendations of the 1971 conference. Finally, it would provide a forum for older Americans and others to develop a long-awaited national policy on aging.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Finally, I am pleased that the committee bill includes several other features, either very similar or identical to provisions I advanced in my proposed Older Americans Act amendments, including:

A special study by the Civil Rights Commission on racial and ethnic discrimination in any federally assisted programs and activities affecting older persons.

Allowing area agencies on aging to use up to 8.5 percent of their allotments for administrative purposes.

Requiring State agencies to develop a formula for distributing Older Americans Act funding and to make it available for review and comment. Under the committee bill, the formula must take into account, to the maximum extent feasible, the best available information on the geographical distribution of older persons, the incidence of low-income individuals, and the number of minority elderly.

THE COMPELLING NEED

All Americans—whether they are young or old—have a vital stake in assuring that our commitment in aging is built upon a sound and effective strategy.

Our Nation cannot afford a half-hearted effort concerning policies affecting older Americans. Every Senator, I am sure, is aware of the graying of our population. We are reminded daily of the shift in population and the service needs of older Americans.

It may be difficult now to appropriate the dimensions and implications of these changes for present and future retirees.

Congress enacted the Older Americans Act in response to trends existing in 1965 and projected changes for the future.

Subsequent amendments have helped to update and perfect the act to meet changing conditions and developments.

Passage of S. 2850 will help to build upon these earlier efforts in shaping a comprehensive services strategy for the 1980's.

For these reasons, I urge approval of S. 2850.●

● Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, since it became law, the Older Americans Act of 1965 has served as the focus of Federal activity on behalf of the elderly. Congress continues to look to new and better approaches to provide for the needs of America's elderly and has therefore amended the act six times. As amended, this act created the Administration on Aging as well as a number of programs for the elderly. The importance of these programs cannot be overestimated since they allow elderly persons to maintain their independence and dignity. I believe the changes called for by S. 2850, the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1978, will streamline and improve these services, thereby allowing for increased participation in them, and making them more responsive to the felt needs of the Nation's elderly.

The nutrition services program is one of the most popular programs provided for under the Older Americans Act. It has been very effective in meeting the nutritional needs of the elderly as well as in providing them with an outlet through which they can enjoy social activities with other senior citizens.

I am deeply concerned that many homebound elderly persons are not receiving the attention they deserve. At present the States, upon receiving nutritional services funds, determine a percentage of that allocation to be used for home-delivered meals. It is my feeling that a separate appropriation for home-delivered meals would do much to improve the problem of meeting the nutritional needs of the elderly and in particular those who are homebound. Further, officials in Kentucky who provide aging services tell me the home-delivered meals program, along with homemaker and medical team services, is keeping people in their own homes and out of nursing homes for about half the money it would cost under medicare.

Amendment 2449 offered by Senators KENNEDY, CHURCH, MCGOVERN, and DOLE would increase the authorization for nutritional services by providing a separate authorization—$100 million for fiscal year 1979 and $125 million for fiscal year 1980—for home-delivered meals. As a cosponsor of this amendment, I feel it will go a long way toward meeting the nutritional needs of and promoting an independent lifestyle for the elderly.●

● Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the legislation we consider today, S. 2850, the Older Americans Act of 1978, involves a fundamental responsibility of American society: Affording every senior citizen the opportunity for a meaningful life, a decent place to live, and a system of personal services that affords dignity and well-being. The amendments proposed to the Older Americans Act are intended to create more effective and efficient ways of helping seniors have a better life within their families, their homes, and their communities.

The Older Americans Act, originally enacted in 1965, was significantly restructured and expanded in 1973. Through the area agencies on aging and their programs, the Older Americans Act helps focus this country's attention on the unmet, basic human needs of food, housing, transportation, and adequate health care which are not available to many senior citizens.

The act has been an element of the conscience of the Federal Government, urging it to forge a comprehensive, coordinated, and humanitarian national social policy toward its elderly citizens.

S. 2850 would extend the Older Americans Act for an additional 2 years. It would consolidate existing title III—State and community services, title V—multipurpose senior centers, and title VII—nutrition services—into a single title for more efficient administration of the Older Americans Act.

It is important to recognize the significant achievements of the congregate meal site program, as well as the delivery of meals to the homebound elderly.

Title VII, the nutrition program of the OAA currently serves 450,000 meals daily to senior citizens in a congregate meal site or a home setting. This program has demonstrated its effectiveness and should continue to expand. A flexible, viable nutrition program, including an adequately funded meals-on-wheels program, will assist elderly persons to remain in their communities and to function with independence and dignity.

S. 2850 contains two important program initiatives for the Older Americans Act which in the past have proven to be effective model and demonstration projects. One initiative authorizes area agencies on aging to enter into contracts with an exitsing legal services corporation grantee or with another service provider in the community who can competently deliver legal services to the elderly. Legal counseling by an attorney or paralegal specialist can assure a senior citizen of his or her rights and benefits. S. 2850 retains existing model project authority and authorizes the commissioner to provide funds to public and private nonprofit organizations to support legal research, and technical assistance and training to assist in developing or supporting pro bono or reduced legal fees services to the elderly. This authority is included in S. 2850 in an effort to help make the private bar aware of the special legal needs of the elderly.

A second initiative, which was supported by previously successful model projects, is a nursing home ombudsman program. S. 2850 adds a requirement that each State agency on aging establish and operate a nursing home ombudsman program. Such a system, operating effectively, can help to protect the rights of older persons living in institutions.

In addition, S. 2850 adds a new specific model project authority. The commissioner on aging is required to develop demonstration projects to determine the viability of community long term care, especially for the frail elderly. Energy and resources under the Older Americans Act must be committed to developing alternatives to needless institutionalization for the elderly.

The Older Americans Act of 1978 gives the President authority to convene a 1981 White House Conference on the Aging. Such a conference can be an ideal forum for older Americans, experts, specialists in aging, and decisionmakers to participate in the development of pertinent policies affecting the aged. Previous White House conferences on the aging helped generate ideas that were translated into laws to assist the elderly—the Older Americans Act, social security program improvements, and other major statutes. A conference in 1981 would be at an ideal time to assess our Nation's policy toward a citizenry whose average age is rising rapidly.

S. 2850 mandates a comprehensive study by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights of discrimination based on race or ethnic background in any Federal program which affects older persons. Such an effort can be most helpful in sensitizing Federal programs to increase their opportunities and services to the elderly.

The past achievements of the Older Americans Act clearly warrant that this legislation be extended. Through the amendments of S. 2850, we have addressed the most significant problems facing seniors, and we have made appropriate changes to meet those needs.

I urge my colleagues to support this vital legislation on its passage.●

● Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, today we are considering the first major revision of the Older Americans Act since 1973. The Older Americans Act, first enacted in 1965, was one of the first comprehensive pieces of Federal legislation directed to the needs of the elderly. The Older Americans Act, amended several times, now provides a wide range of services to the elderly through a network of State and area agencies on aging, senior centers, nutrition programs, and a community employment program. Today, the 566 area agencies on aging have sought to provide coordinated services to some 11 million elderly citizens—92 percent of the eligible participants for such programs. Acting as the major planning agencies for services to the elderly, these area agencies assist in coordinating such services as transportation, home health care, homemaker services, escort and shopping services, information and referral services, outreach, home repair, legal counseling, and others. These services provided for through the Older Americans Act make it possible for many of our Nation's elderly to continue to live a full and vital life.

The legislation we are considering today would extend these vital programs for another 2 years. In addition, it will consolidate the administration's many existing older Americans programs which are presently severely fragmented. Under S. 2850, existing title III, State and community services; title V, multipurpose senior centers; and title VII, nutrition services, would be placed in a single title for the purposes of more efficient management and administration. The legislation would also require targeting of at least 50 percent of each area agency's allotment on three priorities: transportation and access, in-home services, and legal services.

While I support the basic thrust of most of the provisions of S. 2850 as reported from the Human Resources Committee, I intend to support an amendment by my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, to provide for a separate authorization for the meals-on-wheels program, authorized at present under title VII of the Older Americans Act.

Nutrition programs under title VII are among the most vital and most successful of all the older Americans programs. Over 480,000 meals per day are currently being served to our Nation's elderly under title VII; 85 percent of these meals are being served in congregate or community sites; the remaining 15 percent are served to the homebound through the meals-on-wheels program. While I would not want to see a reduction of the amount we are currently spending on meals being served in congregate settings, I feel that it is increasingly important that we make every effort to reduce the need to institutionalize the elderly. A recent GAO study reveals that the Government's average monthly cost to provide older persons in-home services, including meals, ranges from $78 to $172, depending on the individual's health needs. In contrast, the study shows it costs the Government approximately $458 a month to keep the same person in an institution. With increased services made possible through a separate authorization, I feel that more of our homebound elderly may be able to avoid such institutionalization.

Mr. President, all of us in this body are aware of the "greying of America." By the year 2030, 17 percent of our population is expected to be over the age of 65. The Older Americans Act attempts to give this vital portion of our population the tools with which to achieve the health, honor and dignity to which it is entitled. It is an essential act designed to give older Americans the kind of comprehensive services that they need and, more importantly, that they deserve.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Who yields time?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield such time as the Senator may desire.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, the legislation now pending before the Senate continues several important and worthwhile programs for our senior citizens.

I support the Older Americans Act, and I supported the 1972 legislation providing nutrition services for the elderly, as well as the 1973 and 1975 amendments to the basic act.

I wish to commend the Committee on Human Resources for the excellent work it has done in further revising the basic legislation.

But I feel a 47 percent increase in funding authorization is unreasonable. It is a whopping 74 percent over the current year appropriations.

I agree with the committee that under the law as it now stands, there is excessive fragmentation of effort in Federal programs for the elderly. The consolidation in title III of S. 2850 is a much-needed improvement.

Furthermore, I think the committee is wise in providing for a 2-year authorization, as opposed to the 3-year authorization in the House-passed bill and the even longer terms proposed by some witnesses at the committee hearings. The 2-year extension certainly does not reflect any unwillingness to continue support for the programs; on the contrary, it is a recognition that frequent review by the Congress is important to their continued vitality and efficiency.

S. 2850 contains other desirable provisions, too, including greater State responsibility for financing over the long term and better coordination of effort in the community services employment programs.

Finally, I think the committee is to be commended for its imaginative suggestion that at a time when many schools are closing because of reduced enrollment, an opportunity is offered for our communities to establish centers for the elderly in these buildings no longer needed for public education.

In short, I think this legislation is altogether desirable from the point of view of policy.

Unfortunately, I cannot say the same for the level of funding which is called for in this bill.

S. 2850 authorizes more than $1.2 billion for fiscal year 1979. The increase in authorization from the current year, fiscal 1978, to next year would be $387 million, or 47 percent.

If we assume that the year-to-year inflation rate from 1978 to 1979 will be in the neighborhood of 8 percent, than this legislation is proposing an increase more than five times the inflation rate.

Furthermore, if we compare the fiscal 1979 authorization with appropriations for the current year, which are $697 million, the year-to-year increase would be a whopping 74 percent.

Such an increase is completely unreasonable. It cannot be justified at a time when the Federal Government is running deficits in excess of $50 billion a year and the cost of living is escalating at a frightening, double-digit rate.

We must keep in mind that large Federal deficits are a major cause, if not the chief cause, of inflation, and that inflation hits with particular force our senior citizens—the very person this legislation is designed to help.

The Federal Government will not serve the interests of our elderly citizens if it adds to inflation with more and more deficit spending. Inflation is a tax: a cruel and hidden tax, and it hits hardest those in the lower and middle income brackets and those who, like so many of the elderly, are on fixed incomes.

I support the policies and programs in this legislation, but I cannot support the inflationary spending which it would authorize.

Therefore, I must reluctantly vote against passage of S. 2850.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the table on page 3 of the committee report showing how Federal funding for this program has grown.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following table of appropriations under the Older Americans Act since its enactment in 1965 vividly demonstrates the large expansion of Federal funding for programs for the elderly in recent years.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House on H.R. 12255.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 12255) an act to amend the Older Americans Act of 1965 to provide for improved programs for older persons, and for other purposes.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as having been read twice and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senate will proceed immediately to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause of H.R. 12255 and to substitute therefor the next of S. 2850, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. Presdent, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate is about to vote on S. 2850, the Older Americans Act of 1978. This is a highly significant piece of legislation. I take this opportunity to thank and to congratulate Senator EAGLETON, manager of the bill and chairman of the Human Resources Committee's Subcommittee on the Aging, and to make a few remarks about S. 2850.

Senator EAGLETON has made numerous contributions to legislation affecting senior citizens. This bill is another excellent example of the careful oversight and review of Federal programs for the elderly which the Subcommittee on Aging has performed under his leadership and that of the subcommittee's ranking minority member, Senator CHAFEE. The Senate is in their debt. The public is in their debt. I commend them for their services.

After 9 days of hearings during which testimony was received from more than 60 witnesses, and after studying this and the written testimony of numerous other witnesses, the subcommittee identified fragmentation and duplication in Federal programs to assist the elderly as a serious, yet resolvable, problem. The subcommittee found, for example, that some 139 different Federal programs affecting the elderly were in existence—in many cases without adequate coordination.

The thrust of the subcommittee's recommendations to the full committee, and to the Senate, as contained in the Older Americans Act of 1978, is to emphasize consolidation and coordination of existing programs. This recommendation is based on the very sound premise that, by reducing fragmentation of effort, we can increase efficiency.

Another thrust of the bill is also designed to produce greater efficiency for each Federal dollar. This is to be achieved by greater emphasis on local determination in the use of Federal funds. The premise, once again, is sound: that those in charge of local programs are in the best position to indentify local problems, and can thus apply Federal funds where they are needed most.

In preparation for this legislation the subcommittee has reviewed the performance of existing programs. It has reported to the Senate that the four priorities emphasized in the 1975 older American amendments have resulted in some improvement in the availability of each of the priority areas: transportation, in-house services, legal services, and residential repair services. It has also noted significant advances in the area of nutrition. The nutrition program for the elderly now serves over 450,000 meals per day, reaching more than 2 million senior citizens. As could be expected, appropriations for the various programs authorized under the Older Americans Act have increased dramatically over the past decade—both in response to new programs, and to the demonstrated success of existing programs.

The legislative recommendations of the Subcommittee on Aging, and the excellent studies and analyses of the Select Committe on Aging underscore an important point: the problems of our elderly citizens are the same problems which face our Nation as a whole—but each of these problems falls most heavily on the elderly. Much of the legislation of the 95th Congress which is not popularly known as legislation for the elderly—such as housing, health, and energy measures—takes this factor into account.

One in every nine Americans is over 65. These citizens, who have helped to build our country, suffer disproportionately from the impact of price inflation, from rising energy, housing, and health costs. Some 3.3 million, or one-seventh of the senior citizen population, now have incomes below the poverty level. Whil this figure represents an improvement compared to a decade ago, it is not good enough.

Women and minorities are heavily over-represented among the aged poor—those below or at the poverty level. The bill requires the U.S. Civil Rights Commission to conduct a study on racial and ethnic discrimination in Federal programs for the elderly, to hold public hearings on this issue, and to transmit to the Congress and the President a report of its findings. This requirement will, I hope, call this situation to the attention of the Nation and result in meaningful recommendations for action.

Another problem before the Congress, and before the Nation, is that of the spiraling costs of health care. While health costs take an enormous toll on the Nation as a whole—costs in terms of human suffering, and in economic expenditures—the impact is far greater on the elderly than on the population as a whole. Older Americans, representing about 11 percent of the population, account for nearly 30 percent of total personal health care expenditures. The proportion of disposable income devoted to health care is increasing at a faster rate year by year, and this is especially true in the case of the older individual. Between 1974 and 1976, per capita personal health expenditures for the elderly increased by more than 35 percent.

The problem of health care delivery is acute in rural areas—where 27 percent of those 60 years of age and older live. Senator HATHAWAY, a member of the Subcommittee on Aging, has performed an invaluable task by calling attention to this and other special concerns of the rural elderly.

Unfortunately, the list of problems confronted by the elderly in our society goes on and on. During the severe winter of 1977, it was estimated that some older Americans—especially those in the Northeast—were spending up to 50 percent of their disposable income on fuel bills. In all areas of the country, in rural and urban areas, it has been found that elderly people, particularly those on fixed incomes, live in substandard housing.

The legislation is not intended to—and indeed, could not hope to—address and solve each of these pressing concerns. But it does help to bring focus and rationality to many important Fedtral programs which serve the senior citizen. Its emphasis on consolidation, and on coordination will, I believe, result in more efficient operation of ongoing programs.

I applaud the committee's decision to limit the extension of the authorizations under the act to 2 years. The Secretary of HEW has pledged that the administration will, by next year, present major policy decisions to the Congress in the field of aging. Thus the Congress and the executive can work together to tackle the concerns of some 24 million Americans.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, as the ranking minority member of the Human Resources Committee. I join the Senator in those sentiments. We are very proud of the work which has been done here today.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I wish to express my fullest support for S. 2850, the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1978. Programs created by the act and its subsequent amendments have provided assistance to millions of older Americans. These, the most current amendments, are aimed at coordinating the various programs, reducing paperwork, and expanding nutrition programs. I am encouraged that, as we incorporate these amendments into the act, we are moving toward the goal of dignity and respect for older Americans and an awareness of their special needs.

Many of the amendments contained in S. 2609, a bill which Senator DOMENICI and I introduced earlier this year, are incorporated in this bill. These include provisions which aid in reducing paperwork. One would allow a State to submit a single comprehensive plan to the Administration on Aging (AOA) which covers all activities authorized under the act. Another would allow the States to do more long-range planning for the delivery of social services to the elderly. Finally, a third provision would establish a review process within AOA which would continually reexamine the nature and frequency of AOA requests for information from the State and local levels. This should greatly help to reduce the incidence of unnecessary regulations and procedures.

As an early proponent of the nutrition programs, I was active in the establishment of the title VII program in 1972. There is a tremendous need for this program both in the form of congregate meals and home-delivered meals. Communal settings provide for both nutritious meals and companionship, while home-delivered meals assist those persons unable to attend a nutrition center or prepare their own meals. This bill would enlarge the home-delivered meals program, one which is so desparately needed by many elderly persons.

This bill would also authorize the AOA to create a number of model long-term care centers. These model projects would be charged with assessing an individual's needs; developing a plan of care; arranging for the necessary and appropriate services; maintaining records on the individual; and constantly monitoring and reevaluating each person's individual needs. These model projects should enable us to determine the viability of various long-term care concepts.

S. 2850 authorizes construction of senior citizen facilities in areas where there are no suitable structures available, generally in rural areas. It also directs preparations to begin on the 1982 White House Conference on Aging. In addition, it provides for a direct funding mechanism so funds would flow from Washington, D.C., to tribal governments for the provision of social and nutritional services for elderly Indians.

I envision a future which allows old age to be purposeful rather than problem filled. Individuals experiencing the failing health which often accompanies advanced age will have the choice of in-home health care or long-term nursing home care. There will come a time when the option of delayed retirement, part-time work, or full retirement will be available to everyone. It is bills such as the Older Americans Act which hasten the arrival of the day when senior citizens will be viewed by all as valued and valuable members of our society.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, does any Senator wish to have a rollcall vote on the joint resolution making urgent supplemental appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, which will be taken up at the end of the day? If not, this will be the last rollcall vote today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." I, therefore, withhold my vote.

Mr. GOLDWATER (when his name was called). Present.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABOUREZK), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), and the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON) would each vote "yea."

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 85, nays 2, answered "present" 1, as follows:

So the bill (H.R. 12255), as amended, was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. EAGLETON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make necessary clerical and technical corrections in the engrossment of the Senate amendments to H.R. 12255.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 2850 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate insist on its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer (Mr. PAUL G. HATFIELD) appointed Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. HAYAKAWA, and Mr. JAVITS conferees on the part of the Senate.

URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 951.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 1024 making urgent supplemental appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, Agricultural Stabilization Service, and for other purposes for fiscal year ending September 30, 1978.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, this resolution provides $57,145,000 in direct appropriations and $23,391,000 in increased transfer authority for the Commodity Credit Corporation to meet the urgent needs of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

The principal reason for the urgent nature of this supplemental pertains to increased workload resulting from passage of last year's farm bill, which became law after the 1978 Agriculture Appropriations Act passed. Funding is principally for additional non-Federal county office workers to administer the various price support and related programs.

The Appropriations Committee has been advised by the Department of Agriculture that ASCS is basically out of money, but that each of the approximately 3,000 county offices is in a slightly different cash position. The Department has directed ASCS to continue to provide services required by law, pending action on this supplemental.

I urge the Senate to approve this resolution without amendment in order to insure the continuation of the important farm programs of this Nation.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield to my colleague from Oklahoma.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, the measure we have before us today is to provide a supplemental appropriation of $57 million for the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service to meet increased administration costs of the farm price support program mandated by the Food and Agricultural Act of 1977. In addition, $23 million is also authorized to be derived by transfer for the Commodity Credit Corporation for the administration of its programs. The need for this appropriation is a direct result of last year's farm bill. Actual program costs are financed through borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation and are not addressed in this measure.

Following passage of the farm bill last year it was apparent that additional funding would be required to administer the higher workload levels mandated by that act. The Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service was granted a deficiency apportionment by the Office of Management and Budget so that it could begin to immediately address the increased workload. The administration, in January, submitted a supplemental request to provide funds to maintain this higher level of activity through the last quarter of the fiscal year.

Unfortunately, the second supplemental was delayed and it now appears that the agency has exhausted all available funds to continue its operations for the balance of the fiscal year. For this reason, an urgent supplemental was passed by the House and I urge the Senate to act expeditiously on the measure.

Mr. EAGLETON. I move the passage of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read the third time, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, shall the joint resolution pass?

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1024) was passed.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL TRAILS SYSTEM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 956.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Calendar 956, H.R. 6900, an act to amend the National Trails System Act of 1968 (82 Stat. 919), as amended, to designate the Oregon National Historic Trail and Travelway as a unit of the National Trails System.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the National Trails System Act (82 Stat. 919; 16 U.S.C. 1241), as amended, is further amended as follows:

(1) In section 2(a) after "promote" insert "the preservation of,"; and after "outdoor areas" insert "and historic resources".

(2) In section 2(a) delete "(ii)" and the remainder of the sentence and insert "(ii) secondarily, within scenic areas and along historic travel routes of the Nation, which are often more remotely located.".

(3) In section 2(b) delete "and scenic" and insert "scenic and historic".

(4) In section 3 redesignate subsection "(c)" as "(d)", and insert a new subsection (c) as follows:

"(c) Historic routes designated as National Historic Trails pursuant to section 5 of this Act, shall follow the original trails or routes of travel as closely as possible and practicable. Such trails shall have as their purpose the identification and marking of an historic route and its historic remnants and artifacts for public use and enjoyment. While such designation shall commemorate an entire route along its historic alinement, only those selected land and water based components of an historic trail which are on federally owned lands and which meet the national historic trail criteria established in this Act, are established as initial components of a national historic trail. The appropriate Secretary may subsequently designate other lands as segments of an historic trail upon application from State or local governmental agencies or private interests involved if such segments meet the national historic trail criteria established in this Act and such criteria supplementary thereto as the appropriate Secretary may prescribe, and are administered by such agencies or interests without expense to the United States.

(5) In the new section 3(d) delete "or national scenic" and insert ", national scenic or national historic".

(6) Change the title of section 5 to read "NATIONAL SCENIC AND NATIONAL HISTORIC TRAILS".

(7) In section 5(a), insert in the first sentence after the word "scenic" the words "and national historic" and change the second sentence to read: "There are hereby established the following National Scenic and National Historic Trails:".

(8) In section 5(a)(1), in the first sentence, after the word "Appalachian", insert "National Scenic", and in section 5(a)(2), in the first sentence, after "Pacific Crest", insert "National Scenic".

(9) In section 5(a), delete paragraph (3) and insert in lieu the following new paragraphs:

"(3) The National Historic Oregon Trail, a route of approximately two thousand miles extending from near Independence, Missouri, to the vicinity of Portland, Oregon, following a route as depicted on maps identified as 'Primary Route of the Oregon Trail 1841-1848', in the Department of the Interior's Oregon Trail study report dated April 1977.

"(4) The National Historic Mormon Pioneer Trail, a trail of approximately one thousand three hundred miles from Nauvoo, Illinois, to Salt Lake City, Utah, following the primary route of the Historic Mormon Trail depicted on a map, identified as, 'Vicinity Map, Mormon Pioneer Trail' in the Department of Interior Mormon Trail study report dated June, 1978.

(5) The National Historic Lewis and Clark Trail, a trail of approximately three thousand seven hundred miles, extending from Wood River, Illinois, to the mouth of the Columbia River in Oregon, following the outbound and inbound routes of the Lewis and Clark Expedition depicted on maps, identified as, 'Vicinity Map, Lewis and Clark Trail' study report dated April 1977.

"(6) The National Historic Iditarod Trail, a route of approximately two thousand miles extending from Seward, Alaska, to Nome, Alaska, following the routes as depicted on maps identified as 'Seward-Nome Trail', in the Department of the Interior's study report entitled 'The Iditarod Trail (Seward-Nome Route) and other Alaskan Gold Rush Trails' dated September 1977;".

(10) In section 5(b) after "national scenic" wherever it appears insert "or national historic"; delete the third sentence; and delete that portion of the fourth sentence which precedes the numerical listing, and insert in lieu the following: "The studies listed in subsection (c) of this section shall be completed and submitted to the Congress, with recommendations as to the suitability of trail designation, not later than three complete fiscal years from the date of enactment of their addition to this subsection, or from the date of enactment of this sentence, whichever is later. Such studies when submitted, shall be printed as a House or Senate document, and shall include, but not be limited to:".

(11) In section 5(b)(3) after the semicolon add "and in the case of national historic trails the report shall include the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior's National Park System Advisory Board as to the national historic significance based on the criteria developed under the Historic Sites Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 666; 16 U.S.C. 461);".

(12) In section 5(b)(8) delete the word "and" at the end of the sentence; in section 5(b)(9) change the period at the end of the sentence to a semicolon; and at the end of section 5(b) add the following new paragraphs:

"(10) the anticipated impact of public outdoor recreation use on the preservation of a proposed national historic trail and its related historic and archeological features and settings, including the measures proposed to insure evaluation and preservation of the values that contribute to their national historic significance; and

"(11) to qualify for designation as a national historic trail, a trail must meet all three of the following criteria:

"(A) It must be a trail or route established by historic use and must be historically significant as a result of that use. The route need not currently exist as a discernable trail to qualify, but its location must be sufficiently known to permit evaluation of public recreation and historical interest potential. A designated trail should generally follow the historic route, but may deviate somewhat on occasion of necessity to avoid difficult routing through subsequent development, or to provide some route variation offering a more pleasurable recreational experience. Such deviations shall be so noted on site. Trail segments no longer possible to travel by trail due to subsequent development as motorized transportation routes may be designated and marked on-site as segments which link to the historic trail.

"(B) It must be of national significance with respect to any of several broad facets of American history, such as trade and commerce, migration and settlement, or military campaigns. To qualify as nationally significant, historic use of the trail must have had a far-reaching effect on broad patterns of American culture. Trails significant in the history of native Americans may be included.

"(C) It must have significant potential for public recreational use or historical interest based on historic interpretation and appreciation. The potential for such use is generally greater along roadless segments developed as historic trails, and at historic sites associated with the trail. The presence of recreation potential not related to historic appreciation is not sufficient justification for designation under this category.".

(13) In section 5 delete subsection (d), and insert a new section 5(d) to read as follows:

"(d) The Secretary charged with the administration of each respective trail shall, within one year of the date of the addition of any national scenic or national historic trail to the System, and within sixty days of the enactment of this sentence for the Appalachian and Pacific Crest National Scenic Trails, establish an advisory council for each such trail, each of which councils shall expire ten years from the date of its establishment. The appropriate Secretary shall consult with such council from time to time with respect to matters relating to the trail, including the selection of rights-of-way, standards for the erection and maintenance of markers along the trail, and the administration of the trail. The members of each advisory council, which shall not exceed thirty-five in number, shall serve for a term of two years and without compensation as such, but the Secretary may pay, upon vouchers signed by the chairman of the council, the expenses reasonably incurred by the council and its members in carrying out their responsibilities under this section. Members of each council shall be appointed by the appropriate Secreary as follows:

"(i) a member appointed to represent each Federal department or independent agency administering lands through which the trail route passes, and each appointee shall be the person designated by the head of such department or agency;

"(ii) a member appointed to represent each State through which the trail passes, and such appointments shall be made from recommendations of the Governors of such States;

"(iii) one or more members appointed to represent private organizations, including corporate and individual landowners and land users, which in the opinion of the Secretary, have an established and recognized interest in the trail, and such appointments shall be made from recommendations of the heads of such organizations: Provided, That the Appalachian Trail Conference shall be represented by a sufficient number of persons to represent the various sections of the country through which the Appalachian Trail passes; and

"(iv) the Secretary shall designate one member to be chairman and shall fill vacancies in the same manner as the original appointment.".

(14) In section 5 add new subsections (e) and (f) as follows:

"(e) Within two complete fiscal years of the date of enactment of this subsection for the Pacific Crest and Appalachian Trails, the responsible Secretary shall, after full consultation with affected States, and the Appalachian Trail Conference in the case of the Appalachian Trail, submit to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate a comprehensive plan for the acquisition, management, development, and use of the trail, including but not limited to, the following items:

"(1) specific objectives and practices to be observed in the management of the trail, including the identification of all significant natural, historical, and cultural resources to be preserved, details of anticipated cooperative agreements to be consummated with other entities, and an identified carrying capacity of the trail and a plan for its implementation;

"(2) an acquisition or protection plan, by fiscal year, for all lands to be acquired by fee title or lesser interest, along with detailed explanation of anticipated necessary cooperative agreements for any lands not to be acquired;

"(3) general and site-specific development plans, including anticipated costs.

"(f) Within two complete fiscal years of the date of enactment of legislation (including this Act) designating a trail as part of the system, the responsible Secretary shall, after full consultation with affected Federal land managing agencies, the Governors of the affected States, and the relevant Advisory Council established pursuant to section 5(d) of this Act, submit to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate, a comprehensive plan for the management, and use of the trail, including but not limited to, the following items:

"(1) specific objectives and practices to be observed in the management of the trail, including the identification of all significant natural, historical, and cultural resources to be preserved, details of any anticipated cooperative agreements to be consummated with State and local government agencies or private interests, and for national scenic or national recreational trails an identified carrying capacity of the trail and a plan for its implementation; and

"(2) the process to be followed by the appropriate Secretary to implement the marking requirements established in section 7(d) of this Act.".

(15) In section 6 in the first sentence delete "or national scenic" and insert ", national scenic or national historic", and in the second sentence delete "or scenic" and insert ", national scenic, or national historic".

(16) Delete all of section 7 and insert a new section 7 as follows:

"ADMINISTRATOR AND DEVELOPMENT

"SEC. 7. (a) Pursuant to section 5(b), the appropriate Secretary shall select the rights-of-way for National Scenic and National Historic Trails and shall publish notice thereof in the Federal Register, together with appropriate maps and descriptions: Provided, That in selecting the rights-of-way full consideration shall be given to minimizing the adverse effects upon the adjacent landowner or user and his operation. Development and management of each segment of the National Trails System shall be designed to harmonize with and complement any established multiple-use plans for that specific area in order to insure continued maximum benefits from the land. The location and width of such rights-of-way across Federal lands under the jurisdiction of another Federal agency shall be by agreement between the head of that agency and the appropriate Secretary. In selecting rights-of-way for trail purposes, the Secretary shall obtain the advice and assistance of the States, local governments, private organizations, and landowners and land users concerned.

"(b) After publication of notice in the Federal Register, together with appropriate maps and descriptions, the Secretary charged with the administration of a national scenic or national historic trail may relocate segments of a national scenic or national historic trail right-of-way, with the concurrence of the head of the Federal agency having jurisdiction over the lands involved, upon a determination that: (i) such a relocation is necessary to preserve the purposes for which the trail was established, or (ii) the relocation is necessary to promote a sound land management program in accordance with established multiple-use principles: Provided, That a substantial relocation of the rights-of-way for such trail shall be by Act of Congress.

"(c) National scenic or national historic trails may contain campsites, shelters, and related-public-use facilities. Reasonable efforts shall be made to provide sufficient access opportunities to such trails and, to the extent practicable, efforts shall be made to avoid activities incompatible with the purposes for which such trails were established. Other uses along the trail, which will not substantially interfere with the nature and purposes of the trail, and which are currently allowed by administrative regulations, including the use of motorized vehicles, shall be permitted by the Secretary charged with the administration of the trail. The use of motorized vehicles by the general public along any national scenic or national historic trail shall be prohibited within the natural and historical areas of the national park system, the national wildlife refuge system, the national wilderness preservation system where they are presently prohibited or on other Federal lands where trails are designated as being closed to such use by the appropriate Secretary: Provided, That the Secretary charged with the administration of such trail shall establish regulations which shall authorize the use of motorized vehicles when, in his judgment, such vehicles are necessary to meet emergencies or to enable adjacent landowners or land users to have reasonable access to their lands or timber rights: Provided further, That private lands included in the national recreation, national scenic, or national historic trails by cooperative agreement of a landowner shall not preclude such owner from using motorized vehicles on or across such trails or adjacent lands from time to time in accordance with regulations to be established by the appropriate Secretary.

"(d) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, in consultation with appropriate governmental agencies and public and private organizations, shall establish a uniform marker, including thereon an appropriate and distinctive symbol for each national recreation, national scenic, and national historic trail. Where the trails cross lands administered by Federal agencies such markers shall be erected at appropriate points along the trails and maintained by the Federal agency administering the trail in accordance with standards established by the appropriate Secretary and where the trails cross non-Federal lands, in accordance with written cooperative agreements, the appropriate Secretary shall provide such uniform markers to cooperating agencies who shall erect and maintain them in accordance with the standards established by the Secretary.

"(e) Where a national historic trail follows existing public roads, developed rights-of-way or waterways, and similar features of man's nonhistorically related development, approximating the original location of a historic route, such segments may be marked to facilitate retracement of the historic route, and where a national historic trail parallels an existing public road, such road may be marked to commemorate the historic route. No land or site located along a designated national historic trail shall be subject to the provisions of section 4(f) of the Department of Transportation Act (49 U.S.C. 1653 (f)) unless such land or site is deemed to be of historical significance under appropriate historical site criteria such as those for the National Register of Historic Places.

"(f) Within the exterior boundaries of areas under their administration that are included in the right-of-way selected for the Appalachian National Scenic Trail and the Pacific Crest National Scenic Trail, the heads of Federal agencies may use lands for trail purposes and may acquire lands or interests in lands by written cooperative agreement, donation, purchase with donated or appropriated funds or exchange.

"(g) Where the lands included in Appalachian National Scenic Trail and the Pacific Crest National Scenic Trail right-of-way are outside of the exterior boundaries of federally administered areas, the Secretary charged with the administration of such trail shall encourage the States or local governments involved (1) to enter into written cooperative agreements with landowners, private organizations, and individuals to provide the necessary trail right-of-way, or (2) to acquire such lands or interests therein to be utilized as segments of those trails: Provided, That if the State or local governments fail to enter into such written cooperative agreements or to acquire such lands or interests therein after notice of the selection of the right-of-way is published the appropriate Secretary may (i) enter into such agreements with landowners, States, local governments, private organizations, and individuals for the use of lands for trail purposes, or (ii) acquire private lands or interests therein by donation, purchase with donated or appropriated funds or exchange in accordance with the provisions of subsection (g) of this section. The lands involved in such rights-of-way should be acquired in fee, if other methods of public control are not sufficient to assure their use for the purpose for which they are acquired: Provided, That if the Secretary charged with the administration of such trail permanently relocates the right-of-way and disposes of all title or interest in the land, the original owner or his heirs or assigns shall be offered, by notice given at the former owner's last known address, the right of first refusal at the fair market price.

"(h) The Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his exchange authority, may accept title to any non-Federal property within the right-of-way of the Appalachian National Scenic Trail and the Pacific Crest National Scenic Trail and in exchange therefor he may convey to the grantor of such property any federally owned property under his jurisdiction which is located in the State wherein such property is located and which he classifies as suitable for exchange or other disposal. The values of the properties so exchanged either shall be approximately equal, or if they are approximately equal the values shall be equalized by the payment of cash to the grantor or to the Secretary as the circumstances require. The Secretary of Agriculture, in the exercise of his exchange authority, may utilize authorities and procedures available to him in connection with exchanges of national forest lands.

(i) For the Appalachian National Scenic Trail and the Pacific Crest National Scenic Trail, the appropriate Secretary may utilize condemnation proceedings without the consent of the owner to acquire private lands or interests therein pursuant to this section only in cases where, in his judgment, all reasonable efforts to acquire such lands or interests therein by negotiation have failed, and in such cases he shall acquire only such title as, in his judgment, is reasonably necessary to provide passage across such lands: Provided, The condemnation proceedings may not be utilized to acquire fee title or lesser interests to more than an average of 125 acres per mile.

"(j) The Secretary charged with the administration of a national recreation, national scenic, or national historic trail shall provide for the development and maintenance of such trails within federally administered areas or on federally owned lands and shall cooperate with and encourage the States to operate, develop, and maintain portions of such trails which are located outside the boundaries of federally administered areas. When deemed to be in the public interest, such Secretary may enter written cooperative agreements with the States or their political subdivisions, landowners, private organizations, or individuals to operate, develop, and maintain any portion of a national scenic or national historic trail either within or outside a federally administered area. Whenever the Secretary of the Interior makes any conveyance of land under any of the public land laws, he may reserve a right-of-way for trails to the extent he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

"(k) The appropriate Secretary, with the concurrence of the heads of any other Federal agencies administering lands through which a national recreation, national scenic, or national historic trail passes, and after consultation with the States, local governments, and organizations concerned, may issue regulations, which may be revised from time to time, governing the use, protection, management, development, and administration of trails of the national trails system. In order to maintain good conduct on and along the trails located within federally administered areas and to provide for the proper government and protection of such trails, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe and publish such uniform regulations as they deem necessary and any person who violates such regulations shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.".

(17) In section 8 in the first sentence of subsection (a) after "establishing park, forest, and other recreation" insert "and historic" and after "administered by States, and recreation" insert "and historic"; and at the end of the first sentence insert the following: "The Secretary is also directed to encourage States to consider, in their comprehensive statewide historic preservation plans and proposals for financial assistance for State, local, and private projects submitted pursuant to the Act of October 15, 1966 (80 Stat. 915), as amended, needs and opportunities for establishing historic trails.".

(18) In section 10, delete "(a)(1)" and insert "(a)"; substitute "subsequent fiscal years" for "the subsequent fiscal year"; and strike paragraph numbered (2).

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Tom Williams, Daniel Dreyfus, and Laura Beaty of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee staff, and Fred Hutchison and David Litster of my personal staff, and Tony Bevinetto of Senator HANSEN's staff have the privilege of the floor during the consideration of H.R. 6900; and, in addition, Pat Pourchet of Senator GRAVEL's staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1490

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an unprinted amendment to the measure now being considered, H.R. 6900.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1490.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, strike paragraph (18), and insert:

"(18) In section 10, strike '(a)(1)' and insert instead '(a)'; strike 'the subsequent fiscal year' and insert instead, 'subsequent fiscal years'; strike the paragraph numbered '(2)' in its entirety; and add a new 'subsection (c)' as follows:

"'(c) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to implement the provisions of this Act relating to the trails designated by paragraphs 5(a)(3), (4), (5) and (6): Provided, That no such funds are authorized to be appropriated prior to October 1, 1979.'."

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, this amendment modifies paragraph 18 of H.R. 6900, as reported from the committee. Specifically, it amends section 10 of the 1968 act by providing that no appropriations may be authorized for implementing the provisions contained in H.R. 6900 relating to the new historic trails, prior to October 1, 1979. This amendment is being offered to insure compliance with the Congressional Budget Act and has the approval of the committee.

Mr. President, for the information of my colleagues, and for the legislative history on this measure, I ask unanimous consent that the Congressional Budget Office cost estimate on H.R. 6900, prepared for the committee, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
U.S. CONGRESS,
Washington, D.C., July 24, 1978.

Hon. HENRY M. JACKSON,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to Section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for H.R. 6900, an act to amend the National Trails System Act of 1968 to establish a National Historic Trails Category within the National Trails System, to designate certain historic routes as National Historic Trails, and for other purposes.

Should the Committee so desire, we would be pleased to provide further details on the attached cost estimate.

Sincerely,

ALICE M. RIVLIN,
Director.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE
COST ESTIMATE

JULY 24, 1978.

1. Bill number: H.R. 6900.

2. Bill title:

An act to amend the National Trails System Act of 1968 to establish a National Historic Trails Category within the National Trails System, to designate certain historic routes as National Historic Trails, and for other purposes.

3. Bill status:

As reported by the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, July 21, 1978, and assuming enactment of a proposed amendment authorizing appropriations beginning in fiscal year 1980.

4. Bill purpose:

This bill establishes a new trail category, national historic trails, within the National Trails System. The bill designates four new trails under this category: the National Historic Oregon Trail, the National Historic Mormon Pioneer Trail, the National Historic Lewis and Clark Trail, and the National Historic Iditarod Trail. The Secretary of the Department of Interior is directed to establish advisory councils for each trail designated. The councils are to assist in the planning, development, and management of the trails.

5. Cost estimate:

[By fiscal years; in millions of dollars]

| | |
|---|---|
| Fiscal year 1980 | 2.2 |
| Fiscal year 1981 | 2.5 |
| Fiscal year 1982 | 0.7 |
| Fiscal year 1983 | 0.8 |
| Fiscal year 1984 | 1.0 |

Estimated cost:

The costs of this bill fall within budget function 300.

6. Basis of estimate:

Assuming enactment of a proposed floor amendment, the bill will authorize such sums as may be necessary for implementation beginning in fiscal year 1980. Therefore, this estimate assumes that funding for this bill will first be available in fiscal year 1980.

Designation of a national trail requires the preparation of a comprehensive plan for the development and management of the trail, the establishment of an advisory council to assist in planning and management of the trail, and preliminary development. Based on information provided by the Department of Interior, these activities will cost approximately $7.2 million during fiscal years 1980 through 1984.

No acquisition costs are included as the bill directs establishment of the trails only on federally-owned lands or lands provided to the government at no cost.

The bill's provision to establish advisory councils for new trails may also result in additional costs, as new trails are designated. Currently, there are 21 trails being considered for addition to the national scenic and historical trail system. The annual cost for each such advisory council is estimated to be approximately $28,000 at 1979 cost levels.

The estimated costs of the bill, by year, are summarized below:

COST SUMMARY

[By fiscal years, in millions of dollars]

| Estimated cost | Fiscal year— 1980 | 1981 | 1982 | 1983 | 1984 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Planning and development | 1.8 | 1.8 | | | |
| Operation and maintenance | .3 | .6 | 0.6 | 0.7 | 0.8 |
| Advisory councils | .1 | .1 | .1 | .1 | .2 |
| Total | 2.2 | 2.5 | .7 | .8 | 1.0 |

7. Estimate comparison: None.

8. Previous CBO estimate:

On March 29, 1978, CBO transmitted a cost estimate on H.R. 6900 as ordered reported by the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, March 21, 1978. The House version of the bill designated only the Oregon National Historic Trail and authorized $5 million for land acquisition. This version of the bill designates four trails and includes no specific authorization level for land acquisition.

9. Estimate prepared by: Mark Berkman (225-7760).

10. Estimate approved by:

JAMES L. BLUM,
Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I would like to join with our colleague from Idaho in urging the adoption of this amendment.

The amendment, as amended, provides for identification and marking. It does not give land acquisition authority. It allows for historic recognition, and also allows present uses to continue.

Two of the trails cross Wyoming. These trails played a great role in the settling of the State.

These trails are still in use in modern ways and historic interpretation. The State of Wyoming and the land management agencies are to be complimented for having gotten together and developed the kind of legislation we have before us now. I welcome it, and join the Senator from Idaho in urging the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wyoming, the ranking Republican member on the Energy Committee, for his statement of support, and for the assistance he gave to me and others who were interested in this legislation when it was before the committee for consideration.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment presently pending at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, the legislation, as amended, that we are now considering would establish within the National Trails System a new category of National Historic Trails and designate four routes as the first historic trails.

When Congress enacted the National Trails System Act 10 years ago, we established a system to identify and protect certain routes of national significance. At that time, two trails, the Appalachian Trail and the Pacific Crest Trail were immediately included in the system due to their spectacular scenic and recreational potential. Fourteen other routes were to be studied by the Departments of Interior and Agriculture to determine if they too should be part of the national system.

Citing increasing demands by the public for outdoor recreation, the original National Trails Act sought to provide high quality scenic and recreational opportunities along specific established trails. The routes selected for study under the 1968 act were thought to be excellent candidates for inclusion within the national system as either national scenic or national recreational trails. However, once the studies were concluded by the executive agencies on some of these 14 trails, those agencies determined that trails such as the Lewis and Clark Trail and the Oregon Trail did not qualify for addition to the national system under the criteria of the 1968 act. For instance, the Department of Interior's report on the Oregon Trail found that:

The Oregon Trail has national historical significance as one of the best known and most heavily traveled routes in the Nation's westward migration, and was a major determinant in settlement of the American Northwest. Strong public support exists for its commemoration and preservation. It does not, however, qualify as a national scenic trail since approximately 80 percent of the route has been altered or destroyed by highways, utility rights-of-way, agriculture, and other activities. It also does not follow a continuous and scenic corridor suitable for hiking and horseback riding which are qualifying criteria for National Scenic Trails.

Similarly, the conclusion reached in the studies of the Mormon Pioneer, Lewis and Clark, and Iditarod—Alaskan Gold Rush—Trails was that each of these trails is of national historical significance, but does not provide the kind of scenic or recreational opportunities necessary for inclusion in the National Trails System as it is presently structured. However, each of these studies also recommended including the trail in question within the Trails System as a national historic trail if the 1968 act were suitably amended and the necessary category established.

Mr. President, the legislation we are now considering has three purposes. First, it corrects the oversight in the 1968 National Trails System Act by creating a new category of National Historic Trails. Without this new category and the protection it will afford, the heritage of our country's historic migration and transportation routes, with their remaining edifices and artifacts, may be lost forever. And we would be the less for it. Many historic trail remnants have, according to Interior's Oregon Trail report, already been "erased by the bulldozer and the plow." What remains of our historic trails lie "gently on the land, as easily erased as a pencil line on paper."

Second, this bill designates four historic routes, the Oregon Trail, the Mormon Pioneer Trail, the Lewis and Clark Trail, and the Iditarod Trail as the first national historic trails. As I mentioned earlier, each of these trails has been thoroughly studied by the various departments and was found to possess outstanding historical qualities which should be protected through their inclusion within the national system.

Finally, the legislation amends the 1968 act to provide procedures for the study of other routes to determine the feasibility and suitability of their designation as national historic trails. These new procedures are needed to provide a mechanism to study trails which though not available for intensive recreation, are nonetheless vital parts of America's past.

To qualify for designation as a national historic trail, a trail must meet all three of the following criteria:

It must be a trail or route established by historic use and must be historically significant as a result of that use. The route need not currently exist as a discernible trail to qualify, but its location must be sufficiently known to permit evaluation of public recreation and historical interest potential.

It must be of national significance with respect to any of several broad facets of American history, such as trade and commerce, migration and settlement, or military campaigns. To qualify as nationally significant, historic use of the trail must have had a far-reaching effect on broad patterns of American culture. Trails significant in the history of native Americans may be included.

It must have significant potential for public recreational use or historical interest based on historic interpretation and appreciation. The potential for such use is generally greater along the roadless segments developed as historic trails, and at historic sites associated with the trails. The presence of recreation potential not related to historic appreciation is not sufficient justification for designation under this category.

Mr. President, the main thrust of this legislation is to provide for the identification and marking of certain historical routes which are an important part of our national heritage, and which should be appropriately commemorated. The bill has the full support of the administration, and I urge its approval by the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that certain excerpts from the Department of Interior's study reports on the trails covered by this legislation be printed in the RECORD at this point along with a resolution adopted by the National Trails Council in support of the new historic trails category.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STUDY REPORT: OREGON TRAIL

FOREWORD

The Oregon Trail was a wagon road stretching 2,000 miles from Missouri to Oregon's Willamette Valley. It was not a road in any modern sense, only parallel ruts leading across endless prairie, sagebrush desert, and mountains to an unknown Promised Land.

A quarter of a million people set out on this faint track, their possessions reduced to what could be carried in a wagon or on the backs of their livestock. Most said goodbye forever to friends, relatives, and familiar places. Many were destined to a shallow grave along the way, and the Oregon Trail often has been called the longest cemetery in the Nation.

To survivors, the 6-month journey was the most important event in their lives. Over 700 of them left diaries and journals. These written accounts, together with remnants and relics of the trail itself, today provide a window to the past.

Many trail remnants have been erased by the bulldozer and the plow. Much of the route today lies under highways and city streets, or traverses farmland where prairie grasses and sagebrush have given way to corn and wheat. Here and there, however, are segments relatively untouched by civilization. Much of the Oregon Trail's potential for public enjoyment lies in these visible remnants, and in the historic sites associated with the trail.

What remains of the Oregon Trail lies gently on the land, as easily erased as a pencil line on paper. If protected, these remnants can provide future generations the opportunity to catch glimpses of our land as it appeared to the emigrants, to relive vicariously their great adventure, and to sense the enormity of its consequence . . .

STUDY REPORT: LEWIS AND CLARK TRAIL

INTRODUCTION

Historical background

In 1803 President Jefferson commissioned two Army officers, Captains Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, and their Corps of Discovery, as the Expedition was commonly known, to explore routes through the newly purchased Louisiana Territory and to secure and extend this claim to the Pacific Ocean. In May of 1804, the group left the preparation camp near Wood River, Illinois, to cross vast regions of the Louisiana Territory and the Pacific Northwest in one of the most important events in Western United States history.

They followed the Missouri River upstream for approximately 2,400 miles to Three Forks in Montana, then the Jefferson River to its headwaters, and thence the Beaverhead River to the vicinity of the Continental Divide at Lembi Pass. Proceeding toward the Pacific, the explorers followed the Salmon River, recrossed the Montana-Idaho border at Lost Trail Pass and continued through the Bitterroot Valley to the vicinity of Lolo, Montana. Again crossing the Montana-Idaho border, this time at Lolo Pass, the group began its westward descent along the Clearwater, Snake, and Columbia Rivers. In November 1805, they arrived at the Pacific Ocean.

On the return trip, the Expedition followed the same general route as far as Lolo, Montana, where they formed into two groups. Captain Lewis followed the Bitterroot, Clarks Fork and the Blackfoot Rivers to cross the Continental Divide at what is now Lewis and Clark Pass. He descended the Sun River and explored the upper reaches of the Marias River before proceeding down the Missouri River. Captain Clark traveled south to cross the Divide at Gibbon's Pass, descended the Beaverhead and Jefferson Rivers and then crossed to the Yellowstone River. He followed the Yellowstone downstream and joined Lewis below its confluence with the Missouri River.

Captain Clark and Captain Lewis together made the remainder of the trip down the Missouri and arrived at St. Louis in September 1806.

NATIONAL SIGNIFICANCE

Background

The Lewis and Clark Expedition of 1804—1806 is considered by many to be one of the most important factors in the expansion of the Continental United States. It paved the way for the settlement and development of the Northern Plains, the Rocky Mountains, and the Pacific Northwest. This journey had a profound and lasting effect on the political, economic, and geographic development of the western half of the Nation.

The need for exploration of the western portions of the continent had become apparent to President Jefferson long before Napoleon made his offer to sell the Louisiana Territory. In his address to Congress on January 18, 1803, Jefferson asked for and was granted an appropriation of $2,500 for an expedition across the continent to the Oregon Country.

Later that year, Napoleon offered to sell all of the Louisiana Territory for $15 million. Jefferson took this opportunity and on October 25, 1803, the United States Senate ratified the Louisiana Purchase Treaty.

On May 14, 1804, with the firing of a cannon shot, the Lewis and Clark Expedition set forth from their winter camp at the mouth of Wood River, Illinois, to secure the American claim. The trip lasted 2 years, 4 months, and 9 days and encompassed about 7,500 miles. Few similar journeys were so well managed and so free from errors in judgment, miscalculations, and tragedy. Only an incident with the Sioux Indians at the mouth of the Bad River and another with the Blackfeet which resulted in the deaths of two Indians marred the trip. The only death among members of the Expedition was that of Sergeant Floyd and is presumed to have resulted from a ruptured appendix.

The contacts made with the Indians by Lewis and Clark were of great political importance in the Government's later dealings with the various tribes. By completing a journey up the Missouri River and then down the Columbia to the Pacific Ocean, the Americans strengthened their claim to the Oregon Country.

There were significant economic benefits resulting from the Expedition. Trappers and then traders gradually penetrated this rich land. Lewis and Clark established that beaver were abundant and exploitation began almost immediately. The fur trade was the principal industry of the area until the late 1830's when the price for pelts declined.

Descriptions and specimens of the flora and fauna taken back by members of the Expedition added considerably to the scientific knowledge existing at that time. Birds, small mammals, hides, and boxes of Indian articles were returned to the East. Detailed descriptions of the pronghorned antelope, the Columbia blacktailed deer, beaver, bobcats, foxes, wolves, and squirrels were prepared.

Geographically, the Expedition had more far-reaching effects. Prior to the journey, it was generally assumed that a mere 20 miles separated the Missouri headwaters from the headwaters of the Columbia River which could be followed to the sea. They had not anticipated mountains as extensive as the Rockies. Instead of 20 miles, they were forced to traverse almost 200 miles of rugged territory to reach a tributary of the Snake River. Most significant, however, was the final realization that a northwest water passage to the Orient could never exist.

STUDY REPORT: THE IDITAROD (SEWARD-NOME ROUTE) AND OTHER ALASKAN GOLD RUSH TRAILS—DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, SEPTEMBER 1977

SUMMARY OF CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The Seward-Nome (Iditarod) route is composed of a number of trails and side trails developed at different times during the Gold Rush Era. The Iditarod strike began in 1908; it was the last of the major Alaskan strikes and prompted the Alaska Road Commission to improve the Rainy Pass-Kaltag section of the Seward to Nome trail. Because the Iditarod mining district was the most common destination of travelers in this last phase of the Gold Rush Era, the name Iditarod Trail has become a term of convenience to describe the many geographic and historic segments of the Seward to Nome trail. These trails, aggregating 2,037 miles, offer a rich diversity of climate, terrain, scenery, wildlife, recreation, and historic resources in an environment largely unchanged since the days of the stampeders. It is the isolated, primitive quality of this historical environment that makes the Iditarod National Historic Trail proposal unique. No where in the National Trails System is there such an extensive landscape, so demanding of durability and skill during its winter season of travel. On Iditarod, today's adventurer can duplicate the experience and challenge of yesteryear.

Though comprehensive studies of historic resources remain to be done, preliminary surveys have indicated that the Iditarod Trail possesses national historical significance. Rapid erosion of known historic resources, and impending threats to the primitive quality of the trail, are immediate concerns. Should the Congress act favorably on the Iditarod Trail proposal, comprehensive studies and management programs would be initiated to preserve the trail's historic environment and resources.

RESOLUTION OF THE NATIONAL TRAILS COUNCIL PERTAINING TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL HISTORIC TRAILS

Whereas, there are many trail routes in the United States which are of national historic significance; and

Whereas, the National Trails System Act does not contain provision for designation of historic trails, and a number of trails having historical significance which are presently under study for designation as national scenic or recreation trails do not meet the criteria for such designation; and

Whereas, it is important that the historical significance of these routes as foundations of the country's development be preserved for the enjoyment, recognition, and understanding of future generations of Americans.

Therefore, be it resolved that the National Trails Council, an organization representing members of the public and government involved in the establishment and use of all types of trails, urges the Congress of the United States to amend the National Trails System Act to provide for the category of National Historic Trails and Travelways; and

Be it further resolved that the National Trails Council urges the U.S. Department of the Interior and the U.S. Department of Agriculture to support such legislation, including the preparation of and immediate submittal of appropriate draft legislation to Congress to accomplish this objective.

THE MORMON PIONEER TRAIL

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, the Mormon Pioneer Trail, like the Oregon Trail which it parallels in many places, was one of the most significant migration routes used during the westward expansion of the American people during the mid-19th century. Similarly, the Mormon migration was one of the most dramatic events of this period, for it was the permanent movement of a whole people. Family groups under the leadership of Brigham Young, seeking to avoid religious persecution, left their homes and braved many hardships in order to accomplish their dream of finding a new location and a fresh start.

Except for the segment between Council Bluffs and Fort Laramie, Young's Mormon pioneers did not originate the route they followed. Rather, it was the combination of several existing routes beginning with the earlier trapper, missionary, and Indian trails, and the more widely known Oregon, Overland, and California Trails. Yet, the Mormon emigration differed profoundly from the Oregon and California Westward migrations, and Mr. President, I would like to take a few minutes to detail some of these differences which make the history of the Mormon Pioneer Trail unique.

Unlike other settlers who headed west looking for the lands of golden opportunity on the Pacific coast, the Mormons did not leave their warm and comfortable brick homes in the city of Nauvoo willingly. Instead, they started their migration west under the worst possible conditions in the dead of winter. After they crossed the Mississippi River, they were forced to regroup and for several weeks huddled together in Sugar Creek, Iowa, in their wagons and tents, until the weather changed and they could continue their trip west.

For their journey West, Brigham Young set forth the organization and rules by which the Mormon company would travel. For example, the pioneers were directed to organize themselves into tens, fifties, and hundreds. During 1847, these groups were organized in semimilitary fashion with Brigham Young as general and others serving as company captains, hunters, and scouts.

Unlike most of the California- or Oregon-bound emigrants, the first thoughts of Brigham Young's pioneer company were to improve the journey for the Mormons who were to follow. They took special note of good campgrounds, wood, water, and grass, and the pioneers were careful to measure distances and set up mileposts. In addition, some crops were planted by the vanguard company in the spring on public lands adjacent to their route so that the companies that followed could harvest these crops as they made their trek westward.

The Mormons established semipermanent camps and ferries, graded down the steep approaches to fords, and cleared boulders out of the path. Unlike the Oregon- or California-bound travelers, who did not expect to go that way again, the Mormons not only traveled West, but also eastward to pick up supplies and new converts at the Missouri River, or to meet faltering companies and help them on to Salt Lake City.

Perhaps the spirit of the Mormon migration can be best capsulized by the encampments which occurred at the end of each day's journey. With the first company of Mormon pioneers came a brass band. After the encampment was made and the toils of the day were over, the snow would be scraped away and huge fires built inside the wagoned enclosure. There, to the inspiring music of the brass band, the weary pioneers sang and danced and forgot momentarily their trials and the discomfort of their travel.

And so, with mighty faith in their hearts they pursued their journey across the Great Plains. Tremendous rainstorms overtook them, but they traveled on and on, marking their trail with the graves of their dead. It was during this time that William Clayton wrote the famous soul-stirring song:

Come, come ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear,
But with joy wend your way;
Tho' hard to you this journey may appear,
Grace shall be as your day.
Tis better far for us to strive
Our useless care from us to drive;
Do this and joy your hearts will swell—
All is well. All is well.

Prior to reaching the Great Salt Lake Valley, Brigham Young met with James Bridger, the famous mountaineer and guide. Mr. Bridger was well acquainted with the Rockies and gave the Mormon company much information concerning the country in general. Says President Young:

Bridger considered it imprudent to bring a large population into the Great Basin until it was ascertained that grain could be raised; he said he would give $1,000 for a bushel of corn raised in that basin.

President Young replied:

Wait a little, and we will show you.

The end of the Mormon Pioneer Trail was the Great Salt Lake Valley. For some it seemed a desolate wasteland, hardly the Zion they hoped for. But for many others it was the refuge which they would make blossom as the rose.

Mr. President, Nelson White has taken some of the journals kept by the pioneers and rewritten them in the book "Westward in '47." Because his colorful story recounts the final days of the 1847 migration more eloquently than I could hope to, I ask unanimous consent that the last two chapters be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of these remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, the route followed by the Mormon Pioneers is of national significance for a number of different reasons. Existing national monuments, Federal, State, and local recreation areas, and scenic tour routes provide a full range of outdoor recreation opportunities along or accessible from the Mormon Trail. In addition, many historic points along the 1,300-mile route have high potential for historical interpretation. However, the main significance of the trail is the role it played as a main highway for the development of the West.

While most of the original Mormon Trail has disappeared across Iowa and Nebraska, in Wyoming and Utah much of the environment is little different today than it was in 1847. In these sections, numerous ruts and other trail evidence remain as visible reminders of the courage and determination of the Mormon Pioneers.

My President, in closing, just let me say that the designation of the National Historic Mormon Pioneer Trail will commemorate the experience of a remarkable people. Like their forebears who traveled this historic route, the present generation of Latter-day Saints is sustained by an unquenchable faith in God. They have prospered by the example of thrift, hard work, and good living. They are good neighbors and good people, setting an example both in American communities and as ambassadors of good will in countless countries abroad.

Today, on Pioneer Day, the people of Idaho pause to pay tribute to the pioneers of a century ago. The quest for a new start that led the pioneers to blaze new paths westward—both along the Mormon Trail and the other westward migration routes—and the hardships overcome by these hardy individuals, will be appropriately commemorated by the passage of this legislation. I urge my colleagues to approve the committee substitute to H.R. 6900.

EXHIBIT 1

WESTWARD IN '47

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

On the twenty-first of July, 1847, Orson Pratt accompanied by Erastus Snow preceded the main part of the vanguard company down the canyon. Taking a single saddle horse they forced a trail through dense thickets and over dangerous boulder-strewn mountain sides. Up steep and dangerous grades to the top of a hill where no wagon could hope to follow, they worked their way.

From this summit the two Pioneers saw for the first time a full view of the broad, open valley that was to become the home of the mighty people of which the Pioneer company was the advance guard.

The blue waters of the Great Salt Lake lay flashing and shimmering in the distance, and the two trail blazers drank in every little detail of the satisfying, inspiring view of the valley below. They thrilled at the sight of its streams, creeks and lakes and its towering snow-capped peaks that ringed this beautiful valley.

A shout of joy broke from their lips and they waved their hats in the air. Then they descended from their hilltop lookout post to the plateau below where the main company, was fast overtaking the vanguard in Emigration Canyon. The rear company, with the sick president, was proceeding down East Canyon. On the twenty-second they camped here; the twenty-third found the president's party in a secluded little birch grove, where, it was hoped, their leader would regain some of his lost strength.

CHAPTER NINETEEN

In the forenoon on the twenty-fourth of July, 1847, the last of the Mormon Pioneer company's rovered wagons rolled out of the enclosing ravines of Emigration Canyon.

Brigham Young, the Leader—the founder of Utah—looked for the first time upon the full glory of the Valley of the Great Salt Lake.

The creaking of wagon wheels came to a stop, each shout to tardy oxen, each crack of whip became suddenly silent as the Leader's searching eyes traveled across the valley. The muted song of a thrush, the chirp of a cricket and the distant roar of a mountain torrent were the only sounds heard, as the Leader's eyes seemed to drink in the whole scene.

A certain inward penetrating power gave a prophetic quality to that inspired gaze as it saw more than any other mortal eye in the Pioneer company.

Brigham Young's voice broke the stillness.

"This is the place."

And indeed it was. The place to which myriads of industrious frugal settlers could flock from afar to turn the unfriendly soil into fertile fields and beckoning orchards.

Forts and dugouts and log cabins were to blossom into pleasant hamlets; villages into towns and cities. Progress would come with the science of agriculture, of mining, of education.

The former realm of the red man would become a hive of industry and progress of which all Utahns, all Americans could be justly proud.

Brigham Young, the Leader, had the insight. He saw, one hundred years ago as clearly as if with mortal eye, the sun-parched valleys of the inter-mountain West blossoming and burgeoning into the lovely spot of beauty and progress of which this mighty nation is justly proud.

"This, indeed, is the place!"

PIONEER DAY: 1978

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I am especially pleased that the Senate has agreed to consider the historic trails legislation—which includes the Mormon Trail—today, because today is the 131st anniversary of the arrival of the Mormon pioneers in the valley of the Great Salt Lake. It is an occasion in which the people of Idaho join with our sister State to the south, Utah, in celebrating each year.

The history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the West is a remarkable story of colonization; of bringing civilization to a vast, untamed wilderness; and of making the deserts bloom and cities grow. But above all, it is the history of a remarkable people who fled persecution in pursuit of a new life where they would be free to worship, live, and prosper.

The Mormon contribution to the history of Idaho is not only significant, it is ongoing. Throughout the past century, Mormons have been leaders in the settlement, growth, and prosperity of the Gem State.

The Mormons were the first settlers in what was to become Idaho. Fort Lemhi was established in 1855, and 5 years later, Mormon pioneers established the first permanent town in Idaho, Franklin. They also established the first permanent school and were the first to practice extensive irrigation, a necessity in an arid land.

From these humble beginnings in the intermountain West, the LDS Church has grown and prospered into an international organization. Throughout the world, young men and women give 2 years of their life, without pay, to serve their church as missionaries. Following the precept that "the glory of God is intelligence," the church supports one of the most extensive educational systems in the world. And in time of emergency, the church—drawing upon reserves of food and clothing purposely put away against a time when it may be needed—is able to move quickly to alleviate suffering. When the Teton Dam broke in Idaho 2 years ago, the first relief workers on the scene were scores of Mormon volunteers, drawn from throughout the West, who fed and clothed and housed hundreds of homeless victims, without regard to faith. Federal disaster relief administrators would be well advised to examine closely this remarkable effort on the part of ordinary citizens, who responded instinctively and without hesitation in a time of great need.

Mr. President, in commemorating Pioneer Day this year, I think it is also appropriate to mention a recent event that took place in Nauvoo, Ill., the 19th century headquarters of the LDS Church before persecution forced the church to move West. On June 27 and 28, the Relief Society of the church dedicated a new monument to women at Nauvoo. The monument consists of a heroic central sculpture of a woman, supplemented by 12 life-size figures which admirably express the multifaceted nature of woman's vital role in society.

In speaking of this monument, Relief Society President Barbara B. Smith said:

This monument is a statement of faith in God and faith in self. It expresses our hope for the future, inspires courage to meet adversity, and offers direction that will lead us to do much good.

The Relief Society is the oldest and largest organization for women in the world. It was founded under the direction of the young prophet, Joseph Smith, on March 17, 1842, in Nauvoo. From the beginning the Relief Society's purpose has been to provide an organization through which women might give compassionate service, continue their pursuit for knowledge, and meet the current needs of the women, their husbands, their families, and their communities.

The Relief Society has been a forerunner in meeting the current needs of its women. For example, the Relief Society played a pivotal role in persuading the Utah Territory to give women the right to vote in February 1870, just 2 months after the Wyoming Legislature gave its women the vote. In 1887, the Congress of the United States took away the right of franchise from Utah women by passage of the Edmund-Tucker Act. Subsequently, prominent leaders in the Relief Society became active in the national women's suffrage movement and founded the Women's Suffrage Association for Utah in 1889.

The Relief Society continues today to encourage and instruct its members to use their talents and capacity for caring for the good of the community.

My wife, Bethine, had the privilege and pleasure of representing the First Lady, Mrs. Carter, at the dedication of the Relief Society monument in Nauvoo to women everywhere.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of Bethine's remarks at the dedication ceremonies, together with Mrs. Carter's message on the occasion of the ceremonies, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS BY MRS. FRANK CHURCH

Love and the gift of life seem especially close to me this year: a 31st wedding anniversary for Frank and me; a mother who will be 91 years young; a son who becomes 21; and our first grandchild to be born. How touched I am by the words of Mary Louise Young:

"Revolving in celestial circles
In the endless self-repeating spirals of my days . . ."

So it was with a sense of personal joy and thanks that I accepted the kind invitation of Barbara Smith and her sisters to take part in the dedication of this wonderful park.

My husband and I have long enjoyed a close association with the L.D.S. Church. Many dear friends of ours in Idaho are members of the Relief Society.

Who would have thought, here in Nauvoo in 1842, when the Relief Society was first formed, that it was destined to become the largest organization of women in the world! This extraordinary growth, moreover, has never caused the Relief Society to lose sight of its original goal of care and service.

In these difficult years of flux, your contribution to family stability is a sterling example for all. The same may be said of your dedication to the well-being of your brothers and sisters. The true basis of happiness and self-respect is still to be found in the good done for others.

So I am deeply honored to be your guest at this ceremony, and privileged to represent our First Lady, Mrs. Rosalynn Carter, who has sent to you the following letter for this occasion:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
June 22, 1978.

MRS. BARBARA B. SMITH,
President, Relief Society, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, Salt Lake City, Utah.

DEAR FRIENDS: In the year and a half that I have been First Lady, I have been deeply impressed by the pervasive desire of all Americans to live useful lives, to correct the defects of our society and to make our nation even greater than it already is. Through their devotion to human needs and concerns, women have traditionally been the foremost proponents of that spirit.

I salute the Relief Society's long history of leadership in putting women's talent, courage and capacity for caring to work for the good of the community. And I share your deep sense of pride in the beautiful monument you dedicate to all women here today. Please accept my best wishes on this very special occasion.

Sincerely,

ROSALYNN CARTER.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I will take only a moment of the Senate's time to express my appreciation to the leadership of the Senate for making it possible for us to insure the timing of the passage of this legislation in the Senate on Pioneer Day, because I know that that particular symbolism will add to the pleasure with which the members of the LDS Church greet the passage of this legislation.

Pioneer Day is a matter of great celebration in our State, as the people recount the very great hardships that their ancestors faced as they crossed this Nation seeking religious freedom. It was one of the great political, social, and religious events of the last century when these people completed their migration, found their home, and solidified their home throughout Utah, southern Idaho, and the Intermountain West.

So it is my pleasure to join with my colleague from Idaho in urging the passage of this legislation, and I again thank the leadership for making it possible to take this action on this date of particular significance.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement of the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR DOMENICI:
THE MORMON TRAIL

The truths of religion are never so well understood as by those who have survived great trials of body and spirit with only the strength of their faith to sustain them.

In the violence following the murder of Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, the strength of the Mormon faith proved wonderous when Brigham Young led that little band from Nauvoo in the sub-zero weather of February, 1846. They reopened a very old trail to the West when they followed the north branch of the Platte River through the South Pass to Fort Laramie. After crossing Iowa to the banks of the Missouri River, they had established their Winter Quarters, which we now know, of course, as Omaha, Nebraska. Their journey over the old Oregon Trail to Fort Bridger in Wyoming, and the final push by a chosen few over mountains, through Echo Canyon, and finally to camp in Emigration Canyon was a test of strength through faith which we still look upon with awe and the highest admiration.

On July 24, 1847, the group emerged from Emigration Canyon into the vast plain that was the basin of the Great Salt Lake, and for the thousands of emigrants who were to follow them, established the route of the Mormon Trail.

Others have written for their religion, fought for it, died for it, but these men and women of the Mormon faith lived their religion.

Then as now the great hope of society was to be found in the character of individuals. If it is true that you must look into people as well as at them, then one sees the families who walked the Mormon Trail as walking by faith, not by sight, with great community and cooperation to give them strength.

We think to make belief in miracles impossible with science, yet science itself is perhaps only a belief in miracles best authenticated by history and by daily life. For whatever reason, the Mormon Trail stands as testimony to great people, living and working for an even greater good.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, first let me, as a Senator from Utah, thank our distinguished colleague the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH) for expediting this matter so that it could be approved on July 24, the anniversary of our Mormon pioneers entering the Salt Lake Valley on July 24, 1847.

I am pleased to join with Senators CHURCH, HATCH, and others in support of legislation establishing a system of historic trails for the Nation, and designating the Mormon Trail as a historic trail. We are happy to see the Mormon Trail move toward official designation by Congress, in tandem with other significant trails from our Nation's history.

I wish to emphasize, Mr. President, that this legislation does not contemplate the taking of land not already in the public domain. Under the legislation, areas already owned by the Federal Government where the original Mormon pioneers trekked would be marked and designated by the Secretary of the Interior. Areas outside the Federal domain could also be designated by the Secretary if the owners of the land, State or local governments or private owners, were willing. We have no desire to create an enormous linear park, which could have serious land use implications. In fact, much of the Mormon Trail parallels segments of the Federal highway system. In my opinion, what would be most appropriate would be historic markers, some interpretive displays, conservation of trail remnants, and so on. To some extent, that has already been done along the Mormon Trail; our bill would simply permit completion of the preservation of this important part of our pioneer heritage.

Such preservation is important, Mr. President. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of the Mormon exodus on the cultural patterns of the people of the State of Utah. Those whose ancestors died or were born along that trail of tears all experience a unifying feeling, a oneness with forebears willing to undertake any sacrifice for the sake of liberty of worship. Those who live in Utah who are not descended from the original pioneers share a similar heritage, and must stand in awe of the accomplishments of these simple people of the last half of the 19th century.

As transportation becomes easier, it is harder and harder to communicate to our children the stark reality of the trek West. Now we drive it in a day or two; or we fly it in an hour or two. Unless we preserve the remnants of the trek, it will become impossible for us to identify with those who died pushing handcarts from Missouri, or who walked barefoot in the snow from winter quarters. The trek westward along the Mormon Trail is one of the great unifying experiences in the lives of a people. We want to preserve that experience. This bill will help us do it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to join my colleague from Utah in thanking the distinguished Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH) and the distinguished Senator from Wyoming (Mr. HANSEN) for the work they have done on this bill, and also for expediting it so that it could come forward on this particular day, a very significant day to our pioneer folks out there in Utah.

Mr. President, in support of the omnibus trail bill before the Senate today, I would like to extend the following remarks regarding the Mormon Trail.

The Mormon Trail is unique in the annals of American history. It was literally paid for in enormous measures of human sacrifice and death. The trail itself, covers a distance of approximately 1,300 miles from Nauvoo, Ill. to Salt Lake City, Utah, and passes through Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, and Utah. It is of major significance in the history of developing the West. It was over this same trail that many of the "gold rush" miners and the settlers of both the Northwest Territory and colorful Southwest traveled. Over this trek 10,000 Morman faithful and tens of thousands of other pioneering Americans left the established boundaries of the United States in a great exodus and carved new homes; new towns, and productive lives out of an unknown and often hostile environment. From the original vanguard led by Brigham Young in 1846–47 until the linking of the transcontinental railroad at Promitory Point, Utah, in 1869, more than 50,000 struggled to make a new life. The results of their efforts are evidenced by the vast metropolitan and rapidly burgeoning areas of the Western United States.

Unfortunately, some segments of that once heavily traveled trails have disappeared or become inaccessible as towns, highways, fences, industry, canals, reservoirs, and the clutter of civilization has spread across the landscape. Many of the precious artifacts and historical landmarks are now gone. Except for a few isolated wagon ruts, most evidence of the trail itself has long vanished.

Dr. Stanley B. Kimball, professor of history at Southern Illinois University and an expert on the trail has said:

> The physical dimension of our pioneer trail heritage is slowly disappearing. We should identify and preserve what is left.

Mr. President, it is left to us to preserve that rich heritage of not only a people, but a nation. By enacting the measure before us we can designate, not only the Mormon Trail, but other historically meaningful trails as part of the National Trails System.

The U.S. Department of the Interior's Bureau of Outdoor Recreation has done a careful evaluation of the trail based on detailed mapping and studies by Dr. Kimball who has traveled over most of the trail nine different times. In describing the significance of this trail, Dr. Kimball explained:

> Even though in most places, little or no physical evidence of the trail is visible, there is powerful impact in being able to see the same ground the pioneers travelled. The experience of the trail, the crossing of the plains, became a great event, not only in the lives of the pioneers, but in the minds of their descendants. It became a rite of passage, a test of faith.

The Mormon experience in crossing the Plains was different from other Americans who came West. The pioneers uprooted and transplanted a whole people, an entire culture.

Existing national monuments, Federal, State, and local recreation areas, and scenic tour routes provide a full range of outdoor recreation opportunities along or accessible from the Mormon Trail. Many historic points along the 1,300-mile route have high potential for historical interpretation and/or recreation. National recognition would enhance the importance of historic values commemorated at these sites and encourage preservation and interpretive facilities for a trail now considered only part of a broad migration corridor to the West.

There are significant segments of the trail and adjacent trail which were used by early-day Indians, ancient cliff-dwelling tribes, explorers, missionaries fur traders, mountain men, and the fabled miners. Ghost towns, mining operations, museums, and reconstructed "boom towns" associated with the Old West are in evidence along the trail corridor.

Many developed geographical regions along the trail provide excellent opportunities for fishing, camping, hiking, picnicking, and historical interpretation. Such areas include rivers, reservoirs, wayside rest areas, historical sites, and recreation developments.

The story of the Mormon Trail and the thousands who experienced hardship on their journey to the valley of the Great Salt Lake have been described in many publications and diaries. Public interest in preserving, commemorating, and interpreting the history of the Mormon Trail has been evident for many years. State and local historical societies in my State of Utah, as well as other States where the trail is located, have erected various markers and memorials along the route.

The National Trails System Act of October 2, 1968, established a policy for a national system of trails and identified the Mormon Trail for future study and possible inclusion in the act. The Department of the Interior has prepared an excellent report pursuant to the National Trails System Act to determine the feasibility and desirability of designating the Morman Trail as a component of the National Trails System. Their findings indicate among other things that this route of the Morman pioneers merits national recognition commemorating its unique place in American history. In addition, 23 segments of the route, totaling approximately 700 miles and approximately 75 morman trail sites were identified as having a high potential for recreation, historical interpretation, and public use. The Department of the Interior has expressed willingness to assist in any way in implementing the recommendations promulgated in the report.

Mr. President, I believe it is important to point out that this bill does not ask for acquisition of any Federal, State, or privately owned lands. It merely provides for a designation of the trail in order to establish and preserve what remains for the enjoyment of those utilizing public highways and facilities along the trail route. Our posterity will be the beneficiaries of a piece of history that will be visibly marked and developed. This will be of immeasurable value as the number of uses for land continue to grow.

I wholeheartedly accept the recommendations of the Department of the Interior study and urge the Senate to vote favorably on the passage of this bill.

PIONEER DAY

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, first by tradition, and then by State law, the 24th of July has become a holiday in the State of Utah. It was on that day 131 years ago that the first party of Mormon pioneers entered the Salt Lake Valley and established the State of Deseret, later to become Utah. It was on that day that the great Mormon leader, Brigham Young suffering from the exhausting 102-day trip across the Great Plains and over the rugged Rocky Mountains, rose from a carriage bed and declared, "This is the right place."

Thirty-one years ago, on the occasion of the 100th anniversary of the entry into the valley of the Great Salt Lake, a monument unveiled appropriately at the mouth of Emigration Canyon near the place where the Mormon leader made his famous declaration. This Is The Place Monument, at the Pioneer Trails State Park, is a lasting symbol of the westward search by the Mormon party, where they could freely exercise their way of life without outside interference or persecution.

When the pioneers first entered the valley they found a desert wasteland with what was reported to be only one growing tree as far as the eye could see. That wasteland, as predicted by Brigham Young, has been made to "blossom like a rose." One hundred and thirty-one years later Salt Lake City leaves a lasting impression on vistors as clean and open, with wide streets and friendly people.

The Mormon pioneer trek was not unlike the search for a better way of life which has been repeated several times over in the history of the world. With each search, and the resulting new culture, has come the traditional celebration to recognize the struggle of those courageous ones who led the way and found the reward. Today is that day for the Utah pioneers and the people of the Beehive State.

We from Utah like to claim some credit for the lasting heritage of pioneering which this great land enjoys. The westward migration is the essence of the American dream. Here, it was said, is a place where a person who works hard can become anything he wants to become.

I believe it is a privilege to serve in a body of men who, each day, chart new regions, walk new paths, and are pioneering a new era in the American way of life which is taking its first steps into a third century. My mormon pioneer heritage gives me confidence and courage to know that others will face the unchartered course and find the answers for the future generations.

And so, in conclusion, I pause to reflect on that day, and invite my colleagues to join with me in remembering the western pioneer. Let us pay tribute to his contributions to the development of our lands which he boldly settled for our benefit, and the benefit of the United States. Let us remember this Utah holiday—Pioneer Day.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with a number of my colleagues today in strong support of the bill before the Senate which would amend the National Trails System Act to include a new category of historic trails. Of particular interest to me and to Alaskans is the designation of the Iditarod Trail as a national historic trail.

For the past two Congresses I have sponsored legislation which designated the Iditarod Trail in Alaska as a national historic trail. I am delighted to at last see this legislation come before the Senate. The House has already passed a version of this legislation and I hope we can see swift enactment of this legislation this summer.

The Iditarod Trail with its major branches and alternate routes stretches over 2,000 miles between Seward and Nome. Alaska. The various routes were used first by Native peoples and later by those seeking gold during the famous Alaskan Gold Rush days at the turn of the century. Some segments were used in the stampede to the Nome beaches in 1898–1909. However, the name of the trail is taken from the gold fields along the Iditarod River. The rush to the Iditarod in 1910 was the last major gold rush in North America and closed out one of the most colorful eras of American history.

The trail which was blazed through the Alaskan wilderness to Iditarod continued to be used until the mid-1920's when the age of the "bush pilot" came in. Primarily a winter route, the trail served as the only communication and transportation link with the "outside" for Nome, Iditarod and many other gold mining boom towns during the 6 to 8 months when the rivers and seas were frozen.

Today, a few segments near population centers are being used as recreational trails by dog mushers, cross-country skiers, snowmachiners, hikers and other outdoor enthusiasts. Some segments are still used as winter transportation links between remote Alaskan villages. Other segments have been overlain by roads and the Alaskan Railroad, while still other segments remain as faint to nonexistent traces through Alaska's "bush." In commemoration of the historic trail and to the vital role of dog mushing in Alaska's history, a 1,000-mile dogsled race has been held annually since 1973 between Anchorage and Nome. This race remains the supreme test of man and dog with travel conditions and stamina requirements varying little from those experienced by mushers 80 years ago.

With regard to the specific bill before us, I believe that the specific concerns which I expressed before the Energy and Natural Resources Committee have been addressed in this legislation or in the committee report. However, for the purpose of establishing legislative history I would like to discuss several points which conceivably could result in future problems. The first is the question of off-road vehicle uses. It is my understanding that the amendment to section 7 of the National Trails System Act contained in this bill would permit the use of off-road vehicles on segments of historic trails where such use is currently allowed. Off-road vehicle use, especially snowmachine use, is perhaps the primary use of many segments of the proposed Iditarod Trail for basic transportation as well as recreational purposes. Because the Iditarod is primarily a winter trail and because off-road vehicle use under normal use patterns poses no threat to the historic resources or integrity of the trail, any prohibition of this use would be totally unwarranted.

Another concern which I know is shared by others supporting this historic trails legislation is that the designation of a route not be used to impede or prohibit the normal upgrading and work on existing transportation systems which may be designated as part of the historic trail or to block the development of new transportation or utility systems across or along portions of the route. This is especially important in the case of the Iditarod where the route almost bisects Alaska, a State where our surface transportation system is currently minimally developed, and future expansions are as yet unknown but possible. The bill before us addresses this future problem by exempting historic trails from the provisions of section 4(f) of the National Transportation Act which imposes tight restrictions on the construction of transportation projects across park and recreation areas and historic properties. In addition, I understand that the committee report on this bill contains language which clarifies that designation of historic trails is not to prohibit any future construction of utility or transportation systems along or across portions of the trail or route. I would welcome any assurances that the committee managers of the bill could make to me in this regard for the purpose of clarifying the intent of this bill and possibly avoid future problems of interpretation.

I thank the committee members for their careful consideration of this important legislation and their expedition in moving it to the floor. I urge my colleagues to vote positively on this measure.

Will designation of a national historic trail in any way prohibit the use of off-road vehicles along the route or trail where that use is currently permitted?

Mr. CHURCH. No, as long as they do not "substantially interfere with the nature and purposes of the trail."

Mr. GRAVEL. Will designation of a national historic trail in any way prohibit the granting of a right-of-way for a transportation or utility system crossing pursuant to normal regulations governing such rights-of-way across Federal lands?

Mr. CHURCH. Again, the answer to the Senator's question is "No."

Mr. GRAVEL. Will designation of a national historic trail imply that such a route or trail in its entirety be treated as a historic place or site as that term is used in the National Historic Preservation Act or in section 4(f) of the National Transportation Act?

Mr. CHURCH. No, it will not.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, would the distinguished floor manager of the bill yield for a question?

Mr. CHURCH. I would be happy to yield to my colleague.

Mr. McCLURE. In the last Congress, both you and I sponsored legislation which was subsequently signed into law that requires the executive branch to study the desirability of designating the Nez Perce Trail as a national scenic trail. In the hearings on that bill I remember the Senator raising the point that the Nez Perce Trail should really be classified as a national historic rather than national scenic trail. Am I correct?

Mr. CHURCH. The Senator from Idaho is correct. Although the route followed by Chief Joseph and the Nez Perce Indians during their famous retreat of 1877 is one of stunning beauty, it has always been my belief that the deep historical value of the trail should be recognized directly.

Mr. McCLURE. I agree with my colleague. It really should be a national historic trail. By passage of this legislation, we will be establishing a new category within the National Trails System to insure that trails such as the Nez Perce Trail are properly identified and marked, so that their historical significance is not forgotten.

It is my understanding that this bill would make certain changes in the generic language of the 1968 act so that routes suggested for study by Congress be studied for the feasibility and desirability of their future designation as either national scenic or national historic trails.

Mr. CHURCH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLURE. So then the Nez Perce Trail, and other similar routes which are presently under study will be assessed from both a scenic and historical perspective?

Mr. CHURCH. That is the intent of the committee.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I move action on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the committee amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H.R. 6900) was read a third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

An act to establish a National Historic Trails Category within the National Trails System, to designate certain historic routes as National Historic Trails, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, with Senators permitted to speak up to 5 minutes therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Chirdon, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

At 1:35 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives delivered by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

H.R. 1751. An act for the relief of Lucy Davao Jara Graham;

H.R. 2555. An act for the relief of Michelle Lagrosa Sese;

H.R. 2945. An act for the relief of Mrs Amelia Doria Nicholson;

H.R. 3995. An act for the relief of Habib Haddad;

H.R. 4607. An act for the relief of William Ok;

H.R. 5928. An act for the relief of Miss Coralia Raposa;

H.R. 11504. An act to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, provide an economic emergency loan program for farmers and ranchers, extend the Emergency Livestock Credit Act of 1974, and for other purposes;

H.R. 12933. An act making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, and for other purposes; and

H.J. Res. 945. A joint resolution making an urgent appropriation for the black lung program of the Department of Labor, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1978.

The enrolled bills and joint resolution were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore (Mr. EASTLAND).

At 1:50 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives delivered by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bills in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 13467. An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1978, and for other purposes.

H.R. 13468. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were read twice by their titles and referred as indicated:

H.R. 13467. An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1978, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations; and

H.R. 13468. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

COMMUNICATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following communication, together with accompanying papers, which was referred as indicated:

EC-4022. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a request for supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year 1978 in the amount of $10 million and an amendment to the request for appropriations for the fiscal year 1979 in the amount of $57,500; to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. DECONCINI, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, and an amendment to the title:

S. 1423. A bill to establish a Council on Judicial Tenure in the judicial branch of the Government, to establish a procedure in addition to impeachment for the retirement of disabled Justices and judges of the United States, and the removal of Justices and judges whose conduct is or has been inconsistent with the good behavior required by article III, section 1 of the Constitution (together with additional views) (Rept. No. 95-1035).

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. STENNIS, from the Committee on Armed Services:

Lt. Gen. John William Pauly, [redacted], U.S. Air Force, to be general.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 3333. A bill for the relief of Shon Ning Lee; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MUSKIE:

S. 3334. A bill to designate the building known as the Federal Building in Portland, Maine, as the "Frederick G. Payne Building"; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (by request):

S. 3335. A bill to amend the John F. Kennedy Center Act relating to certain administrative functions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. PAUL G. HATFIELD (for himself, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. MATHIAS) (by request):

S. 3336. A bill to enable the Department of Justice and the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts to provide services and special supervision to drug dependent Federal offenders in an efficient and effective manner; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHILES (for himself and Mr. STONE):

S. 3337. A bill to terminate, in the year 1979, further construction of the Cross-Florida Barge Canal project, to adjust the boundary of the Ocala National Forest, Florida, and for other purposes; to the committee on Environment and Public Works and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, jointly, by unanimous consent.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. MUSKIE:

S. 3334. A bill to designate the building known as the Federal Building in Portland, Maine, as the "Frederick G. Payne Building"; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

FREDERICK G. PAYNE BUILDING

● Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, I offer legislation today to name the Federal Building at 151 Forest Avenue in Portland, Maine, the "Frederick G. Payne Building."

Fred Payne was a distinguished Governor of Maine and a member of the Senate for 6 years from 1953 to 1958. I am sure that those of my colleagues who served with him remember him not only as a skilled parliamentarian and Presiding Officer, but as an engaging and friendly man. His interests were wide, the careers he chose were varied, and the accomplishments of his political years continue to benefit the people of his State and the Nation.

He had a keen financial mind, and was a skilled administrator, whose accomplishments as Governor included broadening Maine's tax base, improving the lot of State employees, and accelerating the State's highway construction program.

During his years in the Senate, he took an active interest in the problems of small business, and in the human questions posed by the nuclear age, among mnay other interests.

I know my sadness at Fred Payne's death last month is shared by my colleagues who served with him.

And I hope they will agree with me that it would be a fitting tribute to Fred Payne to name the new Federal Building in Portland the "Frederick G. Payne Building." ●

---

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (by request):

S. 3335. A bill to amend the John F. Kennedy Center Act relating to certain administrative functions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill at the request of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. The bill would accomplish two results that the Kennedy Center's Directors consider desirable for the Center's continued support of the performing arts and its presentation of educational programs. The two major provisions are: First, waiver of the Kennedy Center's interest obligation from its bond indebtedness to the U.S. Treasury and the replayment of the $20.4 million principal in equal annual payments; and second, the National Park Service would assume the responsibility of all building services except backstage services.

The Kennedy Center is a monument to a beloved President. We are all indebted to the Center's Directors and staff for the many productions that have been presented there. We need the Center, and we must act to insure its future. I am not, however, prepared to take a position on this bill as the need for the proposals has yet to be established. I want to assure my colleagues and the Directors of the Center that I will give these proposals serious consideration in the Environment and Public Works Committee in my capacity as chairman of the ad hoc Subcommittee on Buildings and Grounds.●

By Mr. PAUL G. HATFIELD (for himself, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. MATHIAS) (by request):

S. 3336. A bill to enable the Department of Justice and the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts to provide services and special supervision to drug dependent Federal offenders in an efficient and effective manner; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONTRACT SERVICES FOR DRUG DEPENDENT FEDERAL OFFENDERS ACT OF 1978

● Mr. PAUL G. HATFIELD. Mr. President, at the request of the Department of Justice, and on behalf of the members of the Subcommittee on Penitentiaries and Corrections of the Committee on the Judiciary—Senators DECONCINI, MATHIAS and myself—I am pleased today to introduce the "Contract Services for Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act of 1978," which will assure effective implementation of title II of the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966, as amended, by consolidating the authority for supervisory care for drug dependent persons in a single agency.

In addition to its recommendation by the Department, the Judiciary Conference of the United States, the General Accounting Office, and the Drug Abuse Task Force of the Domestic Council of the White House, this legislation is strongly supported by the Federal agencies directly affected by it: the Federal Bureau of Prisons of the Department and Division of Probation of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

In 1966, Congress authorized supervisory drug aftercare for drug dependent offenders following their release to the community after conviction, or after having served a term of incarceration, in title II of the Narcotics Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966 (18 U.S.C. 4255). In 1972, aftercare was extended to all Federal offenders with drug dependency problems by Public Law 92-293.

Authorized services that might be provided to such offenders are varied and include vocational guidance, education and training, job placement and skill testing, psychological evaluation, psychotherapy, detoxification, temporary housing, residence in a community center and emergency financial assistance. Under current statutes, the Bureau of Prisons has the contracting, monitoring, and funding authority for drug aftercare. Drug aftercare services are provided by contractors almost exclusively on an outpatient basis, although there is a provision for temporary placement in a residential program. The Bureau of Prisons contracts with public and private agencies and individuals for all aftercare services.

Mr. President, the need for this legislation is demonstrably urgent. The 1972 amendments, which amended the probation of parole laws making probationers, parolees, and mandatory releases eligible for aftercare treatment, also expanded eligibility to include not only those using the so-called hard narcotics, but persons dependent on control substances such as barbituates, amphetamines, hallucinogens, and marihuana. Besides increasing the number of persons under supervision who are placed in aftercare programs, the amendments also increase the probation officer's involvement with aftercare agencies.

As of March 31, 1978, the Division of Probation had a total of 66,628 persons under supervision, 48,981 of those being probationers and 17,647 being on parole. The primary mission of the Division is to enhance the safety of the community people by reducing the incidence of criminal acts by persons under supervision. This is achieved through counseling assistance, surveillance, and restraint of offenders to facilitate their reintegration into society as law-abiding and productive members through the probation and parole process.

As a result of increases in personnel authorized by Congress over the past several years and the establishment by Congress of the U.S. Parole Commission 2 years ago, the probation system now devotes a greater amount of time to the supervision of probationers and parolees than ever before. In a survey conducted in February of this year, the Probation Division identified 15,800 persons under supervision—25 percent of all persons under the supervision of the division—as having a history of drug abuse. Of those 10,457 drug abuse cases were identified as not in treatment because they did not currently need treatment; 463 persons refused treatment, 376 were lacking treatment because a program was not available, and 4,504 persons were identified as being in treatment or in need of treatment according to the survey, the remaining two-thirds of the persons with drug abuse history obviously still demand a greater degree of supervision than do nondrug abusers.

The two most critical components of drug aftercare services for drug dependent offenders are urine surveillance and counseling. Urine surveillance alerts staff to the need for more intensive supervision and also is a means by which an offender can be returned to an institution. Counseling, of course, is crucial if drug dependency is to be reduced and the reintegration process is to be completed successfully. Yet, under existing law, the Division of Probation, which has the heaviest responsibility for the supervision of drug-dependent offenders, has no independent contracting authority to contract for these services, since existing law vests such authority with the Bureau of Prisons.

The Probation Division, then, which executes the bulk of supervisory services for drug-dependent offenders, must depend upon the Attorney General to provide such contract services. An agency providing aftercare service under contract is neither legally nor fiscally responsible to the probation officer supervising the drug addict. The addict can manipulate this division of responsibility. According to the Federal Bureau of Prisons, organizationally, this fact has frustrated effective and functional supervision by the probation officer. Management of the program is cumbersome and leads to confusion and duplication in services and supervision.

To illustrate the problem, under minimum guidelines for surveillance and supervision established by the Division and the Bureau, the Bureau requires agencies under contract to conduct periodic urinalysis in a prescribed manner and to report the laboratory results promptly to the probation officer. The careful and timely execution of these procedures is essential to the management of drug dependent clients. These procedures have, at times, broken down within the contract agency. The probation officer lacks the authority necessary to remedy these difficulties. When problems with the contracts occur, the probation officer must call in a representative of the Bureau of Prisons who is often located a distance from the scene. Present logistics indicate the enormity of the problem. The probation system is composed of 1,697 probation officers serving in approximately 300 field offices throughout 93 of the 95 judicial districts of the United States. It is these people who supervise the drug dependent or potentially drug dependent offender on probation or parole. Yet, the Bureau of Prisons has only 50 community service officers available nationwide to resolve contract problems.

Mr. President, this legislation would remedy that specific but critical problem. The consolidation of the contracting function was recommended both by the Drug Abuse Task Force of the Domestic Council of the White House, in its 1975 "White Paper on Drug Abuse," and, more recently, by the General Accounting Office in its October 1977 review of the Federal Probation System. When this proposal was brought to the attention of the Judicial Conference of the United States in its April 1976 session, the Conference had this to say about that proposal in its report:

> The Committee is of the view that the provision of drug treatment services seems to be a function more appropriate to the Executive Branch than the Judicial Branch. The Committee recognizes, however, that the responsibility for persons on probation and parole rests with the Federal Probation System and that drug treatment services are necessary for the proper operation of the probation system. Aside from the issue of who provides them, services must be available. The Conference was advised that the Committee has endorsed a policy position that if the Executive Branch does not provide these programs and the Congress transfers the responsibility to the probation system, then the probation system must do its utmost to carry out the intent of Congress.

The major functions that would be assumed by the U.S. Probation Service if this bill is passed include: The identification and contracting for the most effective aftercare services available in all communities where there are drug dependent Federal offenders; monitoring of these contractors to assure that the quantity and quality of services agreed upon are provided; administering and monitoring of the client-oriented data acquisition process and national statistical program managed by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, which gathers quantities of data on all persons receiving drug treatment services; and assisting in the development and participation in workshops between Bureau of Prisons Institutional Drug Unit staff and aftercare contractors.

Mr. President, there are several points I wish to emphasize about this legislation. First, it would not alter the authority of the U.S. courts or the U.S. Parole Commission to release an offender to the community or commit him to prison; rather, it is designed only to alleviate one of the inefficiencies that has evolved in 12 years of administering the aftercare program under the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act.

The act would result in more efficient and effective programs for drug dependent offenders and, in addition, would result in financial savings for the Government. Second, these amendments have no direct bearing upon other related Probation Division services such as presentence investigation and preparation of presentence reports; they relate only to the provision for contracting for aftercare services for drug dependent offenders after their entry into the probation or parole system. Finally, I wish to emphasize that passage of this legislation would have no effect upon the budget currently under consideration for fiscal year 1979. The amendments made by this act would not take effect until the beginning of fiscal year 1980. My colleagues on the subcommittee and I know of no opposition to this measure and urge its swift consideration and enactment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following matter be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks: The text of the legislation, and a section-by-section analysis of it; the executive communication to you from the Department of Justice in support of this legislation; testimony in support of this legislation made to the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations by Norman A. Carlson, Director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, and Wayne P. Jackson, Chief of the Division of Probation of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts; and a letter from William E. Foley, Director of the Administrative Office, to Congressman GEORGE E. DANIELSON, chairman of the House subcommittee.

There being no objection, the bill and material were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3336

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Contract Services for Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act of 1978."

SEC. 2. Section 3651 of Title 18, United States Code, relating to suspension of sentence and probation, is amended by deleting from the second to the last paragraph the colon and everything thereafter, and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

SEC. 3. Section 4255 of Title 18, United States Code, relating to supervision in the community of certain convicted offenders, is amended to read as follows:

"An offender who has been conditionally released shall be under the jurisdiction of the United States Parole Commission as if on parole, pursuant to Chapter 311 of this Title.

"The Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts may contract with any appropriate public or private agency or any person for supervisory aftercare of an offender. The Director may negotiate and award such contracts without regard to Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5).".

SEC. 4. (a) To carry out the purposes of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated sums not to exceed $4,006,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980; $4,246,360 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981; and $4,501,140 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982.

(b) The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on October 1, 1979.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS—S. 3336, THE CONTRACT SERVICES FOR DRUG DEPENDENT OFFENDERS ACT OF 1978

Section 1 provides that the Act may be cited as the "Contract Services for Drug Dependent Offenders Act of 1978."

Section 2 strikes from existing law (18 U.S.C. 3651) a provision which accords the Attorney General the authority to certify the availability of suitable drug aftercare programs for probationers and to recommend to the sentencing court termination of status for any program enrollee if he determines that such person can derive no further significant benefits from participation. The provision becomes unnecessary by virtue of the amendments made by Section 3 of the bill, which remand supervisory jurisdiction over drug dependent offenders in contract aftercare programs to the United States Parole Commission under chapter 311 of the Federal Criminal Code (18 U.S.C. 4201 et seq.), for whom the Division of Probation, to which is given contracting and monitoring authority for aftercare services through the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, will function as agent.

Section 3 amends chapter 314 of the Federal Criminal Code (18 U.S.C. 4255), relating to supervision in the community of drug dependent offenders on conditional release, to transfer custody of such offenders to the United States Parole Commission in conjunction with its responsibilities under chapter 311 (18 U.S.C. 4201 et seq.).

Similarly, existing authority given the Attorney General to contract for supervisory aftercare services is transferred to the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, whose Division of Probation is charged with the duty of general supervision over Federal offenders who have been conditionally released either as probationers or parolees. As amended, the revised section would permit the Director to negotiate and award contracts without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5), which requires competitive bidding on all public contracts. Without such an exemption, the Director could be limited seriously in his ability to consider the quality of a program when selecting treatment services; moreover, the nature of drug aftercare services is such that they must often be procured on an emergency need basis. Competitive bidding procedures are complex and time-consuming, and could delay effective acquisition and delivery of quality services. There is precedent in existing law for exempting similar programs from the competitive bidding process, see, e.g., 28 U.S.C. 624(3).

Section 4 authorizes appropriations of $4,006,000, $4,246,360, and $4,501,140 for fiscal years 1980, 1981 and 1982, respectively. Funds appropriated pursuant to the authorization would be utilized by the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts primarily to procure urine testing and counseling services for drug dependent aftercare clients. To effectively serve the existing client population, the Director estimates that a minimum of $3,600,000 would be necessary for contract authority for urinalysis and counseling. In additon, the Director estimates that a minimum of $180,000 would be necessary to implement a second-level program to evaluate generally the drug treatment modalities provided by contract to persons on probation and parole; such a program would better enable the Director to make informed contract-obligation decisions. Both estimates are predicated upon 1978 dollars. Thus, the Director's estimate was adjusted upward for the initial and each succeeding fiscal year to take into account inflation and uncontrollable costs.

The authorized amounts presume that funds for administrative expenses and first-level evaluation costs (continuing evaluation of contract services currently available, establishment of contract standards and professional appraisal of contractor capacities) would be requested through the existing appropriations process for the Judicial branch.

Section 5 provides that the amendments made by the Act shall take effect at the beginning of fiscal year 1980.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D.C., April 7, 1978.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: Enclosed for your consideration is a legislative proposal, entitled the "Contract Services for Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act of 1978", that will transfer from the Department of Justice to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts the authority necessary to contract for services for drug dependent Federal offenders. This legislation would enhance the ability of the Federal criminal justice system to provide U.S. Parole Commission to release an offender following their release to the community after conviction, or after having served a term of incarceration.

This legislative proposal will consolidate the authority for supervisory care for drug dependent persons in a single agency. It does not alter the authority of the Courts or the U.S. Parole Commission to release an offender to the community, but is designed only to alleviate one of the inefficiencies that has evolved from ten years of administering the aftercare provisions of Title II of the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act.

The aftercare services that are being provided to addicted and dependent persons include, but are not limited to, medical, educational, social, psychological and vocational services; as well as corrective and preventive guidance and urine surveillance. Although the scope of aftercare services has changed somewhat since passage of N.A.R.A. in 1966, the Bureau of Prisons has had the responsibility for the aftercare services provided to offenders.

While a convicted Federal offender is imprisoned, he is under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Prisons. When paroled or mandatorily released, however, he is under the supervision of a Probation Officer who serves as an agent of the Parole Commission. An offender on probation is also under the supervision of his Probation Officer.

In this context, the U.S. Probation Officer must provide supervision for offenders who receive services from agencies under contract with the Bureau of Prisons. This arrangement has been cumbersome, and leads to confusion and duplication of services and supervision.

To illustrate the problem, the Bureau of Prisons requires agencies to conduct periodic urinalysis in a prescribed manner, and to report the laboratory results promptly to the Probation Officer. The careful and timely execution of these procedures is essential in the management of drug addicted or drug dependent clients. Frequently these procedures break down within the contract agency, but the U.S. Probation Officer lacks the authority necessary to remedy these difficulties. When problems with the contracts occur, the Probation Officer must call in a representative of the Bureau of Prisons who is often located some distance from the scene. If the U.S. Probation Officer could deal directly with the contractor, operational problems would be resolved more expeditiously and more effectively.

In conclusion, we believe this legislation will result in more efficient and effective programs for addicted and drug dependent offenders.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection from the standpoint of the Administration's program to the submission of this legislation to the Congress.

Sincerely,

PATRICIA M. WALD,
Assistant Attorney General.

STATEMENT OF NORMAN A. CARLSON, DIRECTOR, BUREAU OF PRISONS

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee.

I want to express my appreciation, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to appear before you today to discuss the importance of drug aftercare and the rationale behind the legislative proposal transferring aftercare from the Department of Justice, where it is administered by the Bureau of Prisons, to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. This legislation would enhance the ability of the Federal Criminal Justice System to provide services to drug dependent offenders following their release to the community after conviction, or after having served a term of incarceration.

Without question, drug abuse is one of the nation's leading social problems. Criminal offenders with drug problems are clearly a high risk group. Drug aftercare services give these persons greater supervision in the community, urine surveillance to detect drug use and needed services to assist them in overcoming their problem.

We estimate that 30% of the inmates in federal prisons, and a substantial number of all probationers have a history of drug use (excluding marijuana.) We presently have 162 contracts (with 183 separate units) providing aftercare services to over 2,300 offenders.

Supervisory drug aftercare was authorized by Title II of the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966 (18 U.S.C., 4255.) In 1972, aftercare was extended to all federal offenders with drug dependency problems by Public Law 92-293. Drug aftercare services are performed almost exclusively on an outpatient basis, although there is a provision for temporary placement in a residential program. The Bureau of Prisons contracts with public and private agencies and individuals for all aftercare services.

The services that may be provided are varied. Urine surveillance and counseling are required by BOP from each drug aftercare contractor. Urine surveillance alerts staff to the need for more intensive supervision, and also is a means by which an offender can be returned to an institution. For example, if the offender fails his urine test twice, this can serve as a basis to send him/her to an institution.

Examples of other services that can be and are provided depend on individual needs. They include vocational guidance; education and training; job placement and skill testing; psychological evaluation; psychotherapy; detoxification; temporary housing; residence in a community center; and emergency financial assistance.

Under current statute (18 U.S.C. 4255) the Bureau of Prisons has the contracting, monitoring and funding authority for drug aftercare. The offenders in the program, however, are under the supervision of the U.S. Probation Office. An agency providing aftercare service is neither legally nor fiscally responsible to the U.S. Probation Officer supervising the drug addict. The addict can manipulate this division of responsibility. Organizationally, it has frustrated the effective function of supervision by the U.S. Probation Officer. Management of the program is cumbersome, and leads to confusion and duplication of services and supervision.

To illustrate the problem, the Bureau of Prisons requires agencies to conduct periodic urinalysis in a prescribed manner, and to report the laboratory results promptly to the Probation Officer. The careful and timely execution of these procedures is essential in the management of drug dependent clients. These procedures have, at times, broken down within the contract agency. The U.S. Probation Officer lacks the authority necessary to remedy these difficulties. When problems with the contracts occur, the Probation Officer must call in a representative of the Bureau of Prisons who is often located a distance from the scene. If the U.S. Probation Officer could deal directly with the contractor, operational problems would be resolved more expeditiously and more effectively.

The major functions that would be assumed by the U.S. Probation Service if the legislation is passed include the identification and contracting for the most effective aftercare services available in all communities where there are drug dependent federal offenders; monitoring of these contractors to ensure that the quantity and quality of services agreed upon are provided, administering and monitoring of the Client Oriented Data Acquisition Process, a natural statistical program managed by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, which gathers quantities of data on all persons receiving drug treatment services; and assisting in the development and participation in workshops between BOP institutional drug unit staff and aftercare contractors.

In summary, this legislation will consolidate the authority for supervisory aftercare for drug dependent persons in a single agency. It does not alter the authority of the Courts or the U.S. Parole Commission to release an offender to the community, or commit him to prison, but is designed only to alleviate one of the inefficiencies that has evolved from 12 years of administering the aftercare program. It should result in more efficient and effective programs for drug dependent offenders and result in financial savings for the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity which you have given me to talk about the aftercare program and the proposed transfer of this function to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. This concludes my remarks, and I would be happy to answer any questions.

STATEMENT OF WAYNE P. JACKSON CHIEF, DIVISION OF PROBATION ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee, I am Wayne P. Jackson, chief of the Division of Probation, Administrative Office of the United States Courts. I began my career in corrections in Tulsa, Oklahoma, where I was a police officer from 1954 to 1957. In 1957 I became a probation counselor for the Tulsa County Juvenile Court and in 1959 I was appointed as a United States probation officer in the Northern District of Illinois where I served until 1967. I then joined the Administrative Office as an assistant chief of the Probation Division and became chief of the Division in 1972. In addition to my duties in the Administrative Office, I also serve on the Advisory Corrections Counsel, authorized by Section 5002 of Title 18 of the United States Code, the Board of Directors of the American Probation and Parole Association, and several other boards and committees of correctional organizations. As chief of the Probation Division, and at the request of the Director of the Administrative Office, I appear before you today to address H.R. 12290—The Contract Services For Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act of 1978.

Perhaps at this point a brief description of the organization and function of the Administrative Office, and the Probation Division, and our unique relationship to the Federal Probation System is in order.

The policy-making arm of the United States Courts is the Judicial Conference of the United States. Chaired by the Chief Justice of the United States, one of the functions of the 25-member Conference is the supervision and direction of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

The Administrative Office is responsible for the administrative functions of the United States Courts. Duties such as Financial Management, Personnel, Recordkeeping, etc., and program management responsibilities for bankruptcy, court clerks, public defenders, magistrates, and probation officers are handled by approximately 500 employees in 13 separative divisions.

The Division of Probation discharges the probation-related responsibilities assigned by statute to the Director of the Administrative Office. The 27 staff members of the division include a chief, 3 branch chiefs, 5 regional probation administrators, 4 probation program specialists, 1 editor, 3 pretrial services specialists, 3 data processors, and 7 secretaries. The 16 professionals in the Probation Division are unique to the Administrative Office in that all served as United States probation officers before joining the Probation Division. The Division investigates, evaluates, and enforces performance standards and makes recommendations concerning the work of the United States probation officers.

The office assesses personnel and budget needs of the Probation System, recommends and reviews legislation affecting criminal law and corrections, coordinates training and research programs with the Federal Judicial Center and administers the operation of ten pretrial services demonstration projects established by Title II of the Speedy Trial Act. The Division also provides staff support for sentencing institutes and for the Judicial Conference Committee on the Administration of the Probation System. The five regional probation administrators are assigned areas of the country which parallel the regional assignments of the Federal Bureau of Prisons and the United States Parole Commission. This regionalization enables the division to coordinate institutional and release programs and policies for the Probation System.

Unlike many Federal agencies, the Probation System is not centralized. The employees are directly responsible to the courts they serve. The system is composed of 1,697 probation officers serving in approximately 300 field offices throughout 93 of the 95 judicial districts of the United States. Personnel also include 40 probation officer assistants and a clerical staff of 1,080. The 154 pretrial services agency employees are located in ten demonstration districts. The professional staff of the Probation System is well trained and highly qualified. Minimum qualifications for appointment include a bachelor's degree and not less than two years professional experience. Approximately 40 percent of the officers hold advanced degrees.

The central goal of the Probation System is to enhance the safety of the community by reducing the incidence of criminal acts by persons under supervision. This is achieved through counseling, guidance, assistance, surveillance, and restraint of offenders to facilitate their reintegration into society as law abiding and productive members.

United States probation officers fulfill two principal responsibilities, preparing presentence investigation reports for the United States district courts they serve and providing supervision services for probationers. In addition, United States probation officers, as the official representatives of the United States Parole Commission in matters relating to parole, provide supervision services for individuals released from Federal institutions.

As of March 31, 1978, the Federal Probation System had a total of 66,628 persons under supervision, (48,981 probationers, and 17,647 parolees). During fiscal years 1977 probation officers completed 101,725 investigative reports for the courts, the Parole Commission, the Bureau of Prisons, and United States attorneys. The bulk of these reports, 32,738, were presentence investigation reports. Despite the large numbers of cases and investigative reports, the Probation System, as a result of increases in personnel authorized by Congress over the past several years, now devotes a greater amount of time to the supervision of probationers and parolees than ever before.

H.R. 12230, the bill under consideration today is related to the work of probation officers and the supervision of probationers and parolees having a history of drug-related problems. At present, probation officers call upon both private and public agencies for services which are rendered to these persons. Through contract authority the Attorney General now provides such services. It is the purpose of the bill to transfer this contract authority to the United States Courts.

The Probation Committee advised the Judicial Conference at its April 1976 session that the Director of the Bureau of Prisons had formally proposed the transfer of responsibility for drug treatment from the Bureau to the United States Probation System. The Committee noted that Congress had expressed policy in this area through the passage of Title II of the Speedy Trial Act extending limited contract authority to the Probation System for drug treatment programs and other supportive services for persons on pretrial release. The Conference report for that session contains this statement:

"The Committee is of the view that the provision of drug treatment services seems to be a function more appropriate to the Executive Branch than the Judicial Branch. The Committee recognizes, however, that the responsibility for persons on probation and parole rests with the Federal Probation System and that drug treatment services are necessary for the proper operation of the Probation System. Aside from the issue of who provides them, the services must be available. The Conference was advised that the Committee had endorsed a policy position that if the Executive Branch does not provide these programs and the Congress transfers the responsibility to the Probation System, then the probation system must do its utmost to carry out the intent of Congress."

The position of the Judicial Conference is that the services now being provided are absolutely essential and perhaps should even be expanded. In this regard the General Accounting Office recently completed a review of the management of the Probation System (October 1977). The study included a detailed review in five districts supplemented by visits to other districts, questionnaires to chief judges, chief probation officers and line probation officers, and an extensive review in the Probation Division. One of the major results of the study was the finding that rehabilitation services from public service or Government programs often were not available in the community. Forty-seven of 91 chief probation officers questioned stated that there were persons under supervision in their districts with various needs that community services could not satisfy. Underlying the GAO finding is the recognition of need for these services.

A study in February of this year conducted by the Probation Division sought to identify the drug abuse treatment needs of those under supervision. A survey was conducted to take a one-time picture of drug use and treatment of persons under supervision. For the purposes of this survey a drug abuse case was defined as a person under supervision who had been or was suspected of being involved in the use of drugs or narcotics. That group of persons may or may not have been convicted of a drug violation. The survey identified those in treatment and types of abusers.

The survey identified 15,800 persons under supervision with a history of drug abuse (25% of all persons under supervision). Ten thousand four hundred fifty-seven of those drug abuse cases were identified as not in treatment because they did not currently need treatment. Four hundred sixty-three persons refused treatment and 376 were not in treatment because a program was not available. Four thousand five hundred four persons were identified as being in treatment with 2,688 of those in treatment programs currently funded by the Federal Bureau of Prisons.

While only 5,343 persons out of the total of 15,800 were either in treatment or in need of treatment, the remaining two-thirds of the persons with drug abuse histories still demand a greater degree of supervision than do nondrug abusers. The nature and characteristics of drug abuse demonstrates a tendency to relapse thereby necessitating closer supervision.

The Probation System first became involved with drug aftercare treatment with the passage of Title II of the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966, a program administered primarily by the Federal Bureau of Prisons.

In May of 1972, Public Law 92-293 amended the probation and parole laws making probationers, parolees, and mandatory releases eligible for aftercare treatment. Also, the eligibility was expanded to include not only those using the so-called "hard" narcotics, but persons dependent on controlled substances such as barbiturates, amphetamines, hallucinogens, and marijuna. This law not only increased the number of persons under supervision who were placed in aftercare, but also increased the probation officer's involvement with aftercare agencies.

Until 1975 the Probation System was concerned with securing aftercare treatment, but was not involved in directly furnishing treatment services, or in administering treatment programs. At that time Title II of the Speedy Trial Act gave to the United States Courts the ability to procure services for drug offenders. This ability was limited to the Pretrial Services Agencies in ten judicial districts.

Notwithstanding our concern that drug treatment services are indispensable, the Judicial Conference and its Committee on Probation regard the provision of drug treatment services to be more appropriate to the Executive Branch than to the Judicial Branch. This position was taken in full knowledge of the recent General Accounting Office's suggestion to transfer contracting authority to the Judiciary and of the 1975 White Paper on Drug Abuse, submitted to the President by the Drug Abuse Task Force of the Domestic Council which also recommended this transfer.

The position of the Conference in this regard is based on the realization that the contribution of the Federal courts and the Probation System to the solution of the drug problem, though important, is very small.

Agencies in the Executive Branch, such as the National Institute on Drug Abuse, the Veterans Administration, and the Justice Department's Law Enforcement Assistance Administration have far more extensive programs which the courts could not possibly duplicate. Furthermore, there are extensive state programs, perhaps funded in whole or part by the Federal Government, which are extensive. The Probation System must, in any event, rely on those agencies for assistance.

There is also a potential conflict where courts operating treatment programs of this type may be faced with legal challenges to their operations on which they would then have to decide. Furthermore, the courts would be directly involved in the administration of such controversial medical programs as "methadone maintenance."

The cost would also be significant since the courts system would have to obtain or retain the expert advice needed to operate a program of aftercare drug services, something not now available to it.

These are some of the considerations which led the Conference to question whether this type of operation is a proper judicial function. The Judicial Conference has also considered the difficulties which have arisen over the present arrangement for aftercare services. In September 1975, limitations of aftercare funds led to a reduction in the level of services provided Federal probationers and parolees. In its Fall meeting that year, the Judicial Conference addressed the problem of the reduction in drug abuse funds and the fact that there was little assurance that a person participating in a drug treatment program as a condition of pretrial release could continue that treatment once placed on probation. The Probation Division was asked by the Conference to explore this matter. Contact with field offices indicated that few other Government treatment resources were available. In addition, many that were available could not meet the standards of treatment expected by the Probation System. Few programs provide the broad range of services demanded by the court or Parole Commission.

Mr. Chairman, while we are very much concerned about the propriety of the Judicial Branch having the responsibility for directly providing drug treatment services through contracts or otherwise, we do have problems in satisfying legitimate needs of persons under supervision. Because the need is great, the Judiciary would be willing to take over this contracting responsibility in the event Congress decides we should have it. In that event, however, we would suggest certain changes in the bill.

"(a) That Section 2 of the bill be changed to further amend 18 U.S.C. 3154 by deleting the period from the last line and inserting a colon to be followed by:

Provided, That the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts may negotiate and award such contracts without regard to Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5)."

Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes requires competitive bidding which could limit consideration of the quality of a program when selecting treatment services. This would also slow the process of providing immediate service to those who need it. Drug treatmtnt is often crisis intervention where services may be needed on an emergency basis. If this responsibility is assigned to the Administrative Office then we must be free to be able to provide services without first going through a detailed bidding procedure (precedent has been set in this area in 28 U.S.C. 624(3) wherein the Board of Directors of the Federal Judicial Center may contract for services without regard to Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5).

(b) Section 4 of the bill would amend 18 U.S.C. 4255 by providing that an offender conditionally released as if on parole would be governed by the general parole sections of Chapter 311 (18 U.S.C. 4201–4218). In addition, that section is also amended giving the Director of the Administrative Office contract authority for supervisory aftercare of an offender. We recommend that this section be further amended by adding the following language:

Provided, That the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts may negotiate and award such contracts without regard to Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5).

(c) Regarding the funding of this Act, as set forth in Section 5, we would ask that, if this legislation is enacted, sufficient funds be provided to continue the needed services at a level substantially above that now authorized for the Federal Bureau of Prisons. Additional funding will also be necessary to increase the Administrative Office staff so that we may handle the added responsibilities of this contract authority. An increase in field personnel would be needed to replace the contract supervision function now performed by the community programs officers of the Federal Bureau of Prisons. We further recommend that any contract funds appropriated to carry out the provisions of this Act remain available until expended. This would enable the Administrative Office and the probation officers involved in supervision to continue treatment services without the need to renegotiate contracts on a year-to-year basis.

Finally, if this transfer is approved, we suggest that its effective date be October 1, 1979. This would allow for an orderly transfer of responsibilities from the Federal Bureau of Prisons to the Administrative Office.

CONCLUSION

In summary, Mr. Chairman, the Judicial Conference views the provision of drug offender treatment services for persons under the supervision of the Federal Probation System to be essential; believes that providing these services is an executive function rather than a judicial function; but would be willing to provide services directly if they cannot otherwise be provided, in the interest of assuring their availability.

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF THE U.S. COURTS,
Washington, D.C., June 19, 1978.

Hon. GEORGE E. DANIELSON,
Chairman, Administrative Law and Governmental Relations Subcommittee, Rayburn Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DANIELSON: I write in response to a request of your counsel for a cost analysis of operating contract narcotic aftercare programs within the judiciary. This is a proposed transfer of contract authority from the Federal Bureau of Prisons to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts that would be authorized by the passage of H.R. 12290, the Contract Services for Drug Dependant Federal Offenders Act of 1978. I note that at the markup session held on June 12, 1978, your subcommittee voted to limit the funding authorization of the bill to $3 million per year for 3 years following the effective date of October 1, 1979.

I am compelled not only to submit the requested cost analysis but to respond to the above action taken by your subcommittee as well. As I understand it, the intent of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, in proposing the transfer was to effect the placement of financial and supervision responsibilities for drug dependent probationers and parolees in one agency. From the Bureau's standpoint this was merely to be a transfer of an existing program from one agency to another. The subcommittee, however, reduced authorization below the amount the Bureau of Prisons will spend to operate their aftercare programs during fiscal year 1978. This means that the Administrative Office would, in a year and a half, assume responsibility for more than 160 contracts involving 2,000 to 3,000 Federal offenders with less funding. The Federal Bureau of Prisons anticipates it will spend over $3 million for aftercare programs in fiscal year 1978 alone. The Bureau has also projected funding levels for fiscal years 1979 and 1980 at considerably higher levels than that for 1978. (While the anticipated total for fiscal year 1980 is over $4 million, current budget requests for the Bureau of Prisons show lower figures based upon the expectation that the Administrative Office would assume the contract authority for aftercare services.)

COST ESTIMATE

In February 1978, the Probation Division of the Administrative Office surveyed all persons under probation and parole supervision. The survey identified 2,688 persons under the supervision of the Federal Probation System in aftercare treatment programs funded by Bureau of Prisons contracts. There were 376 cases identified as being in need of treatment, but not in treatment because a program was not available. In round numbers, this is a total of 3,100 person either in contract treatment or in need of that treatment.

The Bureau of Prisons and the Probation Division have established minimum standards for counseling and urine testing for clients enrolled in aftercare treatment. Those standards are not less than one 30-minute session per week of counseling and at least two urine tests per week. Based on an average cost of $5.00 per test, the Probation Division estimates that it would cost $1,600,000 per year for urine testing of the 3,100 clients. Using the counseling standard, and an average cost of $25.00 per hour for counseling, the Division estimates an expense of at least $2,000,000 per year for counseling. The total potential treatment cost at the present time would be $3,600,000 per year. It should be noted that urine testing and counseling are 2 of the 14 services now available to clients under the Bureau of Prisons programs. The additional services, while not used in every case, include methadone (detoxification and maintenance), psychotherapy, temporary housing, therapeutic community placement, and others. Further, the draft legislation has made no allowance for cost increases as a result of inflation.

The Administrative Office expects that the assumption of aftercare contract responsibility will result in several additional costs. While not included in the appropriation for contract services, the subcommittee should be aware that if this legislation becomes law, the judiciary will request funds for evaluation. It is our position that the proper administration of this program would require a two-level evaluation component.

Level one is a continuing evaluation of contract services currently available, to facilitate choice between competing bidders. This includes setting minimum standards and a professional appraisal of the capacities of contractors. It is estimated that initially this would require one full time position in grade GS–14 (currently $30,750 per year), and one full time secretary ($11,523 per year), and $15,000 per year for consultant fees. The latter is necessary since frequently the evaluation would require expertise in toxicology, pharmacology, and other related medical areas.

Level two is a capacity to evaluate generally the drug treatment modalities provided by contract to persons on probation and parole. Persons on Federal probation and parole are a unique group and research should be conducted to aid in identifying the best way to spend the contract dollar. This is an important new capacity that is essential to the proper operation of the program. Without this evaluation capacity decisions on what contract resources to use are made in the dark.

We estimate that this will require a minimum of 6 percent of the funds spent for contracting, or $180,000 per year under the limit in the present bill.

In addition to evaluation, the Administrative Office would develop, in conjunction with the Federal Judicial Center, an extensive training program for all United States probation officers. While the Probation System presently has officers with drug abuse expertise, there are many who have had limited experience in identifying the drug abusing offender. This training would include general areas pertaining to drug abuse and treatment, and concentrate on specific topics such as identifying the drug abuser, characteristics of drug abuse, and treatment modalities. All officers would receive basic training in how to identify the drug abuser with an emphasis on developing skills of detecting addiction.

In addition to training in areas of drug abuse some officers will require training in contract management and monitoring. If this legislation is passed, probation officers will be responsible for many of the duties now handled by the Bureau of Prisons community programs officers. The Probation System does not have field personnel who are skilled in the area of contracting.

If the Probation System assumes full responsibility for this program it is anticipated that with expanded training probation officers will be able to identify additional drug abusing offenders and place them in treatment. With closer supervision and with an increased number of drug abusers identified, an increase in probation personnel will be required. In this event the additional personnel costs would be at least partially offset by a reduction in contract expenditures for counseling.

The Administrative Office will require additional personnel to handle the contract process that would be assigned to us. The Bureau of Prisons has estimated that they administer the drug aftercare programs with the equivalent of five full time staff members. The Administrative Office would require at least that number.

To recapitulate, the contract authority, in 1978 dollars, that we will need in 1980 is as follows:

|---|---|
| Contract authority | $3,600,000 |
| Evaluation | 180,000 |
| Total | 3,780,000 |

Further, we estimate that the costs of administering this program will be $220,000. It is our understanding that the authorization for the appropriation, as contained in H.R. 12290, relates only to contract authorization and not to general administration costs. The latter will be budgeted under the existing appropriation process. Please note also that the above figures do not include any reduction in the Bureau of Prisons budget. We do not have any way of estimating what the appropriate offset figures would be.

SUMMARY

Mr. Chairman, I have tried to point out to the subcommittee the anticipated costs of the Judiciary operating drug aftercare programs. The Judicial Conference of the United States views the provision of drug treatment services for persons under the supervision of the Federal Probation System to be essential; believes that providing these services is an Executive function rather than a Judicial function; but would be willing to provide services directly if they cannot otherwise be provided, in the interest of assuring their availability. I have the general feeling that, to date, this program has not been adequately funded. While we are not asking for a lot of additional funding, we do want enough to do the job right, and so that we do not take on a new program with our hands tied. There are few other Government treatment programs which not only meet the high standards of treatment expected by the Probation System, but also provide the broad range of services demanded by the courts or Parole Commission. Therefore, if the Administrative Office receives authority for supervisory aftercare, that responsibility should be accompanied by sufficient funds to provide the first-class level of service expected from the Federal Probation System.

I hope this report will assist you in your future work on H.R. 12290. Thank you for your thoughtful consideration of our concerns.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM E. FOLEY,
Director.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 224

At the request of Mr. INOUYE, the Senator from Utah (Mr. GARN) was added as a cosponsor of S. 224, to amend title V, United States Code, to allow credit for civil service retirement purposes for time spent by Japanese Americans in World War II internment camps.

S. 2128

At the request of Mr. INOUYE, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. HASKELL) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2128, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to eliminate the adjusted gross income limitation on the credit for the elderly, to increase the amount of such credit, and for other purposes.

S. 2856

At the request of Mr. MORGAN, the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. JOHNSTON) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2856, the Uniformed Services Survivor Benefit Plan Amendments Act of 1978.

S. 2910

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2910, the Adolescent Health, Services, and Pregnancy Prevention and Care Act.

S. 2941

At the request of Mr. MATHIAS, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2941, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that a married individual who files a separate return may be taxed at the same rate as an unmarried individual.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 65

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN) and the Senator from Florida (Mr. STONE) were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 65, to provide for representation of the District of Columbia in Congress.

SENATE RESOLUTION 515

At the request of Mr. HUDDLESTON, the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABOUREZK) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 515, relating to the transportation crisis of farmers and shippers of agricultural commodities.

AMENDMENT NO. 3135

At the request of Mr. HATHAWAY, the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON) was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 3135, intended to be proposed to S. 2778, the PCP Criminal Laws and Procedures Act of 1978.

AMENDMENT NO. 3264

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) and the Senator from Utah (Mr. GARN) were added as cosponsors of amendment No. 3264, intended to be proposed to S. 3075, a bill to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Arms Export Control Act, and for other purposes.

INTERNATIONAL BANKING ACT OF 1978—H.R. 10899

AMENDMENTS NOS. 3283 AND 3286

(Ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.)

Mr. STEVENSON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to H.R. 10899, an act to provide for Federal regulation of participation by foreign banks in domestic financial markets.

● Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I am introducing two amendments to H.R. 10899, the International Banking Act of 1978, which will soon be considered by the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs. I first outlined these amendments at hearings on H.R. 10899 on June 21, 1978, before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions, which is chaired by my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE). Since that time, I have received comments on these proposals from the Federal banking agencies, interested State bank regulators, and domestic and foreign banks. I believe the amendments are sound and workable and will serve to promote the development of international banking facilities throughout the country, and in so doing, the financing of increased U.S. exports to reduce our trade deficit.

The first amendment I propose is a compromise of the controversial issue of whether foreign banks should have greater interstate banking privileges than our own domestic banks. As Chairman Miller of the Federal Reserve stated in his testimony before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions, opinions differ widely about the wisdom of the existing national policy that bars domestic banks from operating full-scale offices across State lines.

Yet, whatever one may feel about that policy, it is incongruous as a matter of national policy that the House of Representatives in H.R. 10899 chose to perpetuate the present situation where foreign banks, but not domestic banks, can operate banking offices on a multistate basis. To quote from Chairman Miller's testimony:

> As of this April, there were 65 foreign banks operating banking facilities in more than one State. Thirty-one of these institutions were operating in three or more States, through agencies, branches, and subsidiaries. There can be no doubt that these multistate facilities give foreign banks a considerable advantage over their domestic competitors. Under the House-passed bill, these multistate operations are certain to grow further. Additional States have passed legislation to allow branches or agencies of foreign banks to begin operations, and the foreign banks will take advantage of those opportunities sooner or later.
> Another oddity of the present structure is that a domestic banking institution, by changing to foreign ownership, can become part of a banking organization with multistate facilities. This possibility is highlighted by the recent announcements by three foreign banks of proposed acquisitions of large domestic banking institutions. The three foreign banks involved already have multistate facilities.

It is remarkable that in a Nation facing increasing foreign competition in every segment of our economy, we would permit discrimination against our own banks in the United States in favor of their foreign competitors, instead of setting the same ground rules for each. I am afraid foreign governments are not similarly inclined, as there is widespread evidence that other governments continue to discriminate against foreign banks, including our own. This is demonstrated in the following memorandum prepared by the Bankers Association for Foreign Trade, which, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM

JUNE 20, 1978.

To: Robert B. Palmer, BAFT President.
From: Samuel H. Armacost, Chairman, BAFT Committee on U.S. Banks Abroad.
Subject: Treatment of U.S. Banks in Foreign Countries.

The purpose of this memorandum is to provide a quick rundown on several areas in which U.S. banks experience discriminatory treatment in foreign countries. The memorandum is the result of a quick study of this matter by the Committee and is not meant to be a comprehensive discussion of all aspects of this problem. However, it should be sufficient to give you a general overview of some major restrictions which affect the operations of U.S. banks abroad.

At the outset, it is important to note the distinction between the treatment of branches of a foreign bank doing business in the host country and the treatment of locally incorporated subsidiaries. Typically, the locally incorporated subsidiaries are entitled by local law to the same treatment as banking entities which are locally organized and locally owned. However, in actual practice such entities may not receive equal treatment. Furthermore, there are substantial costs and other implications involved in establishing locally incorporated subsidiaries, not to mention the problems of securing Federal Reserve permission for the major capital commitments and organizational structures required to establish a local subsidiary overseas, which make it an impractical operating alternative in most instances.

Where they are permitted, branches of foreign banks are more restricted in their activities by a host government than locally organized subsidiaries of a foreign bank. Several countries either do not permit branches at all, or impose limitations on the number of branches a foreign bank may have. Neither Iran nor Portugal, for example, permit foreign banks to open branches at all, but limit them to representative offices. In Spain, foreign banks may not open more than three branches. Brazil also effectively limits participation of foreign banks in their domestic market. Although there is no restriction by law on such activities, in actual practice, most applications by foreign banks for approval by regulatory authorities for operations in Brazil are simply never processed.

Switzerland will only grant a foreigh bank's application for authority to open a branch if reciprocity requirements are met, i.e., if the parent company's country and the country of domicile of the ultimate controlling shareholder would allow a bank organized in Switzerland to conduct a full range of banking business in their respective countries. Germany and Austria also impose restrictions on the opening of branches.

Japan also limits the number of offices a foreign bank may operate, although it is the result of practice rather than law. New market entrants are generally given approval for only one office.

Canada is finalizing legislation which, although it will substantially liberalize the activities in which foreign banks will be permitted to be involved in Canada, retains significant restrictions on their operations. Currently, foreign banks may only operate as Financial Institutions, not as banks, must be licensed by the provincial governments, and are not permitted to accept deposits. The proposed legislation would permit foreign banks to operate in Canada but would require that they establish separately incorporated local subsidiaries. Foreign banks would be limited to five offices, with maximum capitalization of $25 million (or a leveraged capital amount of $500 million). Furthremore, Canada proposes to limit the aggregate share of all foreign banks to 15% of the total Canadian market.

In many countries, branches are restricted in their actual operations once they are established. For example, in Japan, branches of foreign banks may not be licensed to operate as savings or trust institutions and may not issue loans in foreign currency for less than one year. Although branches of foreign banks may lend in yen, they are restricted in the amount of currency which can be exchanged for yen, and regulatory and operating pressures effectively deter foreign banks from soliciting deposits in the local market. Furthermore, branches are totally prohibited from acquiring any interest in domestic financial institutions.

In Spain, branches are not permitted, without the express authorization of the bank of Spain, to obtain outside financing in the domestic market of more than 40 percent of their total investments in securities and credits to Spanish public and private entities, plus the assets represented by their cash reserve. In addition, branches are required, with limited exceptions, to have their portfolios of securities comprised exclusively of public funds and fixed income securities.

In Iran, although foreign banks are permitted to make limited investments in indigenous banks, they may not acquire total ownership. Foreign banking institutions are also limited by law to a 40% equity investment in banking institutions organized in Nigeria.

Restrictions in other areas are numerous. For example, in the United Kingdom, if a banking entity does not obtain eligible status, it cannot discount acceptances with the Bank of England and, therefore, can only offer discount financing at a higher discount rate. A branch of a foreign bank cannot obtain eligible status.

In another area, pursuant to the Industry Act of 1975, interest relief grants for certain projects in development areas (maximum of 2½ percent towards interest) may be made by the government to any authorized bank. However, in actual practice, such grants are made only to U.K. registered banks, and registration is not available to branches of foreign banks.

Finally, we would note that by law in Germany, banking institutions organized in EEC member states are granted the same privileges as banking institutions organized in Germany. The question has been raised as to whether identical privileges should be granted to U.S. Banks under the U.S.-German Friendship Treaty, although no U.S. bank has yet challenged the disparate treatment experienced by U.S. banks in Germany.

I hope this will be of some use to you. If there is anything further I can do, please let me know.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, as a matter of national public policy, therefore, I do not believe that it would be wise for the Congress to enact legislation that gives foreign banks greater privileges than we extend our own banks. It would indeed be a curious precedent for us to set in the international trade and financing field.

That such a policy has been seriously considered has been the result of a somewhat unique confluence of interests between State bank regulators and foreign banks who have jointly sought to preserve a status quo which allows States to permit foreign bank entry, but not the entry of domestic banks located in other States. State bank regulators including the distinguished Commissioner from my State of Illinois, Mr. William Harris, want to attract foreign banks to their State to encourage foreign investment and the development of regional international banking centers throughout the country. I commend the State officials for pursuing this policy and believe they are doing an excellent job in this regard. The increased direct investment, deeper credit markets, and more export financing that can result from such efforts, are factors clearly in the national, as well as local interests. The foreign bankers, as is the prerogative of any businessman, seek maximum profitmaking opportunities and advantages, and they cannot be faulted for taking advantage of the multistate opportunities that have been there. In by meetings, I have always been impressed by their intelligence, candor, and willingness to abide by Federal and State policy.

Under my amendment, foreign banks, as now and as under the House bill, would be free to establish branch or agency offices in any State where this is permissible. However, in the case of a branch established outside of a foreign bank's State of principal banking operations, as determined under H.R. 10899, such branch would be limited to maintaining credit balances, as is currently permissible for agencies, and accepting the types of foreign-source and internationally related deposits permissible for Edge Act international banking corporations under section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act. The deposit limitations would apply only to branches established after a suggested grandfather date of July 27, 1978—the date of scheduled Banking Committee markup. Deposits subject to such limitation would not have to be insured, conforming to the existing treatment of Edge Act deposits. Agencies, as now, would be unfettered since they cannot accept deposits.

This compromise on interstate branching limitations is intended to reconcile equitably the legitimate concerns of Federal and State bank regulatory agencies, and domestic and foreign banks.

My amendment would affirm the right of States to attract foreign banks and foreign investment by allowing foreign bank branches and agencies to be established in any State where permissible. Such branches and agencies could conduct the full range of banking activities necessary to develop international banking and trade opportunities, and service the international needs of their customers. Local credit markets would be broadened and lending competition stimulated since foreign bank branches and agencies under my amendment would be able, with appropriate State approval, to make both domestic and international loans at locations throughout the country.

I believe this amendment meets the "reverse discrimination" problem by narrowly focusing on the key interstate advantage enjoyed by foreign banks—the ability to accept deposits at locations in several States. Branches established after an appropriate grandfather date, and outside of a foreign bank's home State, would be limited to accepting foreign-source deposits and deposits related to international banking and finance transactions, the same limitations applied to the Edge Corporation internatıcnal banking subsidiaries of domestic banks. Effectively, foreign banks subject to the restriction would not be able to accept retail deposits, corporate certificates of deposit or payroll-type accounts at locations in several States, although they, as U.S. banks, would be able to solicit such deposits for placement at other of their offices. This proposal would thus insure competitive equality but not at the expense of stifling legitimate State initiatives, or limiting desirable foreign bank entry and activities.

My amendment has been supported to date by the administration, the Federal Reserve Board, Comptroller of the Currency, and Bankers Association for Foreign Trade, and though others prefer the existing House bill, I have seen no one claim it is unfair or unreasonable. I can understand the reluctance of State bank regulators to support my provision. They are in a very difficult position, since they are trying to attract foreign banks, and no foreign bank is going to say it will support my amendment as long as a rosier alternative is available. But I think it is clear that my amendment gives foreign banks not only everything they need to do a profitable international banking and finance business at locations throughout the country but also additional tools to compete for domestic wholesale loans as well. The few areas that may be foreclosed to them in the future at nongrandfathered offices—retail deposits, commercial balances unrelated to credit facilities, and, domestic payroll and other accounts, are areas they have generally been uninterested in penetrating on a wide-scale basis, except through purchase of a U.S. bank subsidiary—and my amendment does not affect that opportunity. The success of non-deposit-taking agency offices in California and New York, and the success of similar non-deposit taking commercial lending company subsidiaries in New York, belies the argument that deposit-taking is a sine qua non of successful entry.

Furthermore, by adhering to a model of coextensive State-Federal regulation already in our laws, my amendments strengthen our dual banking system. Presently, a U.S. bank desirous of establishing an international banking subsidiary outside of its home State can do so by organizing a federally chartered Edge Act Corporation under section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act or by acquiring a similar State-chartered corporation under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act, which, under Federal law, has to agree with the Federal Reserve to conduct its activities on the same ground rules as an Edge subsidiary. I have used this model in my amendment which does not in any way prevent States from enacting laws permitting branches of foreign banks; the only requirement is that a branch outside of a foreign bank's home state enter into an agreement with the Federal Reserve to accept only the same types of deposits permissible for an Edge Corporation. States' rights and national interests are each protected and balanced.

My second amendment, Mr. President, is related to the first in that it would seek to equalize competition between domestic and foreign banks in the provision of international banking and financing services by making the Edge Act Corporation a more attractive, flexible and productive vehicle for financing U.S. trade. Section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act was enacted in 1919 and in deference to its chief congressional architect, Senator Edge of New Jersey, has long been called the Edge Act, and corporations organized under the section have similarly been called Edge Act Corporations.

My amendment would delete the existing section 3 of the bill, which now focuses only on removing certain provisions that discriminate against foreign banks, and replace it with a more comprehensive proposal that would also define more clearly the national purposes behind such corporations, and would eliminate or modify certain provisions that handicap Edge Act Corporations in providing international banking services.

The first subsection of the new section 3 would state the three principal objectives of my amendment: elimination or modifications of provisions in the Edge Act which discriminate against foreign owned banking institutions; which disadvantage Edge Act Corporations in competing with similar foreign-owned banking institutions; or which impede the attainment of purposes of the Edge Act set forth in a new subsection (b). The Board would be required, within 6 months after enactment, to revise its regulations to eliminate or modify any regulatory restrictions, not required by the statute, which discriminate against foreign-owned institutions, disadvantage Edge corporations in competing with foreign-owned institutions, or impede the attainment of policy objectives.

A new subsection (b) would amend the Edge Act to include a declaration of congressional policy which would serve as guidance to future regulatory interpretations. Such declaration would recognize the importance of establishing international banking facilities throughout the country in promoting international trade, especially U.S. exports; the need to foster Edge Act ownership by regional and smaller banks, in particular to bring trade financing opportunities to small farms and businesses; to stimulate export opportunities and competition in international finance; the need to maintain competitive equality between Edge Act corporations and similar foreign-owned banking institutions in the United States and abroad; and the need to interpret the act in the light of changing economic conditions and banking environments, with a requirement that regulations be reviewed at least once every 5 years. The emphasis will be on financing exports, and that is where it should be.

Subsection (c) would eliminate the requirement that all Edge Act corporation directors be U.S. citizens. This provision is already in the House bill.

Subsection (d) would eliminate the 10-to-1 leverage ratio in the act. This follows the Federal Reserve Board's own recommendations, except I propose to simply strike the limit from the act, rather than permitting Board waiver. I will also propose that committee report language be included disapproving of the existing leverage limit in section 211.9(c) of regulation K and requesting the Board to consider waiving or modifying regulatory limitations for U.S. export financing transactions.

Subsection (e) would eliminate the mandatory 10-percent reserve requirement and provide instead that Edge Act corporations be subject to the same requirements that apply to member banks. The prohibition on Edge Act corporations becoming members of the Federal Reserve would also be eliminated.

Subsection (f) would modify the Edge Act to permit foreign-owned banking institutions to acquire majority stock control of Edge Act corporations. This would conform to the existing section in the bill.

I believe this second amendment constitutes another step in rationalizing our trade and financing laws, to make them consistent with the exigencies of international trade and finance.●

SMALL BUSINESS AMENDMENTS—H.R. 11445

AMENDMENT NO. 3284

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. BARTLETT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to H.R. 11445, an act to amend the Small Business Act and the Small Business Investment Act of 1958.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON LABOR, AND SUBCOMMITTEE ON PRIVATE PENSION PLANS AND EMPLOYEE FRINGE BENEFITS

● Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, on my own behalf and on behalf of Senator BENTSEN, I wish to announce that my Human Resources Subcommittee on Labor and Senator BENTSEN's Finance Subcommittee on Private Pension Plans and Employee Fringe Benefits will hold 3 days of joint hearings on several bills that relate to the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974. Specifically, the subject of our hearings will be the matters addressed in S. 3017, S. 901, S. 2992, S. 3193, S. 1745, S. 1383, and S. 250.

The hearings will be held on Tuesday, August 15, Wednesday, August 16, and Thursday, August 17, 1978, in room 4232, Dirksen Senate Office Building, beginning on each day at 9:30 a.m.

Further information may be obtained by contacting Steven J. Sacher, special counsel to the Human Resources Committee (202/224-1097).●

SUBCOMMITTEE ON TAXATION AND DEBT MANAGEMENT

● Mr. HARRY F. BYRD. Mr. President, the Subcommittee on Taxation and Debt Management of the Senate Committee on Finance will hold hearings on July 28, 1978, on sections 346, 505, 507, 523, 728, 1146, and 1331 of S. 2266 and H.R. 8200, the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978.

The hearings will begin at 9:30 a.m. in room 2221 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building.

The hearings will be limited to those sections of the act which relate to taxation and collection of taxes. In connection with the Judiciary Committee consideration of the act, the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation has developed certain proposed amendments to the act. I intend to request those proposed amendments be printed in tomorrow's edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that comments on those amendments can be received at the hearings.

Witnesses who desire to testify at the hearings should submit a written request to Michael Stern, staff director, Committee on Finance, room 2227, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510, by no later than the close of business on July 27, 1978.●

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TAKING TO THE INITIATIVE

● Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, 1 year ago I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 67, the voter initiative constitutional amendment. Since then, I have been amazed at the nationwide interest and support this proposal has generated. This amendment, similar to the laws which 23 States and the District of Columbia already have, would permit citizens to place a proposed law on the national ballot by petition of a specified number of registered voters. Once qualified for the ballot, the law would be adopted or rejected by a majority of the Nation's voters at the next Federal election.

In an article in the July 16 edition of the Washington Post, columnist Michael Nelson recounts the fascinating history of the public interest lobbying group Initiative America, whose cofounders Roger Telschow, John Forster, and Bill Harrington originally suggested that I introduce the Voter Initiative Amendment. Recent polls on the subject, plus the ever-increasing volume of inquiries and letters of endorsement I have received, indicate a growing wave of support for the amendment. I commend this excellent article to my colleagues and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

TAKING TO THE INITIATIVE

"This story is the political story of 1978," a prominent political columnist of my acquaintance said to me recently after returning to Washington from California. He was talking about the Jarvis Initiative, the California law drastically reducing property taxes that voters had just passed by a 2-to-1 majority.

"Until recently, I didn't even know what an initiative was," the columnist confessed. (It is a proposed law that is placed on the ballot by citizen petition and voted up or down on Election Day.) "None of the eastern states have them. But I'm for damn sure going to find out more about it because come November it looks like a bunch of other States are going to do the same thing California did. And after that, who knows what?"

The pundit was right. The Jarvis Initiative is the biggest political story of 1978. As for the "who knows what?" that part may have begun in 1976 . . .

It is shortly after the presidential election, and two bearded guys in their early 20s are speeding through the South in an old Dodge van, wondering what they're going to do next. They have just spent a year as roving $99-a-month initiative organizers, and quite a year it has been—30 States, dozens of State and local initiative campaigns, 40,000 miles on the road. "So what now?" asks Roger Telschow, who is driving. "Later, later," says John Forster. "Look, Texas is going to be 700 miles long. We'll talk about it in Texas.

"Drink now, talk in Texas."

"Right."

Neither John nor Roger are Democrats or Republicans; neither comes from a political family. A year earlier, John had been a student at California Polytechnic State University, where he was "generally intersted in sportscars, camping in the mountains, and getting a great tan." "Bored silly" with classes, he had gotten involved in a local initiative effort to protect a pristine lake from real estate developers. With that victory, he caught the political bug. "I wanted to travel and have a good time, but I also wanted to stay involved with initiatives," he says. When a California organization called Stamp Out Smog (S.O.S.) offered him the national initiative organizing job, he jumped at it.

Roger's story is not unlike John's. A student at Michigan State, "I finally got bored and fed up at the same time. It all came to a head in this one sociology class I was taking. The professor would say here is the problem, and here are some solutions. And I'd always raise my hand and ask why they don't just implement the solutions. And he'd say, 'Well, the A.M.A. is too powerful,' or 'Well, you've got to be realistic'—that kind of thing. I figured who needs that, nothing will ever change with that attitude." Roger got into campus politics, became head of the Nader-sponsored Public Interest Research Group in Michigan, and hooked up with John through S.O.S. soon after graduation.

Similar combinations of boredom, frustration, idealism, energy, and serendipity have been leading people into political life for years, especially since the rise of the civil service and the consequent decline of political patronage made personal ambition a less attractive lure. What sets off people like John and Roger, though, is their commitment to issue politics rather than what John calls "personality politics."

"In personality politics—regular election politics—the higher up you get, the fewer people you ever see, and the more alike those people get. It's like a simple pyramid with Washington on top and isolated. But in issue politics, like with an initiative, you start out with maybe three or four people who have an idea, and the only way you can succeed is to get more and more people involved—to get organized, get the petitions signed, and so on. And if you're ever going to win a majority, you've got to keep on getting still more people and they have to be even more diverse—an upside-down pyramid that is broadest at the point of decision: in other words, a democracy. And it's damned exciting!"

By any standard, 1976 was a bleak year for

"personality politics." Voter turnout in the presidential election barely topped 50 percent, the fourth straight decline since 1960. On the other extreme, one read, '60s radicals were plugging est, selling insurance, or, as John scoffs, "getting into their heads and playing with their stained glass." But the initiative—a device that combines the legitimacy of an election with the directness of confrontation—was thriving as never before in its 80-year-history. And John and Roger, who had gotten directly involved in almost every initiative campaign in the country, knew that better than anyone else. Texas, and it's time to talk about what comes next. The thing to do, they decide, is to go to Washington to set up some sort of clearing-house to spread the word about all that they had seen, to let Washington know that the initiative was what was happening "out there"—that world of Dubuques and Seattles and Buttes that Washingtonians seldom hear about—and to give guidance to those in the states who would form the next wave of initiative organizers. Money? That would have to take care of itself later. For now, they had something better: an address in Washington.

The address, in Southeast, belonged to Bill Harrington, another onetime professional-in-the-making who had been sidetracked into issue politics in his native Seattle. Bill had moved to the District in 1976 when his wife, Melissa Thompson, took a lobbyist job with the National Organization for Women; he ran into John during a June initiative campaign in Ohio and they had stayed in touch ever since. Bill, as it turned out, was interested in what John and Roger were doing and also available to join them; the trio that still forms the core of Initiative America—the name they gave themselves—was complete.

It is hard to recapture the slaphappy, gee-whiz character of all this. The initiative was serious business to be sure, but it was also, well, fun. Take, for example, the problem of simply getting to Washington to launch their crusade. Roger, in Rochester for Christmas, now owned a Volkswagen beetle—sans foot-brakes. No problem there—he simply drove down to Washington using his emergency brake whenever he need to stop or slow down. John, though, was in California, a long way away when you're flat broke. So Roger finagled the Consumer Federation of America into leting John put on an initiative workshop at their February 1977 convention in Washington. The deal was that they would split the airfare: C.F.A. would pay for his flight from California; John, C.F.A was told, would handle the (mythical) return flight out of his own pocket Then, when John and Roger finally got here, Bill was organizing for the Equal Rights Amendment in Nevada. Again, no problem; they simply became couch-campers in the homes of political friends.

Washington is commonly thought of ("out there") as a city whose arteries are clogged with rep tape; indeed, it thinks of itself that way. The smug expressions and bemused winks of bureaucrats and lobbyists when Jimmy Carter and his Georgians came to town proved far more prophetic than the new administration's now-abandoned promises for dramatic change.

But the experiences of John, Roger and Bill, who like Carter set up shop in Washington in late January 1977, illustrate a less obvious truth about the capital: it is the most wide-open town in the country for people with talent and energy. The Washington Monthly's perceptive Nicholas Lemann once observed of Washington: "San Francisco must have been like this in 1849, and Chicago in 1880—there's a feeling of limitless possibility, of gold lying in the streets." John, still wide-eyed, says that "D.C. is really set up so that a normal person with a willingness to work like hell can come in here and have an impact." Political scientist Jeffrey Berry, who made a systematic study of the recent proliferation of public interest groups like Initiative America, found that more than anything else it was the entrepreneurial skills of a few key people in each group that determined its success—this is an era when conventional business entrepreneurship is just about dead.

Entrepreneurship—luck and pluck, in Horatio Alger's more useful phrase—certainly explains Initiative America's success since the couch-camping days. Within two weeks of their arrival in Washington, John, Roger and Bill had stumbled into important roles in Councilman Julius Hobson's effort to amend the District charter to permit initiatives. The three had the solid fund of evidence on the experience of other cities that Hobson, a notoriously weak legislator, needed to get the council to consider his proposal seriously. They also provided the letter-writing, petitioning, and organizing skills he needed to win. Shortly after Hobson's death, the bill cleared the council, and in November 1977, District voters ratified it by a thumping 83 percent. Initiative America, still in its infancy—hell, still in the womb—not only had gotten a quick victory under its belt, but it had done so in the shadow of the Capitol.

Luck and pluck also led them into what was to become their major goal as an organization. John and Roger, though eager to spread the initiative gospel, really had not decided just how to go about it. Realizing that above all the group needed a symbol, Bill proposed that they draft a constitutional amendment to allow initiatives in federal legislation, in the hope that they at least coud get someone in Congress to introduce it.

Like turn-of-the-century inventors sketching their ideas on restaurant napkins, the three drafted their amendment over a few beers. But they drafted carefully: though the basic idea was simple (to let citizens vote directly on laws that they themselves had proposed), John, Roger and Bill wanted to make the amendment as unthreatening as possible to the Congress that would have to initiate it.

Amendment in hand, Initiative America began shopping around for a sponsor. "We really wondered whether we would get anywhere, because we are so young," recalls Roger. "But everybody on the Hill—the staff people, at least—is young too, and they are perfectly willing to listen to you seriously."

Kevin Murray, for example. Kevin is a 29-year-old staffer with Sen. James Abourezk (D-S.D.) who, as it developed, knew the initiative process inside and out from personal experience in California. At the time, he was also a staffer without a project—an entrepreneur without a shop, if you will—and he was looking for an issue he could make his own. After a month or so of browbeating his boss, Kevin got Abourezk to grant an appointment to John, Roger and Bill.

"I didn't need any convincing on the issue itself," recalls Abourezk, "because I got my start in politics with an initiative campaign in South Dakota. But I knew that I would be retiring in January 1979 and I wasn't anxious to take on any big long-term projects."

"Kevin brought them in one day to see me and after that I never doubted for a moment that these boys are dedicated people. They are kind of the epitome of what the public interest person ought to be, but isn't always: totally unselfish, totally committed to the public cause, living on very little, and extremely good political organizers. It's unbelievable, really, how good these fellows are."

While Abourezk, still dubious about taking on a project as large as the amendment, mulled the proposal over, Initiative America embarked on what would be a very strange spring. John remembers that "by day we would be up at the Capitol, talking to Hill people, or trying to smooth out the legal language of the amendment. But we also had to get a bus so that we could travel around the country, spreading the idea at the grass-roots. So in the afternoon we would go prowling around junkyards and depots trying to find out which kinds of brakes were best, and what universal joints were like and stuff like that. And we had to support ourselves, too. So we got hold a printing press and spent a lot of time doing printing jobs."

Summer brought paydirt of a darkest-before-the-dawn variety. John and Roger, exhausted by their constant scrambling, frustrated with their inability to find a good bus, and worried over the possibility that they may have been wrong to stake so much on the amendment proposal, took off for a weekend of camping in Virginia. As they passed through Rappahannock County, they saw, parked in a municipal equipment yard, a 1965 Chevy school bus. "The instant we saw it," says Roger, "we knew it was our bus." They woke up the dozing watchman, asked him if the bus was for sale, and learned that he had been mulling over that possibility in his own mind. The group bought it, fixed it up, and outfitted it with cots and their printing press. "Our paper supplier still thinks we're just a printing business called Initiative America that goes to your house or business and prints the stuff right there. They want to put an article about us in their trade paper."

Then, in early July, Abourezk finally agreed to introduce the amendment in Congress, though he told a staffer to "tell them [Initiative America] that I'll introduce it, but I just don't have the time to push it." On July 11, he and Roger held a joint press conference to make the announcement; shortly after Initiative America got its biggest break yet: a highly critical column about their proposal by George F. Will. "George had us out to his house before he did the column," says Bill. "He knew he was going to oppose the amendment, but he also knew what a big favor he was doing us by giving us the publicity." Indeed, Will's nationally syndicated column not only informed most of his readers for the first time that such a proposal existed, but it also gave Roger a chance to reply with a follow-up article that many of Will's outlets ran. Letters began pouring in to Congress and to Bill's house (still Initiative America's "headquarters") from around the country.

Not every act of pluck was accompanied by such good fortune, however. In early fall, John took the bus out on a tumultuously successful five-week, 5,000-mile tour of the Midwest. The sheer novelty of the by now well-plumed bus drew crowds and local press people in droves; John gave hundreds of television, radio, and newspaper interviews in support of the amendment. "I just couldn't wait to get back to Washington to call a press conference and tell what all was going on out there in the country," he says.

"So we called it for Veterans Day, a slow news day, and brought the bus over to the Capitol. Finally, a wire service guy showed up. He said, 'Where's the rest of the demonstration?' We told him it wasn't a demonstration, it was a press conference. But I guess he figured that if you're not Jimmy Carter or George Meany or somebody, you don't hold press conferences, because he sent out a story saying we had been one of the smallest demonstrations in the history of the Capitol."

However frustrating it was to come back from a 125-city national swing and find an indifferent, even uncomprehending Washington press corps, this setback was minor in comparison to the stroke of good fortune that followed. Abourezk, Initiative America learned, had been amazed at how much mail the initiative amendment had generated, and now was willing to devote a larger chunk of his time and energy to it than he had planned originally. "It just kind of snowballed," he recalls, "and it's hard to jump off when you get on a rolling snowball."

Abourezk prevailed on Senate Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee Chairman Birch Bayh to hold hearings on the proposal in December. This, even more than Abourezk's original sponsorship, meant that the amendment had arrived, that it had passed through what political scientists call the "gateway" of respectability. It also sparked another outraged column, this time from James J. Kilpatrick, and, in turn, another bararge of favorable mail. Best of all, a Gallup poll found a three-to-one margin of support for the amendment that was uniform across the partisan, class, ideological, regional and other lines of political cleavage that normally divide people on issues.

Then came the Jarvis Initiative. Roger recalls that "we were very worried about Jarvis at first because we were afraid it might be a crackpot idea. But soon we got convinced that it was actually a perfect example of what initiatives can do. For years taxes had been skyrocketing in California and the legislature wouldn't do anything about it, even though they were running a $5 billion surplus every year. So the people took charge of things themselves. Now more people know of the initiative than ever before."

"All this had happened so incredibly fast," says John. "In less than a year we had gone from a hair-brained scheme in Texas to drafting an actual amendment to the Constitution to getting hearings in the United States Capitol. People were writing and calling us from all over the country, asking us what they could do in their states or whether they could come volunteer for us in D.C. And we were still just three guys with no money and no headquarters."

As with small businesses whose sales unexpectedly boom, success bred problems (or, to use the more voguish term—challenges) for Initiative America. Until a few months ago, John, Roger and Bill were running the political equivalent of a lemonade stand; suddenly, they were selling gallons and gallons each day, customers were lining up for blocks, gourmets were debating the merits of their lemonade in the food columns, and friends-in-the-know were advising incorporation. Suddenly, in short, Initiative America realized it had to join the real world. Fortunately, they welcomed this new condition. "In our first year we made a political statement," says Roger. "This year we need to build a political machine." "Our head is fine, but our arms are very short," adds John.

One good break came when, with their parents' help, John and Roger got hold of a house at 606 3rd St. NW. (Incidentally, all three report that their parents support what they are doing, though less with money than with love. Roger's mother, for example, told a reporter that though she doesn't think the amendment will pass, "my son's never discouraged." "When my mother calls," says John, "I tell her about the senator I talked with that day, and she tells me to eat better.") The house, ramshackle as it now is, "gives us what we need—a place to work, a place to live, a place to park the bus (until now we had to keep it in the street and move it every few hours), and a place to print."

But success in getting the initiative idea through the political gateway also means that three guys with luck and pluck—or even 3,000, if their membership drive succeeds—are no longer enough. In the classic mode of American pluralist politics, the support of other groups will have to be enlisted and a coalition built that is strong enough to rally a two-thirds majority in each house of Congress and the legislative approval of three-fourths of the states. Since the Senate hearings in December, John, Roger, Bill and a couple of Abourezk's staffers have been working at building that coalition.

The natural constituency for the initiative, they thought, would be the dozens of public interest groups like Common Cause that proliferated in the past decade. After all, those groups exist for the purpose of challenging the stranglehold that the special interest lobbies have on Washington, and presumably would welcome any proposal to open up the policy-making process to more people. But so far it has been a bitterly disappointing experience.

"These 'people groups' have become little bureaucracies of their own," complains John. "Whenever we talk to them, they tell us that it will take two or three years before they can do anything one way or the other, that they'll take it under advisement, and so on."

"The other thing is that groups like Common Cause and the League of Women Voters see the initiative as a threat to them," he adds. "They thrive on the fact that they can claim to represent people to the government on various issues. If people had an initiative to resort to, two things would happen: one, they could represent themselves, and two, the scene of the action would shift from Washington to the country. That would diminish the public interest groups' importance. They prefer not to change the rules, even if there doesn't seem to be any chance of winning under the status quo." Indeed, free-lance journalist Susan Nelson discovered that lobbyists on both sides of such questions as gun control and the right to life were opposed to the initiative amendment.

Another problem born of Initiative America's success is that now it must worry about protecting its victories. Alarmed by Councilman Doug Moore's rumbles about using the initiative to repeal that gay rights section of the district's human rights law and by the Anita Bryant crusade in other cities, the Gay Activist Alliance has been pushing for a legislative amendment that would prevent voters from using their new initiative powers to change the human-rights law in any way. Initiative America, along with The Washington Post editorial page, the city's general counsel, and Delegate Walter Fauntroy, is fighting the gay effort. "For one thing, gays are wrong if they think their rights are safer in the hands of a city council than in the people," John argues. "But more important, we've got to maintain the integrity of the new process until it's had a chance to work."

As Initiative America grows, can it avoid the ultimate irony—becoming a little bureaucracy like the rest? It won't be easy: organizations tend to take on a life of their own, and even the best-intentioned "entrepreneurs" can find themselves spending far less time pursuing the organization's goals than keeping it alive and happy. Initiative America, which spent only $10,000—for everything—in its first year, now envisions an annual budget of $80,000, to be raised in part through mass mailings. This means it will be able to hire people to lobby in Washington and organize in the field, but also means that one of its major preoccupations forever more will be raising money—budgets, like hot air, only rise.

But, hell, let's be optimistic—if movies can have happy endings, why can't life? John, Roger and Bill are aware that success can breed bureaucracy, and they are being extra cautious to avoid that danger. (They also know that facing the problems of success is better than the alternative.) "Unlike Common Cause," says Bill, "we started out on a shoestring, with no up-front money. We know how much we can do with how little. We're also a one-issue organization; the thing we look forward to the most is disbanding the day after the initiative amendment is passed. And most important of all, we know that the only possible way this thing can succeed is if the pressure comes from out there. We have no choice but to stay open and responsive."

"You're forgetting one thing, Bill," grins John. "If Initiative America ever got too big and bureaucratic, it wouldn't be fun anymore. And as soon as it's not fun anymore, we're moving on."

---

HOW THE INITIATIVE AMENDMENT WOULD WORK

Any citizen or group of citizens could start the initiative process by drafting a proposed law and recording it with the United States attorney general. They then would have 18 months to collect petitions with valid signatures equal in number to 3 percent of the votes cast in the most recent presidential election—at present, that would be 2.45 million. In addition, in order to prevent initiatives of purely local concern from getting on the ballot, that 3 percent requirement would have to met in at least 10 states.

Once the signatures were collected, the attorney general would be responsible for checking their validity. Because the requirements for a "valid" petition signature are so technical, initiative proponents probably would have to get an extra 1 or 2 million to be certain; in effect, then the 3 percent requirement really is 4 to 5 percent.

Finally, if the petitions checked out, the proposed law would go on the next national election ballot. If voters passed it by a simple majority, it woud become law in 30 days.

Initiatives would be limited in their legislative scope. They could not be used to declare war, call up the militia or amend the Constitution. Also, like any other law, an initiative law would be subject to judicial review of its constitutionality and to congressional override. (Such overrides would require a two-thirds vote of each house of Congress and presidential concurrence during the first two years after passage, but simple majorities would suffice thereafter.)

"Some people are disappointed when we describe all the difficulties involved in getting an initiative on the ballot," says Bill Harrington. "But the purpose of the amendment isn't to replace Congress with a direct democracy. It is just to add another check to the checks-and-balances system—in this case, the people, who are the ultimate source of political authority anyway." ●

SENATOR BILL ROTH

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, for the past few years, my friend and colleague from the State of Delaware (Mr. ROTH) has been fighting for tax relief for the overburdened taxpayers of this country. As the coauthor of the Roth-Kemp Tax Reduction Act, he is now leading the fight in the Senate for across-the-board tax cuts for all working Americans.

Mr. George Wilson of the Philadelphia Inquirer has written an article describing Senator ROTH's belief in the need for substantial tax relief, and I ask that a copy of this article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

ROTH IS OUT FRONT IN THE TAX REVOLT

(By George Wilson)

On opening day at Delaware Park last Saturday I overheard a conversation while in line at a betting window. "What do you think of Bill Roth's tax plan?" a man asked. His companion replied, "I'm for any plan that will cut my taxes."

That may not be a very scientific analysis of this country's tax problems, or of what Sen. William V. Roth Jr. (R., Del.) proposes to do about them, but it goes to the heart of widespread public sentiment. Millions of people think, rightly or wrongly, that they are overtaxed.

California didn't invent the tax revolt. Proposition 13 put into focus and brought to the surface an anger over rising taxes that has been seething for some time and in many places. Soaring costs of wages and fringe benefits for large numbers of public employes is at issue in the strike of Philadelphia municipal workers.

Southern legislators in Southeastern Pennsylvania have been warning of strong voter resistance to higher taxes for some time. And in Delaware, a state that is as small as California is big—where constituents are on a first-name basis with senators and there is no place for public officials to hide—opposition to rising taxes is an especially sensitive matter to people in elective office.

As a former resident of two cities in Delaware, Dover and Wilmington, and having many relatives in that state, I have some feeling for what Sen. Roth means when he talks about the depth of tax-revolt sentiment among voters he has talked to. Mr. Roth has become a folk hero in Delaware because of his demands for greatly reduced federal income taxes.

Some indication of his popularity was evident last week in ceremonies naming a federal building in Dover for former Sen. J. Allen Fear, Jr. Except for the guest of honor, the most enthusiastic ovations from the audience went to Sen. Roth.

A bill co-sponsored by Sen. Roth and a Republican colleague from New York, former pro football quarterback Jack Kemp, would cut federal income taxes for individuals by one-third over a three-year period and also substantially reduced business taxes.

Critics say cuts of such magnitude would be inflationary, without corresponding cuts in government spending, but the Roth-Kemp bill is putting the heat on both houses of Congress to enact larger tax cuts than President Carter has proposed.

I asked Sen. Roth this week about the origin of his tax-cut proposals and his fundamental thinking about them. He told me his ideas originated and crystallized during his election compaign for a second term in 1976 when, in talking to large numbers of people in all walks of life, he became more conscious than ever before of "the pocketbook issue" and the disillusionment of voters trapped between soaring inflation and skyrocketing taxation.

"The vanishing American dream" and "downward mobility" are phrases Sen. Roth uses to describe the consequences of crushing tax burdens on people struggling to make ends meet. He admits "It's corny, perhaps," to talk that way, but he feels deeply about it and is convinced that many others do, too.

Proposals to reduce the capital gains tax are supported by Sen. Roth and he sees no conflict or competition between those proposals and his own. He believes more capital formation is a critical need in the country and that additional capital investment from individuals is essential to create permanent jobs in the private sector, in contrast to temporary jobs in the public sector.

Improving productivity in the private sector is another key requirement, in Sen. Roth's view. He holds that reduced federal taxes on individuals is the key to more capital formation, more jobs in the private sector, and plant modernization to spur productivity.

Testifying before the Senate Finance Committee last Friday, Sen. Roth described the Roth-Kemp Bill as "the only game in town for real relief to the taxpayer."

It may not be the only game in town, but there is no doubt about Sen. Roth wanting real relief for taxpayers—relief that will more than offset the pocketbook effects of inflation and higher Social Security taxes. The senior senator from Delaware, who listened to the voters two years ago and didn't forget, probably won't obtain tax reductions of the magnitude he is seeking, but he is likely to have an impact on the size and substance of whatever tax cut does get through Congress this year. ●

DESEGREGATION'S QUIET SUCCESS

● Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, these are times when public confidence in public education is at a low ebb. The taxpayers' revolt is becoming a reality, and warnings that the failure of bond issues or a rollback of property taxes will mean closing schools and letting teachers go are being answered with the charge, "It doesn't matter; the public schools aren't educating our children anyway."

It is particularly heartening, at this time when the quality of public education is under attack, to see examples of public school systems that are quietly and steadily providing our children a top-notch education. Too often the positive aspects and achievements of the public schools go unnoticed. A recent article in the Washington Post highlights the accomplishments of Hillsborough County schools in Florida in implementing court-ordered desegregation and bringing about a harmonious learning environment for the students in the Tampa Bay area, who represent diverse racial and ethnic backgrounds.

I thought this article would be of interest to my colleagues and request that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

DESEGREGATION'S QUIET SUCCESS

(By Ward Sinclair)

TAMPA.—By the time the white family's car had come through the black subdivision and stopped outside the school, the mother was weeping.

The family was new to Hillsborough County and a child in the car soon would be riding a bus into this black neighborhood to attend a desegregated school.

Under the county's court-ordered desegregation plan, there is no choice. A child attends the school to which he is assigned.

So while his wife sat crying in the car, the father went into Progress Village Elementary school to enroll the child. Mrs. Sweetrix Williams, the black principal, showed him the school and gave him assurances. The father left smiling.

"When this started, while parents didn't have much confidence in us," Williams said later. "They felt their children wouldn't make progress. Now the parents are hollering that there is too much homework."

The seventh year of full-scale desegregation has just ended in this humid port city on Florida's west coast. The school program goes on with hardly a flicker of dissatisfaction.

A decade ago, America's front pages were heavy with the stories of violence and friction in schools under court order to desegregate. The occasional example of, say, a Boston still makes the front page, and racial isolation persists in many school systems.

But there is also a quieter side to the desegregation story. In one city after another the pill has been swallowed and children are being allowed to be children, together.

None of which is to say that Tampa has not felt stress since 1971 when U.S. District Judge Ben Krentzman wrote the order for racial balance in every school—80 percent white, 20 percent black, to reflect the population.

Nor would anyone say that the millennium has come to Hillsborough County. Except for isolated cases of fights and racial taunting at the start, the integration plan went smoothly. One reason seems obvious: whites, with a substantial majority in every school, do not feel threatened.

The burden of the plan rests on the blacks. They complain about, but accept, the requirement that they spend more time on buses than whites. There is discontent over what is seen as biased disciplining of black pupils. Some parents still resent their loss of identity with all-black schools. But people get along.

In a way, the vignette of the distraught white mother and the smiling father symbolizes the story of another Southern community accepting change and making a reasonable success of it.

It is a story repeated with variations in dozens of small and medium-sized school districts across the country, where segregated classrooms and second-rate education were synonymous in the recent past. Charlotte, Miami, Nashville, Jacksonville and Indianapolis also have achieved broad-scale desegregation with minimum upheaval.

A reality is that school desegregation just is not the political issue it used to be. A politician can't win enough votes to matter by posing desegregation. The annual flurry of anti-busing amendments in Congress has died to a trickle.

Tampa—22nd largest school district in the country—is not unique.

"Public education here is alive and well—more so than the public believes," commented county Superintendent Raymond O. Shelton. "We have had stability. There was trauma involved, but relative to other places, we came off well. Most of our problems now are young-people problems and not race problems. We spend our summer planning for the school year instead of being in court."

There is another side to this. In Tampa, as in other places where segregation is a part of the past, the talk is now about the meaning of schools. A conversation with anyone—parent, student, teacher—may start off on desegregation. But, also invariably, it ends up as a conversation about learning and discipline and teaching. Maybe this was inevitable—quality cannot be discussed in a sensible framework until the physical separation is ended.

Throughout the Tampa system, basics and remedial work are being stressed. Advanced programs for brighter students have begun. As one of the apparent results, scores on standardized tests are rising steadily—in a county that had been uniformly below national norms. Blacks seem to be staying in school longer and more seem to be going to college, although there are no statistics to prove it.

Actually, Superintendent Shelton said school officials are "prouder" of the intensified educational program than they are of desegregation. Nobody suggests that desegregation per se meant better schools. But they do suggest that it provided the chance to put first things first. "The black students are better off than they were because all students are better off," Shelton said. "At least, it is no longer a valid criticism that there is unequal opportunity."

In Hillsborough County, the old line of separate-but-equal was mostly myth. The stories of inadequate, ill-equipped black schools before 1971 are legion. When desegregation came, and white youngsters were headed to previously black schools, weekend miracles occurred. Sod was trucked in to green up the schoolyards. Libraries were added. Air-conditioners were bought and plugged in. Fences were erected, science labs installed, vocational facilities expanded.

A LOOK BACK

It is one thing for the superintendent to talk about progress, still another thing for the old-line troublemakers, as the civil rights agitators were known, to pronounce progress.

Robert Saunders and the Rev. A. Leon Lowry, men who got all this started when they began pushing an NAACP desegregation suit in 1958, stand in restrained awe of what has happened. Saunders was state field secretary and Lowry was state president. Their sons broke the color barrier in Tampa schools.

That NAACP suit was fought and delayed by the school board for 13 years. An occasional yielding for token breakthroughs kept full-scale desegregation away for more than a decade. It is lost time that never will be regained.

"As far as the court order is concerned, they have carried it out to a tee. We are now dealing with other types of systemic discrimination," said Saunders, who is now the county's equal-opportunity officer. "But one would be hard put to say that learning conditions have not improved here."

Added Lowry: "We're on our way. . . . Overall, one would have to say there is equality in the classroom, in the basics, in athletics. But there may be a little difficulty in things like cheerleading, perhaps, or in the school clubs. So students say there seems to be a little inequality."

Well, the times change, and so does a person's ability to make an impact. In 1976, Lowry became the first black ever elected to a countywide office when he defeated two white candidates for a seat on the school board. Only 8,000 of his 43,000 votes came from blacks.

But the Tampa story is more than a story about black and white. It also involves a large Latin population, which experienced a more subtle prejudice for years in the white-dominated school system. Few Italians, Cuban-Americans or Spanish-Americans rose to become principals. Latin teachers usually taught in Latin schools. Kids from the Latin neighborhoods went to Latin schools. There were no special programs to ease their difficulties with learning and language.

Beautiful irony. The first Tampa elementary school to undergo largescale desegregation was in Ybor City, the Latin quarter, in 1962. The principal, Joe Yglesias, was thrown to the lions, as it were.

Months before, he had been told he would never go higher than assistant principal because he had a "foreign" name. Yglesias reached out and jerked the necktie of the official who told him that. "You SOB," Yglesias said. "Your parents were only two boats ahead of mine." End of an assistant principal's career, or so it seemed. He got the booby prize at Ybor school, then made it work with no big problems. Today he seeks out and administers the federal grants for the entire system, about $30 million a year.

So the Latino's role has changed, too. Nowhere is the picture of equal opportunity any clearer than at Jefferson High, a multimillion-dollar, air-conditioned school built in 1973 to replace the old Jefferson, a traditional haven for Latins.

THE NEW JEFFERSON

The new Jefferson, built on the edge of a black neighborhood on the west side of Tampa, houses close to 2,000 students, mostly from low- and lower-middle-income families. About 40 per cent of them are white, 25 per cent black, 25 per cent Latino and 10 per cent Oriental. The principal is a Latino. His assistant, a woman, and the dean of boys are white. The head football coach is black.

In the hallways, and at the lunch tables, blacks tend to hang out with blacks, Latins with Latins, whites with whites. The black students are active in sports, but administrators worry that the blacks show little interest in most other after-school activities, despite efforts to encourage their participation.

For most kids in the classrooms of Hillsborough County the memories and agonies of educators and parents who lived a revolution have little relevance to the integrated schools they take for granted.

Nina Reeves, 16 and black, typifies what is happening here. She can't remember what it was like to attend an all-black school. Seven years is a long time. She earns top grades and knows she must work hard. At Thomas Jefferson High, she is Nina Reeves and nothing more.

"Jefferson is the best high school in Tampa for race relations," she said. "Integration eliminates prejudice and gives you a chance to meet other people." She wishes it would take as well on some teachers as it has on students. "I think some of the teachers don't want to give you what you deserve. I got a D in biology, but the teacher changed it to a B after my mother complained about it," she said.

THE BOUNCING BALL

Everyone at Jefferson agrees on another point: A successful sports progrom has had an enormous impact on general school attitude. A key figure is Clarence White, the black football coach, a winner whose team has been a state finalist.

White, too, is representative of another development in the county. Unlike many other districts, which unloaded their black educators, Hillsborough retained black teachers and administrators in top positions when desegregation came. There are 23 black principals today, compared with 19 in 1971. There are more than 1,000 black teachers, compared with 700 before. There are more black coaches and deans. The only black principal in the county's 11 high schools, Sam Horton, was at Jefferson until he was promoted to the county office this year.

In the old segregated system, White was an assistant coach at a black school. Today he is Coach White, heading a staff of three blacks and six whites, roaming the halls between his drivers-education classes, keeping kids on their toes, commanding respect.

Principal Jack Mendendez moved to Jefferson this year after running a tough junior high, where racial tensions kept a parents' human-relations group going at full tilt. At Jefferson, he worries about noninvolvement of parents, although that can be taken also as a sign of normality. "I used to go to the junior high with anxieties each day, but here I have no problems," he said.

"The parents don't come out because things are going so well here," Mendendez said. "It's almost apathy . . ."

A TEACHER'S CONCERN

Nathaniel Hill, a young black teacher of English who came to Tampa in 1970 after teaching in a small, all-black school in Alabama, is articulate on the subject of the way things ought to be. "I wouldn't want to change back to what we had here, but I want a change from what it is," he said. "Something better must happen now."

"The school is too big, and we 'act' with each other. The blacks don't feel wanted and we don't go to the teacher's outings . . . But black teachers also have their hangups, and many black students I just don't reach."

"I think integration was too fast for the black teacher. You had rapport with your students in the black school. You were a mother, a father, you instilled morals. We black teachers have passion, and we can't show it. Here, you can't hug a child. You are not to do it. You'd be annihilated if you did. Students must feel some compassion from their teachers. You're reluctant to even touch a child on the shoulder. I don't have a problem, but this atmosphere has taken the effect out of teaching," Hill added.

They are on different wave lengths, but 16-year-old Steve Facer, a white junior, would agree with Hill in part. "I think the cliques—the blacks staying together, the whites staying together—affect the quality of the school and the quality of spirit. People stay together because they live together," he said.

"I'd like to learn more, but the classes are boring. English is my main gripe—it is fun, but they don't teach anything, just show films. The blacks sit together, and you can't concentrate because they disrupt, but then the whites also disrupt. Yeah, I think desegregation has affected the quality, but for better or worse, I don't know."

BURDEN OF THE BUS

Among Hillsborough schools, Jefferson is unusual in that its white pupils are more apt to be brought in on buses than blacks, many of whom live within walking distance.

Elsewhere in the county, the largest burden of desegregation is carried by the black student with little complaining. The average black will be bused 10 of his 12 years in school; the average white, 2. Blacks have surrendered their identity, the sense of security, success and recognition that their community schools provided. Under the Tampa plan, the black student will remain in the minority no matter what school he or she attends—always outnumbered about 4 to 1.

Actually, the school bus has always played a large role in getting the county's 115,000 pupils to class. Before desegregation, 37,000 rode buses. Now, 60,000 ride.

"The longest bus ride for integration in the county is 13 miles," said E. L. Bing, a black assistant superintendent who drew up the desegregation plan and still oversees it. "We have them riding even farther for nonintegration. To achieve the stability our plan calls for, we have to bus more blacks than whites.

"It is a burden, but a good burden that the blacks have to bear. A vast majority of the blacks accept it because they understand it is necessary. There was no question about the inequality in our schools before."

Albert Davis, the father of nine, is chairman of the Tampa NAACP's education committee, which keeps a watch on school developments. He has some misgivings, but he sees more good than bad coming out of the county school program.

"I have criticisms, but I'm not saying my ideas are a solution. Desegregation has been smooth in Hillsborough County, because of a willingness on the part of the community," Davis said.

He continued, "I try to understand the schools' point of view, but I wish there were a way they could understand the parent—not to protect tradition or special interest, but to assist the parent in a responsible way. The plan has placed a tremendous burden on the black for adjustment, and it hasn't been as demanding on the white student or parent. It seems to me that no sympathy is offered when a black seems to recoil from this social demand."

Living in the same home, Davis has seen his children assigned to four different high schools—the farthest eight miles away, the nearest two miles. "I know all parents don't have this many children, but I wish there were another way," he said.

SINGING "DIXIE"

One of those Hillsborough schools that was "rediscovered" by the school board in 1971 is an elementary school in Progress Village, a black subdivision about eight miles from Tampa. The school at Gibsonton, a white community six miles away, was built from the same plan, with only one difference: Gibsonton had a library, Progress Village didn't.

Progress Village has a library today, and if ever a school were a principal's pride and joy, that is what this school is to Sweetrix Williams. Most of her 35 years in the county school system, 18 as a principal, were spent in those "second-rate" black facilities.

Under the desegregation plan, her school, like other black elementaries, became a sixth-grade center. White children from nearby communities are bused there for a year. Blacks from Progress Village walk to the sixth grade, but ride buses to first-through-fifth grade schools elsewhere.

Cumbersome, perhaps, but that's the way it is. There are 550 kids in this sixth-grade center, and Williams considers every one her own. She's had to do a lot of learning and adjusting, and so has every adult connected with the place.

The pupils are too busy to worry about adjusting. A music class is putting on an operetta, a tour of American history. A vivacious black boy sings the lead. The kids hold hands. They sing "Dixie" and "Sing Out for Brotherhood" with equal zest. Black and white kids get equal attention in a small remedial reading class, where a aide assists the teaching specialist. During a special activities hour, five boys—three white, two blacks—can't get into silent reading, so they jump at a chance to go to black history.

Norman Smith, Williams' assistant, is a white who had to adjust. He was assigned to Progress Village eight years ago—a year before classroom desegregation took place. "If an end to busing meant going back to the way it was, I wouldn't want it. In my first year, I was a minority and I know how it feels," he said.

BLACK NICKELS

Smith, who grew up just a few miles from Progress Village, tells a story on himself. When desegregation first came, a white lunchroom worker told him that a black child was discoloring nickels by holding them in his hand. Smith said he didn't know that it could happen, but he would find out. Turned out the boy got the nickels—blackened by phosphate dust—from his father, who worked at a nearby mineral loading dock.

"There I was, a college graduate, and I didn't know about blacks," Smith said. "Early on, we teachers went through a black and white sensitivity program. A serious effort was made here, and we all realized we are humans and Americans, and not red, green or white, or whatever."

E. L. Bing, the man who orchestrated the mechanics of the desegregation plan after a long career as a principal in the county's rural black schools, sees all this as prelude.

"I like to think that there may come a day when our schools here and others in the South will be like super private academies compared to the schools of your northern cities like Philadelphia, Washington and New York," he said.

PRELIMINARY NOTIFICATION PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $25 million, or in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $7 million. Upon receipt of such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be prohibited by means of a concurrent resolution. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sale shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Pursuant to an informal understanding, the Department of Defense has agreed to provide the committee with a preliminary notification 20 days before transmittal of the official notification. The official notification will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with previous practice.

I wish to inform Members of the Senate that five such notifications were received on July 17, 18, and 19, 1978.

Interested Senators may inquire as to the details of these preliminary notifications at the offices of the Committee on Foreign Relations, room S-116 in the Capitol.

The notifications follow:

INTERVIEW WITH GEN. MORDECHAI GUR, CHIEF OF GENERAL STAFF OF ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES

● Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I am submitting for the RECORD a direct translation from the Hebrew language newspaper Al-Hamishmar of an interview with Gen. Mordechai Gur, who is Chief of the General Staff of the Israel Defense Forces. It contains a shocking admission by General Gur of what Israel has done over the past 30 years to civilian populations.

Essentially, General Gur seems surprised that Al-Hamishmar would worry about the killing of Lebanese civilians and the creation of Lebanese refugees when, he says, "we created 1½ million refugees" over the past 30 years and nothing was said about it.

One must wonder how many such admissions against interests appear in the Hebrew language press in Israel but which are not translated into English. The information conveyed by General Gur originally in Hebrew is valuable particularly to those people who have refused to believe the results of Israel's colonialist activities over the past 30 years.

The material follows:

I ISSUED THE COMMAND AND I KNEW WHAT I WAS DOING

(An interview with Gen. (Reserves) Mordechai Gur following his retirement from the position of the Chief of the General Staff of the IDF)

Q. Over the past few weeks, we've been spending a lot of time in Lebanon. The scene that revealed itself there was truly astonishing. IDF soldiers were found looting and breaking into shops and demolishing houses, even when no signs of terrorists could be detected. What has happened to the IDF? What has happened to its renowned ethics of warfare? To its policies eschewing non-belligerent civilians, including women, children and old people? After the experience of so many wars, wasn't it possible to handle the looting that took place? If, for example, a Brigade commander would have told his Battalion commanders that they would personally go to prison if any of their men would be caught looting, we can be sure that they would have done their best to have matters under control. You can't imagine what went on there.

GUR. Why can't I imagine? Wasn't I there?

Q. When you arrive with your high-ranking entourage, everything looks different. They don't show you everything.

GUR. Not only has nothing in the IDF taken a turn to the worse in the realm of ethics, but nowadays, after 30 years of experience there is a greater awareness of these problems, and consequently a greater sensitivity.

When I was a battalion-commander in Golani, in 1962, we raided a Syrian outpost in Nukiyev one Friday, and on Saturday night the guys returned home. They came back on Sunday morning and I had to talk to them. At home, they were apparently brain-washed: "Why does the IDF raid the Syrians, and why did you agree to participate in the raid?" And I, humble servant, went into their hall and said: "Look here, when I was a platoon commander, there were many operations to which I was opposed, but personally, I have always thought that if the government decides to carry out an operation, it would be better if I carry it out even if I don't always approve rather than let someone else do it. Now, you people have the same choice. I am convinced that this raid was necessary. Each of you, as a young man in the service, would do better if he carried out the operation and not sent someone else in his place. However, if anyone rejects my theory he can raise up his hand—and he will be discharged from the unit. He can go and serve somewhere else

But the important thing is not what I said. The main point is that we carried out this raid against a Syrian outpost that was scheming [1] against our free navigation in the sea of Galillee. During that period there were dozens of confrontations with the Syrians and there were people from the kibbutzim who believed that this was contrary to political morality and to the ethics of war.

"During the War of independence I have beaten a soldier who looted".

After the Six Day War, "Siah Lohamim" evolved (the book called in English "The Seventh Day." Tr.). Why? When I have helped with the editing of the book, [2] the section dealing with my brigade of paratroopers contained a very long chapter on looting, which we edited very delicately, because throughout my life I've refused to shut my eyes to this human and military phenomenon. The first time I have beaten a soldier—it was my driver during the War of Independence, in a village near Gaza. During the fighting, he spread a rug—a pillaged rug—on my jeep. I told him, give it back! He did not want to return it and I beat the living hell out of him.[3] In my parachuted Nahal battalion during the Sinai campaign—we took a rest of about half an hour in between the battle of Nachal and the Mitleh—the armored trucks and the command cars were loaded with pillage. And mind you this was a parachuted Nahal unit! Everyone of them subsequently joined the settlements.[4]

When you tell people, who were raised on the ethics of "Thou shalt not kill;": "Go to war and kill the enemy"—then everything else is permitted. The minute you overturn the moral code, what can a man do?

Q. But who overturns this code?

GUR. The very fact of the command. "Thou shalt not kill", is replaced by "Kill the enemy!"

Q. True. But one must first identify the enemy.

GUR. The soldier does not have this problem. The issue is, are we going out to war or are we not?

Q. But in case of a meeting with a civilian population?

GUR. In Jaffa there was once a civilian population or was there not? In Haifa was there a hostile civilian population or was there not? Did they leave one apartment untouched or unlooted?

Q. But this is not enough to justify.

GUR. I am not saying that it can be justified. Every time we grow a new generation of fighters for whom this is the first war. He tastes it for his first time. From the deputy-battalion commanders and down, the soldiers who participated in the Litani operation took part in the Day of Atonement war. That was their first taste of war. And pillage and looting are—I fear—a part of this first taste.[5]

Q. And what are the consequences?

GUR. We are then obliged to take greater notice. But first, the war must be concluded successfully, and the attention of the commanders must be centered on completing the operation from a military point of view. You do not halt an attack to take care of the wounded; you continue attacking. Therefore, you certainly won't stop in order to check the behavior of the soldiers. But what can you do? You wage a struggle—against theft, for more discipline, for a neater appearance, for guarding equipment. And you know very well how much equipment disappears during reserve duty, etc. so that nothing has really happened to the IDF.[6] What has taken place is that during war we are plagued with negative phenomena, against which one must struggle. But it is certainly wrong to think that civilian sort of crime can be put to an end through stricter discipline and harsh punishments. It is a function of human traits, according to my opinion, and there too it was so to a great extent.

Q. Four days elapsed until the military police in Lebanon came into the picture. Four crucial days.

GUR. They were not crucial, because during those four days we did not know whether we were going to remain there or not.

Q. But as far as looting is concerned, they were crucial

GUR. I know that.

Q. Assuming that this was not the last war, how can a young Israeli be prepared for a meeting with civilians during the fighting?

GUR. The men who fought in the Litani operation were prepared on matters of principle, not on details. This civilian population, in the midst of whom we fought, is a population that has been sheltering the terrorists for over 10 years.[7] This is a civilian population that has been known for giving active support to the terrorists. This is a historical fact. It is of no avail to have a beautiful soul and be refined post-factum. I, myself, as a front commander, shelled them for two and a half years. After the slaughter in Avivim I bombed and shelled four villages, with no formal permission! Do you have any idea how many towns and villages we shelled in order to protect Beit-Shean? [8]

Q. Indiscriminately?

GUR. What discrimination? The people of Irbid did nothing when I bombed and shelled them. But then, that was near Beit Shean, near Maoz-Haym, near Beit-Alfa—so you thought it was natural.[9] The IDF retains two fighter-bombers in the air. Someone shoots?—They drop bombs. What has come over you? Are you forgetting your history?

Q. Our official military statements always spoke about retaliations against the sources of fire and reprisals waged only against terrorist targets.

GUR. Come on, really . . . Don't you know that the Jordan Valley was emptied during the War of Attrition?

Q. In other words, when you are talking about a bombardment (by the IDF) you mean we did it indiscriminately?

GUR. I don't have a selective memory. I have been serving in the army for 30 full years. You think I don't know what we did all those years? What we did along the Suez Canal? We created one and a half million refugees! Really, where do you think you are? You arrange things in your minds according to your momentary desires. We shelled Ismailiya, Suez, Port-Said, Port Fuad. One and a half million refugees! What has suddenly happened? For ten years it has been impossible to travel at night along the Lebanese border. How come that this population of Southern Lebanon all of a sudden becomes a righteous one? They knew what the terrorists were doing, they would help them before and after their operations and receive them back as heroes.

Q. Are you saying that the population [10] is punishable?

GUR. Certainly. I have never had any doubts about that. You ask me about the population of Nakura, from where Katyushas were fired at Nahariya, where the terrorists lived among the civilian population? I saw, with my own two eyes, how the terrorists would sit in the main house with the green wall and eat among the locals.

Q. In your instructions to the IDF, did you not state that a distinction has to be made between the population in general and those we want to hit?

GUR. I don't cheat myself. I gave this order to the whole army. And when I issued an order to the IDF to enter a populated area and sanction a fire-doctrine, I knew what I was doing. All I have to beware of is the phenomenon of "Hast thou murdered and also inherited?" that is, against looting. And personally, I have always been scrupulous about it.[11]

We chose a different plan—and paid in blood.

The decision to attack Lebanon with such force was a political-strategical one. When I gave Yanush [12] the OK to use bombers, artillery and tanks, I knew what I was doing. When I said to Yanush: Get the tanks into Maroun A-Ras as fast as you can and hit them from the distance, before the men get close enough for a face-to-face battle, didn't I know what I was doing? I issued that order! Was the Litani Operation the first instance that I gave that order! Thirty years, from the War of Independence till today, we have been fighting a rural and urban population and the question has been following us along: To strike or to hold fire when confronting civilians. We got our best lesson from the unit that carried out the massacre on the bus. I had information, I had a plan. Eventually, we chose a different plan in order to avoid striking against civilian targets. We paid our price. We paid the price of 36 dead and a hundred and more wounded.

Q. When was the decision to go as far as the Litani taken?

GUR. There were two stages. One was intended to strike against the infrastructure of the terrorists at a depth of about 10 km. and then reach an agreement, our official partner being the Lebanese government. We weighed the possibility of a UN intervention, because such a solution has been raised many times. The question was whether there is a chance that the UN would agree to station their men on the Litani River. I confess: I thought that if we will reach the Litani, the UN would, in fact station their men there. There were many who doubted this and felt it was an illusion.

Footnotes at end of article.

The second stage was the actual extension of our attack to the Litani. This was agreed upon only on Saturday night in a meeting with the Prime Minister. The operation began on the night between Tuesday and Wednesday. The first stage was concluded Wednesday night. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday there were meetings, and rumors began circulating about a possible UN intervention. Towards Saturday night, it become clear that there will probably be a decision by the Security Council and the USA President is not waiting for Begin's arrival. I suggested that we go as far as the Litani so as to establish a better foundation for the UN forces.[13]

Q. Was the (Israeli) government surprised that the President of the United States acted without coordination?

GUR. I cannot speak in the name of the government. This possibility was taken into account, and the fact is that we took the decision to go as far as the Litani before everything was clear. There was a feeling that in this case the Americans would make haste towards Begin's visit. Here, of course, we could decide whether Begin was obliged to go or not.

Q. Does Israel need to continue to promote the Christian enclaves? We have been living with the enclaves for over two years.

GUR. Israel is not promoting the Christian enclaves. But as a result of the civil war and the good-fence, a certain obligation developed, and the government made this obligation patently clear on more than one occasion. Both from a moral and from a political point of view we cannot allow these enclaves to disappear. If the Lebanese government renews its sovereignty over the South, and we hope it will, the Christian enclaves will come under Lebanese sovereignty and their military force would be absorbed into the Lebanese army.

Q. The renewed sovereignty by the Lebanese government—at this point is only theoretical.

GUR. O.K. Then the problem will remain open.

Q. But the question is—What about us? Will we continue to maintain that area?

GUR. Don't attempt to adumbrate the development a-priori. We are speaking of years. It may be solved in months. But let's assume it is not—does it bother anyone?[14] We've been co-existing with the enclaves for two years. I agree that this is not a political solution. The only real solution is renewed Lebanese sovereignty. But if it will not be able to do so, we will not have any difficulty in continuing to maintain the enclaves.

Q. The Litani operation, as it now stands, has it frustrated the possibilities of attacks against our Northern settlements?

GUR. Today, no one can give a decisive answer to that. Personally, I believe that there is now a new political infrastructure in South Lebanon, which will bring about a meaningful attenuation in the activities of the terrorists. The main parties would like that: Israel, the United Nations, the Syrians and the Lebanese government. Only the terrorists remain, and they are quite split up. It is not an accident that we have been hearing statements in the style of: "We shall be prepared to negotiate a redrafting of the Cairo agreement at the end of the Israeli withdrawal." The extent of the operation forced everyone to reevaluate his position. If this new situation is dealt with (politically) in the right fashion, a de-facto ceasefire will assert itself.

Q. Except the terrorists, all the parties were prepared to negotiate an agreement prior to the Israeli operation. Did the powerful attack somehow serve the interests of the terrorists? Have we somehow managed to boost up their motivation to provoke us even further?

GUR. That is a permanent question. It has been posed ever since the PLO published its Covenant. The Covenant not only deals with the destruction of the State of Israel, but has also outlined a strategy for achieving that. Their strategy is: Since the Arab states are not interested in all-out war with Israel, we will plot intrigues and arouse strifes that will lead them to war. The danger is permanent. Every (Israeli) government and every Israeli general-staff has been aware of it: Before every operation, it is necessary to take into consideration the risk of an all-out war. During the attack, and prior to it I argued that the operation will not harm the negotiations with the Egyptians and will also put to the test one of the main points of a possible peace treaty, not of the negotiations towards it: Can the Egyptians remain uninvolved when we are engaged somewhere else. But the fact is that we were not dragged into a war. You ask me how many more times will our partners be able to take such a risk?[15] Well, everyone does his own soul-searching and that will be the final criterion. There has been an improvement in the quality of the IDF.

Q. Many have asked you about quantity versus quality. We have here with us the result of a research project carried-out by a military psychologist (two years ago) in regular army units. The figures show that: 30 percent of the soldiers have feelings of hostility towards their direct superiors; 25 percent feel that they do not belong to their officers;[16] 40 percent do not know what is going on around them; only 50 percent feel that they are treated by their commanders with fairness. 35 percent do not know the background to the orders they receive.

GUR. Do you have a similar study carried-out 20 years ago so that you can establish differentials? Carry-out a comparative study! No research project has any validity if it does not have relation-coordinates. In my opinion there has been a qualitative improvement in the IDF, because of a very sad reason: There is now no immigration from backward countries.[17] Nowadays, all the "operational teeth" of the armored force, of the engineering squads, the paratroopers, and the land forces are all men educated above a certain level, and this already is a substantial improvement in quality. In my judgment, the maintenance of the soldiers is much more established today than it has been in the past. The army has developed and learned. Take, for example, the institution of the psychologists: There are very few high commanders who do not work with a team of psychologists and sociologists who sit in during meetings reserved for manpower maintenance and advise them on the correct approach.[18] The educational system, to the best of my knowledge has greatly improved. Has the level of volunteering gone down?—It is not. Do we have more problems (discipline, absenteeism, desertion) than in the past?—We do not. If one can gauge these issues, then we do not have greater problems of motivation and discipline than we have had in the past.

Q. The high-ranking officers are by and large Ashkenazi Jews, and the question is, whether the IDF is conscious of the need to bridge the social gap and accelerate integration?

GUR. The army is achievement-oriented. It is a performance-geared society par excellence. You cannot appoint a batallion commander on the basis of his ethnic origins. He leads men to battle. In this sphere, there is no 'forgiveness' and there can be no understanding, except for his ability to go to battle. It will be many more years until the Oriental Jews, even those who receive a full education, will be able to successfully contest the mentality of the West.[19]

Q. It is difficult to swallow what you are saying about mentality while not mentioning the vector of environmental conditions.

GUR. But I am taking them into account, and how! We hope we shall be able to advance them also in that. We will advance them, because in our schools they learn techniques of thinking, while the Arab schools still stress memorization, and that is an essential difference.[20] That is why in our struggle with the Arabs, I hope that we will lead not only in terms of elites, that have an a-priori opportunity to jump ahead, but also in the wider layers of society if we give them the appropriate education.

The practical question facing the State of Israel and the IDF is how to divide up resources so that, the elite continues to advance and Israel must, under no circumstances lose its prominence in its mental and technological elites, and together with that to persevere in its advancement of the lower layers of society so that the gap does not become too wide.

Q. And your opinion about this?

GUR. The question of allocating resources is a major topic for the government. It is vital that we provide education and I mean the maximum to the wider layers. This is not only a national-social obligation but definitely a military one as well.

Q. How would you carry-out a comparison between a budgetary increment for a long school day and a similar increment towards the purchase of arms, so far as their importance for national security is concerned?

GUR. I cannot answer that on a national basis. It demands very careful considerations. A stereotyped answer such as "education is more important than guns" or the opposite, is not a serious answer.

Q. Is there a need for another headquarters to build up the force? What will be its function during a war?

General Tal was asked to submit a program for a re-organization of the land-forces. Are you opposed to his recommendations, and if so, why? What was the fate of his recommendations?

GUR. Why am I opposed? When I was appointed Chief of Staff, it was after I had served as an officer all my life. I was never an administrative officer and I have never worked in a manpower division. And so it was a subject I was not so well-briefed on. On the other hand, I knew that we must build a large high-quality army, and I had to give an answer on how to do exactly that.

I appointed General Gonnen to carry-out a thorough study of the needs of the land forces, that will promote the doctrine of integrated fighting and will unify the forces.

To the best of knowledge, General Gonnen did a very thorough job. When his work was finished we organized a two-day symposium: We brought in everyone from the high-command and General Gonnen presented his findings. A debate followed. And I confess, the more I looked into the matter the more I realized that there was no real need for that. I saw that it will be disfunctional to the system in a period of rapid expansion, and I did not see any reasons to promote it. Now I am asking a practical question: If we've managed in such a short period to build such a mighty army, why should the structure be altered? Nothing is more successful than success itself. Did I want to implement the doctrine of integrated fighting?—We managed to implement it down to the last soldier. According to what method? The Chief of Staff himself simply ratified every exercise in his office, in the company of 30 other persons, who became a forum for doctrinal discussions. We established central exercise boards and through them implemented the fighting doctrine. And since then we have integrated new arms, new equipment and we trained the men—and everything ticked like a watch.[21]

Footnotes at end of article.

Q. The subject of a land-forces headquarters is new?

GUR. This idea was presented to the IDF in the fifties. All the General Staffs rejected it. I talked it over with Itzhak Rabin, with Haim Bar-Lev, with Dado.[22] They told me that the Chief of Staff has to be a nut to accept it.

The land forces are the most vital forces of the IDF in wartime. The Chief of Staff commands the army through the local headquarters. Is there a need for another headquarters, for manpower? For personnel? What will be its function during wartime?

If the plan was rejected in the fifties, who is going to tell me that it is practical for the eighties? [23] It is simply a deception of the public. But what today, when the IDF is larger, so they tell me that it is necessary? I say: It is useless. The Chief of Staff commands the army very well, through the existing channels. I do not see any reason, organizational or any other for doing that. Even those who recommend it do not say that it is a solution for wartime. It is a method of force-building—a luxury that the IDF cannot afford.

Q. Every officer in the Reserves has the right to express his opinions. How would you advise the public to react to the opinion of former army officers? In your judgment, is there a misuse of ranks in public debates? What is our view of the officers' letter?

GUR. (A) Every officer in the reserves, regardless of his rank, is a citizen and is entitled to express his opinion. (B) When a person has an opinion, and he attaches a rank to it, I see no harm in that. More specifically, regarding the "officers' letter"—they did not sign it as "a group of officers" but each of them wrote down his rank, so that people will know who they are. In other words, so that it will be known that they are not men of beautiful souls and draft dodgers, but persons who carry out their duties. I know that the name "Group of officers" was tacked to them. They were stigmatized, and they wanted to change the name.

If officers, as groups, will utilize their ranks in order to publicize their political views, it is not unacceptable. I know about this group, that this was not their intention.

But aside from that, it is impossible to disregard the fact that there are many military men both in the government and in the Knesset, and when political and security matters are debated, they use their status of ex-generals to give more weight to their statements. Well, why can an ex-general use his rank to promote his views and a simple officer cannot? I worked in complete coordination with the ministry of security.

Q. Would you define the relations between the Ministry of Security and the General Staff—in terms of responsibilities and duties—as a "well-functioning system"? Would this be a realistic definition?

GUR. I can not say whether it operates with maximal efficiency. I can only tell you, that for the four years that I have been serving as the Chief of Staff, the system functioned with complete coordination. There are people in the Ministry who feel that they should have had more authority in the field of purchasing equipment. There are high-ranking officers, today, who think that the involvement of the Ministry of Security is too deep.

I do not know if there is a decisive answer to that question. The answer is one of consideration. All I can note is that there was coordination between the head of the Ministry of Security and the General Staff. There are bureaucratic inefficiencies, there are problems of tenders, there are problems of administration. This doesn't mean that everything ticked—not in the air, not on the sea, and not on the land. And many times when I reviewed complaints against the Ministry of Security I found that the problem was with us, not only with them.

In my general world-outlook, I am not an imperialist.[24] I am opposed to granting the IDF more authority. I am opposed to having the IDF rule the Ministry of Security. I feel that in a democratic state, it is very good if power is decentralized. I am opposed, in principle to granting power to one main body. For example, in domestic affairs, marches, etc. . . . why should the army have to deal with those kinds of things?

Q. How about domestic security?

GUR. Nowadays the police maintain domestic security, but it is lacking in resources.

Q. And in your judgement, this must change?

GUR. Three years ago or more, I made a suggestion to strengthen the police and not to allocate further resources to the IDF. The IDF, today, is stronger. It is a matter of decision making and courage to transfer resources.

Q. In what sense were you too much of a statesman-chief-of-staff?

GUR. I was never a non-statesman-chief-of-staff, so I can not really answer your question.

Q. To what extent should a chief-of-staff be free from political valuation in making his decisions?

GUR. He cannot be. The chief-of-staff has to provide military answers to political questions. As far as the boundaries between the military and the political are concerned, there is no final answer. The chief-of-staff must be an integral part of the system of considerations in the overall strategy of the state. To the best of my knowledge, a Chief-of-Staff in the State of Israel can not be divorced from political calculations. If there is a need for a formal ratification of this, then the statement of the Minister of Security in the press conference can provide that. Why am I emphasizing this? Because 8 months ago the minister [25] spoke a different language. But he has learned from his experience: It just doesn't work, not for a security minister and not for a chief-of-staff.

Q. You have participated in most of the government meetings.[26] In your opinion, are the political considerations in the general-staff similar to government calculations?

GUR. In my opinion, there is a conceptual error involved here; between a political and a policy consideration. The difference between the General Staff and the government is that in the former there are no internal or party considerations. The General Staff does deal with matters of foreign and defense policies. In my judgment, they are identical. The difference lies in the fact that the government considers matters relating to daily politics, and that is also why decisions are taken by the government and not by the General Staff. In the final analysis, the face of the nation is molded both by political decisions and by ideology.

Over the past four years I can hardly recall an instance of a chasm between the political and defense stances of the General-Staff and the outlooks of the various governments. That is a good situation. But it is not a necessity. Quite simply, the situation in Israel demands close cooperation.

Q. But over these four years, the government has changed.

GUR. That's why I am saying that the security situation doesn't change. Only the government can change.

Q. You said that you will "keep an eye" on the Minister of Security. Are you pleased with what he has been doing? Has the State of Israel done enough to move towards Sadat?

GUR. Contacts with the Egyptians must be pursued to the limit. About what the government did or failed to do—I won't answer. I am a citizen, but I'm also an ex-chief of staff, and there are certain things I will not say at this stage. In my opinion, contacts with the Egyptians should be pursued, and what I told the Minister of Security emanated from my full agreement to pursuing the contacts and debating the issues.

As regards the second question: Who wants peace. In my judgment, many Israelis made a crucial error—and I do not mean merely a tactical error—when they said: "Sadat wants peace. I sincerely believe that the Egyptians want peace." What that invokes is that the Jewish people don't want peace. No one is able to read another man's mind, and no one really knows if the Egyptians honestly want peace. I am prepared to say that the way I see things, Israel wants peace much more than any Arab state separately;[27] certainly more than all together. Furthermore, this is the consensus, that the State of Israel is prepared to give more for the sake of peace than any other Arab leader.

In my judgement, the task of proving oneself today, lies with Sadat and not with us.[28] Until today, Sadat has conditioned peace upon a solution for the problems in the Eastern Front, and he knows that they are complex issues, and can not be resolved by mere statements.

Q. The thesis relating to a defence-pact with the U.S. has been publicized in many versions. What will be your position regarding it if it is raised in formal circles? Can we risk accepting it for the price of surrendering territories?

GUR. I am not speaking, at this moment, about the price. I can say that a pact with the US can be healthy, provided that the State of Israel itself is healthy and is in a position to defend itself, even if American interests at some point, will mean non-interference.

Q. And that is the situation today.

GUR. True, and I feel that fundamentally, the State of Israel and the IDF must continue to increase in power so that we shall be able to cope with our problems by ourselves. Only then can we hope for a true pact.

CONCLUDING NOTE

There are in this very important and revealing interview three matters to consider.

(1) The real situation of the IDF. I will deal with this in a coming collection, as I have already dealt with it in the past, however it must be stated that in my opinion, M. Gur and the other Israeli generals, and with their hordes of hired psychologists and sociologists, do not know the situation in their own army at all. This is, by no means a new situation for army generals, and since General Gur was in Israel compared many times, to a typical general of the Austro-Hungarian Army; it is enough to add that the book "The Good Soldier Schweik" could serve as an admirable corrective of M. Gur's opinion.

(2) The question of veracity of the IDF official pronouncements, and of those who still trust them. It is quite clear now, that the official policy of the IDF was simply to lie all the time, specially about the harm done to the civilian population. I think that it should be admitted that General M. Gur, who has finally revealed the truth as it is, and as it was all the time, should be regarded in this respect, more highly than for example General Matty Peled, that fake peace-campaigner, so beloved by the American Quakers, who has never said one word of truth, at least publicly about that subject of the Israeli Army bombardments of civilian population. Nearly all the Zionistic "doves," are also completely hypocritical on this subject.

(3) Some words are due to the examination of the "doctrine" itself, which is the "accepted doctrine" in Israel (and by all the Zionists before) whatever is lied publicly. According to this "doctrine" civilian population near which activities hostile to Israel are conducted, should be exterminated, expelled, or at least as much of it killed as possible. This is a terroristic doctrine, and the behaviour of the Israeli Army, according to the free admission of its Chief of Staff is the behaviour of a terroristic organization of the worst kind, certainly much worse qualitatively and quantitatively than the terror acts committed by the PLO (or under its name). Let us compare three acts committed by some of the PLO organizations, which are notorious, and which I have myself strongly condemned: Munich, Ma'alot and the recent bus attack (11. 3. 1978). In all of them there was a strong attempt on the part of the Palestinians to avoid bloodshed. Much as I am opposed to the taking of hostages, both morally and politically, one has to say openly and honestly, that an indiscriminate bombardment or shelling of a town or a village, is much worse than taking of hostages in all respects! Also the terms such as "retaliation" or "population which helps terrorists" apply on both sides or on none. I think that they are no justification, but the Zionists (and Jimmy Carter too!) think that they supply to them and not to the others. I Shahak.

FOOTNOTES

[1] All emphases mine. In fact what was in question was the Syrian right to those portions of the lake adjoining their shores. I. Shahak.

[2] This interesting and significant fact, that the high officers of the Israeli Army have "helped" to edit this book, was of course not mentioned by the nominal editors, a group of hypocritical propagandists from the kibbutz movement. In consequence of this deception "The Seventh Day"—which is a piece of deception and dishonesty from beginning to the end, is quoted as "an original document" about the "nature of the Israeli army" etc., by many Zionists who want to deceive in a pseudoscholarly way. One of the last cases of such a use is Michael Walzer's "Just and Unjust Wars." I. Shahak.

[3] Private chauffeurs of high officers are for all purposes servants. Beating them is not rare.

[4] That is a kibbutz or a moshav.

[5] Ridiculous nonsense! This "taste" stays!

[6] Some of this will be dealt in a coming collection.

[7] The implications of this doctrine will be dealt in the Concluding Note.

[8] In 1968–1970, East-Jordan is referred to.

[9] Kibbutzim of Mapam hypocrites. Gur is right on this point. When a kibbutz of Mapam is threatened or attacked, Mapam (whose paper Al-Hamishmar is) demands worse retaliations than even Begin, and considers them "natural". I. Shahak.

[10] Emphasis in the original.

[11] Even this is untrue.

[12] The Commander of the North Area.

[13] In my opinion all this is a string of lies. The truth was said by Uri Dan in Ma'ariv (7.5.58). See my West-Bank Collection. I. Shahak.

[14] This is a typical piece of the true Zionistic mentality, which some people have great difficulties to grasp. I. Shahak.

[15] This is also very significant. Egypt of Sadat appears—correctly I think—as Israeli partner and the main Israeli strategic thought is how to wage an offensive war and to keep this partnership in being. I. Shahak.

[16] The very question of the "military psychologist" is revealing! Apparently the job of the psychologists in the Israeli Army is to help achieve a situation in which a soldier feels that he belongs to his commander. However, in my opinion, there does not exist such a group of utter fools in Israel, as the Army psychologists, and in comparison with them even General Gur can be thought as—moderately—clever. I. Shahak.

[17] Arab countries, he means.

[18] Apart of the general stupidity of this claim, which is as if one would say that he is healthy for he needs a doctor always, there are strong indications that the psychologists are making things worse.

[19] It is difficult to find a more blatant piece of racism! I. Shahak.

[20] The usual opinion in Israel of what the Israeli school does to its pupils is rather different.

[21] Specifically on parades and exercises organized for the guests of the United Jewish Appeal from the USA.

[22] David Elazar.

[23] And a man who is capable of such "logical" statements speaks about a mentality of Oriental Jews or Arabs! But all racists are like this. I. Shahak.

[24] He means it!

[25] Ezer Weitzman, who has attempted to re-establish the civilian power over the Army as in Ben-Gurion's time. He failed completely, mainly because of Begin's support to the Army over his head. I. Shahak.

[26] This is one of those little things about Israel, which are of supreme importance, and yet almost nobody outside Israel knows about them. During Ben-Gurion's time the Chief of Staff, or other official however high, never participated in a cabinet meeting. Officials, including Chief of Staff, were very rarely called to give a report and then dismissed, while the cabinet deliberated and decided, and this is the procedure in the great majority of all states. However in Israel, for many years now the Chief of Staff (and others too) actually fully participates in very many—maybe even most as stated here—of the meetings of the Israeli government, with the results that can be imagined. I. Shahak.

[27] Here he can read minds. But the whole question is nonsense, fit only for the American TV. Everyone wants peace, his own sort of peace. The Zionistic peace, is to rule the whole Middle East, peacefully. I. Shahak.

PUBLIC HOUSING IN PASSAIC

● Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I would like to call to the attention of my distinguished colleagues, the accomplishments of the housing authority of the city of Passaic, N.J. The combined efforts of management and tenants, as demonstrated by the formation of a Tenants Council and a Housing Police Force, have enabled the Passaic Housing Authority to overcome problems which have plagued many public housing projects in other areas of the country.

As a member of our Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, the success of this housing authority gives me great confidence that the aims of public housing can be met, given resourcefulness, determination, and effort. The record of the Passaic Housing Authority is so outstanding that the Department of Housing and Urban Development chose to highlight this authority in the June 1978 issue of its magazine Challenge.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this article, "Public Housing is Alive and Well in Passaic, N.J.," be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

PUBLIC HOUSING IS ALIVE AND WELL IN PASSAIC, N.J.

(By Paul A. Marguglio and Donald Pieri)

Through a combined effort of tenant and management, today there exists a new atmosphere of trust and understanding in the Housing Authority of Passaic.

To foster understanding between tenants and management, the Housing Authority assisted the tenants in forming a Tenants Council, which has become an active, interested and hard working group. It attends board meetings, makes recommendations and, in general, has become the advisor to the Authority. The council brings to the Authority tenant grievances and also sits with the Authority at tenant hearings on complaints initiated by the Authority, when the end result may be eviction.

A key issue which has always concerned tenant's is safety. In 1975, a Housing Police Force was formed through a grant from the State Law Enforcement Protection Agency. The Housing Police received the same training as the City Police, and were given the same powers of authority; however, their sole function was to patrol the Housing Authority projects. Through the introduction of new safety measures, and the Housing Police, together with the Tenants Council and management, we were able to reduce our vandalism and theft.

The Authority has been commended by the New York Regional Office of HUD for its hiring practices and tenant selection policy.

EMPLOYMENT

As of December 31, 1977, the Housing Authority showed that 65.8 percent of its work force consisted of tenants. This high percentage of tenants working for the Authority was not by chance, but by the Authority's belief that hiring tenants is a good economic practice.

Hiring tenants has helped reduce vandalism in some respects. This is because tenants relate well to the tenant employee doing the work and realize that if vandalism should occur, the tenant employee would have to redo his job. A perfect example of this is seen in the case of the laundry room that was operated by a private contractor, who provided laundry equipment for the tenants. The contractor was faced with a high rate of damage to his equipment through vandalism, and so decided to cancel his lease.

In order to continue this service, a tenant from the project, who also happened to be an employee, took out a loan and now operates the laundry room. Now there is a low rate of vandalism, offering proof that tenants relate to this man's investment to assist them. With enough proof to convince management that tenants on the staff are proving to be an asset, the Authority immediately applied for a CETA Grant.

In 1977, a CETA Life Program was approved. It is called Face-Lift. The purpose of this new program was to provide additional services to the tenants, which ordinarily could not be provided with the existing staff. This program also enables the Authority to hire additional tenants, as well as nontenants. Project Face-Lift involves an extensive program, consisting of painting, repairing and cleaning the projects at a more rapid pace than could normally be accomplished with the existing staff.

MODERNIZATION

To supply the existing projects with needed and updated improvements, a Modernization Program was initiated.

In order to maintain, upgrade, and modernize the existing facilities, the Passaic Housing Authority has undertaken a multifaceted and multiphased program of improvement with financial assistance from the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development. The program aims to:

Improve environmental conditions by meeting existing air pollution and solid waste management codes;

Modernize apartment units;

Replace old and obsolete equipment and physical plants to decrease energy demands;

Provide additional safety and security;

Provide additional recreational facilities; and Improve aesthetics and landscaping.

The modernization program will continue and will be directed at updating the physical plants and improving the quality of life within the individual apartment units, common places like hallways, and on the housing sites.

Faced with a high percentage of delinquent rents in our family housing units, (there are no delinquent rent payers in elderly housing), the Authority was forced to appeal to the tenants for support. The response shown by the tenants was better than anticipated. In November 1977, the Housing Authority experienced a new milestone in its history: for the first time the Authority did not have to go to court for the collection of any delinquent rents. In December 1977, the Housing Authority again experienced further progress, when only 13 tenants failed to meet the deadline for paying the rent. December had been known to be one of the worst months for the collection of rents.

The Housing Authority of the City of Passaic has only scratched the surface of what remains to be done. Gaining the respect of the tenants has given management an incentive to strive for a even greater understanding of tenant needs.

Today in Passaic, the Housing Authority has made its mark. We can say that Public Housing is alive and well in Passaic. You need only ask the tenants who occupy it.

Following are some of the services extended to residents of Passaic Housing Authority projects.

Section 8 Existing Housing—100 subsidized units for the elderly. 50 subsidized units for nonelderly.●

TUITION TAX CUTS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, in the controversy over tuition tax credits for elementary and secondary school students, much has been made of the argument that private schools are somehow bad for public schools. Although the facts belie this assertion—nongovernment schools enroll an ever-shrinking proportion of the student population—the major organizations of public school-teachers and administrations have reacted with unaccustomed ferocity to our modest proposal.

Because of the widespread perception that the "public school establishment" is united on this issue, it is worth attending to an important exception. Dr. Frank B. Brouillet, superintendent of public instruction in the State of Washington, submitted a memorandum to the Committee on Finance last January that contains a strong endorsement of this legislation. We have been in touch with Dr. Brouillet just this week, and while he says that he has been criticized by some of his colleagues for his stand on this issue, he stands firmly by what he wrote in January. In view of the importance of this debate, I ask that Dr. Brouillet's memorandum be printed in full in the RECORD.

The memorandum follows:

[Memorandum]

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION,
Olympia, Wash., January 5, 1978.

Re Packwood-Moynihan Tuition Tax Credit Act.

To: Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr., Chairman, Subcommittee on Taxation and Debt Management of the Senate Finance Committee.

From: Frank B. Brouillet.

I want to thank the Committee for providing me this opportunity to submit a statement for the record in support of the Packwood-Moynihan Tuition Tax Credit Act. While the bill has many merits, I will restrict myself to two main concerns.

Socio-Economic Integration.—The high cost of private education for low-income families is causing a change in the socio-economic status of private elementary and secondary schools. If the trend is not reversed, private schools increasingly will become havens for those who wish to escape the social problems associated with inner-city public schools and those whose main concern is a form of class exclusion or elitism. The tuition tax credit, with the provision for refundability, should stimulate cultural diversity in our private elementary and secondary schools.

And Without Control.—As a chief state officer, I am deeply and increasingly concerned about the federal and state control associated with aid to public schools. These controls generally have a meritorious public policy goal. However, the uniqueness of private education would be substantially harmed by similar controls. Therefore, I favor tax credits as the least destructive form of public aid to private schools.

I am aware that some versions of this proposal would make credits available for higher education purposes only. It is extremely important that elementary and secondary level students be eligible for the very social reasons already mentioned. The ability of private education to maintain integrated programs necessitates comprehensive legislation.

Again, thank you for this opportunity to provide the Committee a written statement.●

THE WASHINGTON POST AND DECONTROL OF OIL

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, last week I discussed President Carter's obsession with a crude oil equalization tax or other arcane ways of achieving a price rise in gasoline at the pump. I concluded that he is driven, like the coyote who chases the roadrunner, to the most complicated schemes when there are really very simple answers at hand. In the case of the price rise, I suggested that Mr. Carter simply come out in favor of the decontrol of oil. That would immediately raise the price of domestic oil to the world market prices, as Mr. Carter seems to desire.

On Sunday, the Washington Post, not known as predisposed toward big oil, made exactly the same point, somewhat less jocularly. As the Post noted, the present system "is becoming increasingly irrational and unmanageable." They did not add, though they might have, that the present system also produces short-term gluts in some places, and shortages in others, as oilmen have difficulty circumventing the regulator to meet market needs.

Of course, not being disposed toward big oil, the Post takes a few licks at the oilmen, recommending that Congress enact a severance tax on oil, so as to "scoop up," in their words, most of the $15 billion that might otherwise go to oil companies, if oil were decontrolled. In fact, of course, that $15 billion would, if left to the companies, encourage further production of oil in the United States, thus further reducing our dependence on foreign oil, which I thought was the point of the whole exercise. But we must not expect the Washington Post to move too fast. It is encouraging that they have seen through the President's rhetoric, and come up with a most reasonable proposal. Let us hope that the President is listening.

I ask that the Post editorial be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

TO RESCUE THE ENERGY PLAN

With the promises that he gave in Bonn, President Carter has changed the politics of oil and energy. One crucial part of his energy program, from the beginning, has been to raise U.S. domestic oil prices to the world level, ending the present enormous subsidy to imports. Until now, Mr. Carter has been urging Congress to push the price up with a tax on domestic crude oil. But Congress refuses. Mr. Carter's crude oil equalization tax bill is a dead duck. It hasn't been passed, and it won't be. But a week ago Mr. Carter told the other major industrial nations in Bonn that he was still determined to bring oil imports under control and get the U.S. price up. How is he to do it?

One possibility is a tariff. Another is an import quota. The President could impose either, without Congress' help, under his emergency powers. But both tariffs and quotas for oil are dangerously bad ideas. Either would set an evil precedent in world trade. Either would be extremely difficult to administer, with infinite possibilities for favoritism and manipulation.

There's a much better and more direct way to do it. U.S. prices are currently held down by mandatory price controls set by law. But by next May, those controls cease to be mandatory. The President can then set them wherever he chooses. We suggest that—after the election, perhaps at the beginning of the next Congress—Mr. Carter announce he is gradually going to take the price controls off crude oil, over a two-year period.

Decontrolling crude oil would raise prices of oil products about a nickel a gallon. The total revenue would be about $15 billion a year. That brings us to the second half of our suggestion. President Carter ought, at the same time, to ask Congress to enact a simple severance tax—a flat amount on each barrel, paid by the producer—to scoop up most or all of that $15 billion a year and send it to the U.S. Treasury.

Mr. Carter's original crude-oil tax would have put Congress in the position of voting a tax that would raise the price, and it was a position that not many people in Congress cared to occupy. The president would do better to raise the prices himself by lifting controls. Congress then gets the much more congenial job of rushing to the public's protection with the tax that will keep that $15 billion a year from flowing to the oil producers. How big a severance tax? Foreign oil is now entering this country at about $14.50 a barrel. New oil production in this country is controlled at about $12 a barrel. The severance tax would be as much of that $2.50 difference as Congress thought the public ought to recapture. There would have to be a higher tax on the pre-1972 oil production, since it is now controlled at a much lower figure. But with that single exception, there would be no variations.

There would be none of the rebates, energy trust funds or production subsidies with which the administration has tried to fan up congressional interest in its original tax bill. There would be none of the dubious dispensations and murky distinctions that are rapidly eating their way, like termites, into the present regulatory structure—the breaks for small refiners, for Caribbean refineries, for certain recovery methods, for small wells, for Alaskan oil, and so forth. The present system is becoming increasingly irrational and unmanageable. It is only a matter of time until major enforcement breakdowns, and perhaps scandal, overwhelm it. It can't be remedied as long as the government keeps trying to maintain several widely differing prices for the same oil.

To come back to the basic question, why raise oil prices a nickel a gallon? Because even small increases make people more careful in using the stuff. Because it is absurd to hold prices down artificially, when Mr. Carter and most other Americans think that the country uses too much oil. If decontrolling oil created social inequities, they would be minor compared with the gross inequities imposed by the general inflation that, as Mr. Carter accurately observed in his press conference Thursday, is being aggravated by the outflow of dollars for foreign oil. Congress won't swallow Mr. Carter's original oil-tax plan. But, as we suggest, there's a better and simpler way to get from here to there.●

PRELIMINARY NOTIFICATION PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $25 million, or in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $7 million. Upon receipt of such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be prohibited by means of a concurrent resolution. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sale shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Pursuant to an informal understanding, the Department of Defense has agreed to provide the committee with a preliminary notification 20 days before transmittal of the official notification. The official notification will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with previous practice.

I wish to inform Members of the Senate that 21 such notifications were received on July 20 and 21, 1978.

Interested Senators may inquire as to the details of these preliminary notifications at the offices of the Committee on Foreign Relations, room S-116 in the Capitol.

The notifications follow:

WHAT THE ECONOMIC EXPERTS ARE SAYING ABOUT ROTH-KEMP

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, in the past few weeks, the administration has launched a well-orchestrated campaign against the Roth-Kemp Tax Reduction Act. The administration's claim that a tax cut which offsets its massive new tax increases could be inflationary is a desperate attempt to head off real tax relief for the American people.

The economists who are now claiming Roth-Kemp would increase the budget deficit and increase inflation are the same ones whose policies have produced more spending, more taxes, and more inflation.

Their old-time economics of big spending and higher taxes has slowed our economy down, resulting in high unemployment, rising inflation, and persistent budget deficits.

The only way to get this economy moving again is to remove the straightjacket now strangling real economic growth. It is time for a new economics, based on lower taxes, more jobs, and income growth without inflation.

Mr. President, despite the administration's attack on Roth-Kemp, a growing number of economic experts have endorsed Roth-Kemp, and I submit these endorsements of Roth-Kemp for the RECORD.

The material follows:

WHAT THE ECONOMIC EXPERTS ARE SAYING ABOUT THE ROTH-KEMP TAX REDUCTION ACT

Dr. Alan Greenspan, former Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisors: "I support the Roth-Kemp Tax Reduction Act as a vehicle that will help us break away from an economic policy which looks increasingly unlikely to resolve the problems facing this country.

". . . those who label Roth-Kemp as inflationary are assuming the same type of federal expenditure growth which has created our current problems. There is no question that should we continue on the current path, we will be running large deficits and highly inflationary fiscal policies. But this would occur with, or without, Roth-Kemp. Our problem is that we tend to spend whatever we have. The great advantage of Roth-Kemp is that it would restore a significant part of the normal increase in tax revenues coming from the growth in the economy to taxpayers, rather than employing them for new expenditure programs. It is not Roth-Kemp that is inflationary, it is the process of federal outlays which Roth-Kemp may succeed in curbing."

Dr. Norman B. Ture, Economic Consultant: "The Roth-Kemp bills, S. 1860 and H.R. 83333, respectively, constitute one of the most constructive and exciting tax policy developments in the past decade and a half. Enactment of these bills, by reducing marginal income tax rates on individuals and corporations, would materially reduce the existing tax biases against market-oriented personal effort and private saving. The consequences thereof would be substantial increases in employment, production capacity, output, and real wages, and total real income. Assuming the monetary authorities could curb their penchant for accelerating expansion of the money stock, the strong increases in output would significantly dampen both expected and realized inflation. The substantial increasess in private-sector employment which would result would afford a solid basis for decelerating the growth in Federal spending."

Wendell Wilkie Gunn, Vice President, Chase Manhattan Bank: "By cutting marginal tax rates on individuals across the board and on businesses, it (Roth-Kemp) would provide for non-inflationary private sector economic expansion. It would signal abandonment by liberals and conservatives alike that inflation must be fought with unemployment and vice versa. It would release the enormous pool of energy and individual initiative that has characterized our great country since its inception. New employment would result and those Americans who, for obvious reasons, always seem to bear a disproportionate share of unemployment, would be among the greatest beneficiaries. And, believe it or not, it contains the only hope of ever achieving the elusive balance in the Federal budget.

Dr. Milton Friedman, Nobel Prize-winning Economist: "I support this bill since I believe that any form of tax reduction under any circumstances must eventually bring pressure to bear to cut spending."

Dr. Herbert Stein, former Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisors: "The case for a large, across-the-board cut in federal income tax rates, individual and corporate, not to be made in one step but to be phased in over the next several years, is simple and strong. If the tax rates now in force or scheduled under present law are continued, Federal taxes in fiscal 1983 would take 22.7 percent of the GNP. This may be compared with 19.6 percent in the present fiscal year and 18.2 percent in the years between the Korean War and the Vietnam War.

". . . the taxpayer is entitled to have his money back. The burden of proof is not on the taxpayer to show why he is entitled to keep more of the money he has earned. It is his money. The burden of proof is on those who would take it away from him in taxes. That burden of proof has not been sustained, and now every one knows it."

Mr. Donald Baldwin, Executive Director, National Taxpayers Union: "The National Taxpayers Union, representing some 70,000 dues-paying members nationally, and affiliated with hundreds of local taxpayers groups, fully supports the Roth-Kemp Tax Reduction Act as a vital part of a national tax reduction plan. . . .

"The average middle class American is losing his stake in the future. He is no longer growing richer. He is being impoverished solely as a consequence of mounting taxes and the inflation caused by excessive government spending. . . ."

"The squeeze is on the American public. Our economy is sluggish. Inflation and taxes are eradicating the incentives to work hard and get ahead. The average American is becoming poorer every day. We desperately need these across-the-board tax rate reductions which average 33%."

"By slashing tax rates, which have now long since become counterproductively high, we could free the economy to create millions of new jobs and greatly expanded economic activity. For that reason, lower rates would facilitate, rather than impede, progress toward restoring fiscal integrity in Washington and eliminate the massive budget deficits which are largely responsible for our inflation. Critics of major tax cuts, of course, claim that they would aggravate the deficit problem. But history does not sustain them on this score. In every instance in which tax rates have been reduced since 1946, revenue losses projected by tax intellectuals failed to occur. In fact, revenues have increased. In the early 1960's, President Kennedy proposed a bold tax reduction which slashed individual and corporate tax rates. He recognized that such cuts were necessary to 'get this country moving again.' What was true then is even more true today."

Dr. Rudolph G. Penner, Director of Tax Policies Studies, American Enterprise Institute, and former Assistant Director for Economic Policy, Office of Management and Budget:

"The Roth-Kemp bill is really not a very radical bill, in the following sense: inflation is raising the average tax burden at a very rapid rate by pushing people into higher tax brackets, by eroding the real value of basic exemptions, the tax credits, and so on. So that Roth-Kemp's 30 percent reduction in tax rates would only reduce the tax burden back down to what it was in 1976. In other words, that shows how rapidly inflation has been pushing us up into higher and higher tax brackets.

"I do like the structure of Roth-Kemp because it reduces marginal tax rates, and I think at the top of our structure, our very high marginal tax rates are not serving a very effective social purpose, because they are inspiring so much distortion in economic choices and so much tax avoidance and evasion.

"A 30 percent tax cut over three years, given an inflation rate around the seven percent level, and social security increases, is not a very big tax cut, really. So it would not be very inflationary if you lowered the path of spending as projected in the budget . . . But if you can get that path down, as the Administration suggests, then a 30 percent tax cut is not a radical measure and would not have a radical impact on inflation."

Dr. Arthur B. Laffer, Economist, University of Southern California:

"People don't work and save to pay taxes. They basically work and save in order to acquire after-tax income. It is the after-tax incentive that drives production, savings and employment . . .

"The Kemp-Roth bill, armed with the experience of similar, but far more extreme, measures carried out by President Kennedy in the early sixties, addresses the current counter productive constellation of individual factor tax rates. By partially redressing the counterproductive structure of current tax rates it most likely will lead to a substantial increase in output and, in the course of a very few years, will probably reduce the size of government deficits from what they otherwise would have been. Net revenues could well expand even though income tax rates at each and every bracket are reduced. Part of the effect on the deficit, of course, will occur because higher output means less unemployment, less poverty and therefore lower total spending on unemployment benefits and poverty programs." ●

PROF. JAMES S. COLEMAN SUPPORTS TUITION TAX CREDITS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, several weeks ago, the Washington Post published an article describing the strong support given to tuition tax credits by Prof. James S. Coleman, the distinguished sociologist whose work on school desegregation has supplied the principal intellectual basis for that important effort since the publication in 1966 of "Equality of Educational Opportunity," for which he was the principal researcher. In view of the high degree of interest that has been generated by the proposal to provide tuition tax credits to elementary and secondary school students, Professor Coleman's views bear close scrutiny. Because I wanted a fuller explication of his reasoning, I wrote Dr. Coleman and last week received his reply. I request that there be printed in the RECORD at this point both the Washington Post article and an excerpt from Professor Coleman's letter to me of July 10, 1978.

The material follows:

DESEGRATION EXPERT BACKS TUITION CREDIT

(By Lawrence Feinberg)

Sociologist James S. Coleman, who headed a massive influential study favoring school desegregation in the mid-1960s, yesterday strongly supported a tuition tax credit to aid parents of private and parochial school pupils.

Coleman, a professor at the University of Chicago, said he favors the tax credit—which has been voted by the House but is bitterly opposed by the Carter administration—because it would "increase the range of choice of low-income black parents."

Particularly in big cities, Coleman said, where large-scale public school desegregation is unlikely, a tax credit "would increase the opportunity of black parents to escape schools that they think hurt their children."

Opponents of the measure have contended it would promote segregation, hurt public schools and mainly benefit middle- and upper-income groups.

But Coleman said that because of the relatively modest size of the proposed credit, $100 to $500 per student, "the principal effect would be on lower-income families" sending their children to relatively low-priced schools.

He said "a very large number of black children" already attend low-tuition Catholic schools in big cities, such as Chicago, New York and Washington, with generally positive educational results.

Coleman spoke at a forum on desegregation attended by about 60 persons at Georgetown Day School, 4530 MacArthur Blvd., NW. The forum was sponsored by the Black Student Fund, which during the past decade has aided more than a thousand black students to attend private schools in the Washington area.

He was introduced warmly by Alice M. Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office, who later asked him to deal with the "accusation" that programs to help blacks attend private schools are "detrimental" to public education.

"That's not a valid argument," Coleman rejoined. "Anything that allows for an individual to have greater opportunity can't be bad for the country."

Besides favoring a tuition credit on federal income taxes, Coleman said he supported proposals to give vouchers to parents to use for tuition at public or private schools.

"Parents and children have a better sense of what's a good school context for them," Coleman said, "than do professionals who must deal with a very large number of children. I trust the parents and children more than the professionals.

"I think the stronger the private schools are the better it will be for the public schools because the public schools will be forced to be better to stay in business."

Overall, Coleman said, school desegregation since 1954 has had "no effect" on educational achievement of black students.

"In the absence of turmoil," Coleman said, "there seems to be an achievement increase." But so far, he said, this has been counterbalanced by reduced black achievement in places where desegregation was accompanied by conflict and fear and "distraction from study."

In general, he said, integration has been most successful in well disciplined schools headed by strong principals.

Coleman stressed that the main finding of his 1966 report, issued by the U.S. Office of Education, was that black students had higher achievement in mostly white schools not because of the skin color of their classmates but because of the middle-class background and "educational resources" that the white children brought from home.

"Increasingly, class is less correlated with race than it was 10 years ago," Coleman said.

Widespread desegregation, he said, has been "enormously beneficial" to the South by aiding its transformation from a backward region to a thriving "Sun Belt."

But he repeated his view, which has attracted controversy for the past three years, that desegragation programs requiring "instant racial balance" through compulsory busing have caused "very serious harm" by speeding the exodus of whites from big cities.

CHICAGO, ILL.,
July 10, 1978.

Senator DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate,

DEAR PAT: Let me give you my general reactions to tax credits. I start with the premise that a major source of inequality of educational opportunity, and probably the major source, is the existence of choice of two kinds for some parts of the population and its absence for others. The two kinds of choice are first, moving residence to find a school or a school district which satisfies parents' educational desires for their children; and second, sending children to private school. Both of these choices are more available to families with higher incomes than to families with lower incomes. And the first of the two choices, moving residence to choose a school, is more available to whites than to blacks. Thus on two counts, blacks have reduced educational opportunity, and on one count, low income whites have reduced educational opportunity.

Yet despite the double disadvantage, many blacks choose not to attend the public school to which they are assigned, and manage to scrape together the money to send their children to a private school. Most often, this is a Catholic school, despite the fact that most blacks who send their children to these schools are not themselves Catholic. This shows two things: first, that blacks are enormously interested in their children's education (polls show this also—that blacks at all income and educational levels are more interested in their children's education than are whites of the same income and education). It shows also the great need of many blacks to escape the school settings which their children are forced to be in at public school. I'm no more Catholic than those black kids who go to Catholic schools; but it is enormously beneficial for the upcoming generation of blacks that those Catholic schools are there for them to attend as their only escape from what may be a very bad public school.

Too seldom is it possible for persons at any income level, and particularly at low income levels, to use their resources to aid their children's education. If they choose to send their children to a private school, this requires an extensive sacrifice, because they are forced to pay double to do so, once through taxes and once through tuition. This doesn't matter so much to high income persons, because they have the income to do both. But low income persons don't. Thus, there is a great disincentive to use their financial resources (and the motivation that often goes along with it) to aid their children; all the inducements are to use it for personal pleasures. Somehow that's not the right way to run a society.

I think the idea of tax credits is a very good step in the right direction. It will help give low income people some of the educational opportunity for their children that high income people already have. In a sense, it provides an aid to parents to rescue their children from school situations that they find bad; and, as I indicated before, this is especially the case for black parents, who are locked into a given residential location.

Sincerely,

JAMES S. COLEMAN.●

URGENCY REMAINS FOR DEVELOPMENT OF AIR QUALITY STATE IMPLEMENTATION PLANS

● Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, the recent serious smog alert in the Los Angeles Basin should be a reminder to all communities and States that the passage of the Clean Air Act does not guarantee the success of emergency plans to deal with air pollution crises.

Even with an emergency abatement plan to address such predicted smog alerts, many Los Angeles area residents have been subjected to extended health hazards because the plan's execution has not been completely successful.

The Clean Air amendments of 1977 took special steps to insure that States and local areas had the right to develop and implement their own unique plans to control air pollution from stationary sources and to develop their own transportation patterns. The need for States to move forward with a workable implementation plan is clear if we are to to meet clean air goals.

As the District of Columbia enters the second week of an air pollution alert, I would like to bring to my colleagues attention to three newspaper articles which reveal the importance of developing workable air quality implementation plans.

The first article is from the Los Angeles Times and presents an interesting profile of a major city confronting the inherent problems of making emergency control measures work. Two Washington Post articles underscore the urgency of developing air quality plans. One article details the District's attempt to develop such strategies. The second article discusses a study being prepared for the Environmental Protection Agency which indicates that smog levels have a direct correlation to community property values.

Mr. President, I ask that these three articles be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

CONFUSION SHROUDS L.A. SMOG ALERT

(By Sandra Blakeslee)

As the worst smog attack in years continued Friday, an emergency plan to reduce emissions and cut back traffic flow greatly confused citizens and government and industry officials throughout the South Coast Air Basin.

Compounding the problem were temperatures of up to 101 degrees, which caused people to retreat indoors and turn on air conditioners and fans. The use of appliances pushed demand for electricity in the Southland to an all-time high.

The second day of heavy smog forced the South Coast Air Quality Management District to implement its Emergency Abatement Plan for the first time, as second-stage smog alerts were both predicted and reached in the basin.

Local air pollution authorities attempted to enforce its plan by issuing notices of violations to more than 40 companies for failing to implement traffic abatement plans among their employes.

State and federal authorities kept an eye on the smog siege and said they will assess how well air pollution authorities—and basin residents—performed in the crisis.

"We are encouraged that at least people in Los Angeles are trying," said Tom Quinn, chairman of the state Air Resources Board.

Tankers in Los Angeles Harbor complied with control measures and nine ships were reported idle in the Los Angeles-Long Beach harbor complex. "This is the first time I've ever seen anything like this," said Harvey Harnagel, Long Beach operations director.

Oil refineries responded by cutting emissions a reported 20 percent.

But, overall, the first test of the SCAQMD plan met with mixed results.

The plan—which was adopted in May 1977—requires the district to take strong measures to cut down on emissions in the air basin when it knows in advance that stage-two smog conditions will occur the next day.

The plan has two parts. Major stationary sources of pollution must cut back their operations by 20 percent or more. The 1,350 companies involved have done this before and generally were able to comply on Friday.

However, these same companies were required to implement a traffic abatement plan for their employes—for the first time—and not all succeeded in doing so.

A requirement that 2,800 other businesses in the basin force their employes to car-pool to work—or in some cases stay home—caused the most confusion.

While 2,000 companies had prepared traffic plans, the district said, a spot check by The Times indicated that many organizations were caught completely by surprise.

District officials said they had left it up to employers to take action after notifying them about the stage-two alert on commercial radio or television.

It was the first time that citizens of the region were given an opportunity—if they heard the news—to reduce smog by forming voluntary car pools or by opting for public transportation to get to work.

During Friday's smog attack, natural gas supplies were plentiful for the Department of Water and Power (DWP) and Southern California Edison Co. Both utilities were required by the emergency rules to burn natural gas, which is much cleaner than fuel oil.

Edison said 60 percent of its power needs Friday were being imported from outside the South Coast Air Basin. Much of it came from hydroelectric sources in the Pacific Northwest and from coal and nuclear plants located outside the basin.

Edison customers demanded the most electricity in the history of the company Friday. Demand peaked at 3 p.m. at 11,429 megawatts. (The previous record was set on September 1977, with 11,247 megawatts.)

The same was true for DWP. Power demand peaked at 2:30 p.m. at 3,912 megawatts. (Their previous high was 3,809 megawatts in June 1976.)

DWP was generating about half of its electricity in the basin and brought in the other half from outside sources.

The current smog problem is a creature of peculiar weather conditions, said James Birakos of the SCAQMD. "We are prisoners of the weather right now. We expect things to improve late Sunday night but right now we are stuck with it."

Birakos explained that smog builds up when a layer of very hot air—called an inversion layer—moves in over the South Coast Air Basin. In recent days, the inversion layer has been at only 200 feet and the winds have been exceptionally light. When strong sunlight is added, these conditions lead to high concentrations of ozone, or photochemical smog.

Ozone is a pollutant that is not emitted directly into the air. Rather it is created when two other pollutants—hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen—combine in the atmosphere under the influence of the sun.

The ozone was at its worst in five years Friday. By mid afternoon stage-two episodes were called in the southeastern area (around Whittier), in the West San Gabriel Valley and in the Pomona-Walnut Valley.

A stage-two episode is called when ozone reaches a level of .35 parts per million. At that level, many people notice its smell and feel some eye irritation.

There have been nine stage-two episodes so far this year, Birakos said, although none was predicted. In 1977, there was only one and in 1976 there were four.

During Friday's episodes, companies throughout the basin complied with traffic abatement plans in various ways. Some achieved almost full compliance, some did nothing and many in between were exceedingly confused.

Edison Co., for one, was prepared. Its plan was approved last May and all 2,000 employes were notified in writing that steps to curb their driving might have to be taken.

When the alert was predicted Thursday (Edison Co. officials said they were informed by 2 p.m.) the company's plan went into effect. Emissions were rolled back. Then all employes were told by their supervisors to car pool to work Friday morning. Signs were posted at all exits in the company's two main buildings, reminding them of the rules.

Officials roped off 65 percent of the Edison parking lots Friday morning. When employes came to work, guards turned away every car with less than three persons and herded the complying cars into 35 percent of the available lot space.

Those turned away—and it was only a small fraction the company said—parked on the street and walked.

At the Spectra Strip plant, a small wire and cable company in Garden Grove that employs about 200 people, things did not go quite so smoothly.

The company's plan for a stage-two episode requires that half its employes be sent home for the day—without pay.

However, the company did not enforce the regulation until after all the workers arrived Friday morning. Thus, about 100 people drove to work, turned around and drove home again—to help stop air pollution.

"I am sure many of them went to the beach or went shopping," company spokesman Bennett Brachman said. "The inspector came in and we showed him we are complying with the plan, but we needed more warning. This was not a realistic approach to the problem. It also cut our production for the day to half the normal amount."

Federal government agencies in Los Angeles have worked out a communications network especially to handle notification of employes in case of an emergency smog alert. But it was not put into effect Thursday because the originator of the network—the chairman of the federal Executive Board—was never notified of the alert by the SCAQMD.

At DWP, confusion reigned. The company switched over to natural gas on Thursday and kept up conservation measures throughout the next 24 hours. However, they did not implement their traffic abatement plan among workers since at least several officials thought the rules did not apply to them. No stage-two episode was called in their exact area, they said.

The SCAQMD said Friday that everyone in the basin—no matter where they live of work—is obligated to help out in the difficult situation.

Some companies did absolutely nothing. The Times-Mirror Co., for example, has formulated an episode plan but it has not yet been approved by the SCAQMD. Also, company officials said, no one from the district notified them of any obligation to participate in Friday's measures.

The SCAQMD was criticized widely Friday for failing to notify the public and companies that they were expected to take action.

Quinn, head of the ARB, said local public health officials, elected officials and hospitals were not notified of the predicted episodes. The radio system that the district uses to notify companies under the rules did not work well.

The district defended itself by saying the regulations are brand new. Plans are to upgrade the system within three months. Radio transmissions will be basinwide and inspectors will have computerized lists on each firm to help with their checking, district officials said.

As the stage-two alerts were being called Friday, the Lung Assn. issued a report on the effects of smog on children.

Because children's lungs are still developing they contain more cells that are especially sensitive to air pollution, the report said. Children exchange a much greater volume of air than adults, relative to body weight, and they breathe more rapidly because of strenuous play.

AREA MAY GET STIFFER RULES ON AIR POLLUTION

(By Stephen J. Lynton)

Controversial antipollution measures, including a ban on free parking for U.S. employees, are under serious consideration by state and local officials as part of the Washington area's stepped-up efforts to meet new federally imposed clean-air requirements.

Other pollution curbs currently under study would require additional prohibitions against on-street parking for commuters, higher gasoline or other taxes, and mandatory annual auto inspections that would force drivers to pay for repairs if their cars emit excessive pollution.

The proposals, regarded as possible means of complying with last year's amendments to the federal Clean Air Act, are intended to help lessen the Washington area's most severe and intractable air pollution problems—those caused by auto exhaust fumes.

Many of the measures have been vehemently rejected in the past because of stiff political and public resistance, including objections in Congress. The proposals would cost motorists more money, make parking spaces scarce and expensive and probably force many commuters to stop driving their cars to work.

"We're going to get down to some basic issues of life styles," said Dennis R. Bates, health and environmental protection director for the Metropolitan Washington Council of Governments, in a recent interview. "It is one of the most difficult tasks that I can think of." COG is coordinating the area's efforts to comply with the new federal antipollution requirements.

So tough are the obstacles to cleaning up Washington's air that many officials here say they already are certain the Washington region cannot reduce pollution rapidly enough to meet the federal government's clean-air standards by 1982, the initial target date set by last year's Clean Air Act amendments. Some Washington-area officials also express skepticism that the federal standards will be met even by 1987, the final federally prescribed deadline.

Washington's air pollution has prompted more than a decade of regulatory crackdowns, legislation, controversy and court battles. Key environmental officials say that government efforts have failed to bring about any significant reduction in the two forms of auto-exhaust pollution, photochemical smog and carbon monoxide, that plague the Washington area, as they do most major American cities.

Photochemical smog, also known as photochemical oxidants, consists almost entirely of ozone and is most prevalent in summer months when a chemical reaction takes place in sunlight between hydrocarbons and nitrogen oxides, both of which are auto exhaust byproducts. Carbon monoxide is produced directly by automobile combustion and is most pervasive in cold winter weather when car engines take longest to start and warm up.

Since 1970, COG has announced 31 air pollution alerts, several of them lasting a week or longer. Thirty of these were hot-weather alerts caused by photochemical smog. A single two-day carbon monoxide alert occurred in January 1973. The frequency of these alerts, as has been underscored this summer (one of the most pollution free in recent years), has depended largely on the area's sometimes erratic weather patterns.

The extent to which air pollution poses a health hazard is not fully understood by medical researchers, although it is widely believed that some forms of pollution, including those caused by auto exhausts, may be harmful to the elderly, infants and persons suffering from respiratory, heart and other ailments. Whether repeated exposure to polluted air causes permanent damage to normally healthy adults is less clear.

The Washington area's sharpest air-pollution controversy was triggered by a plan announced by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in 1973 that would have required a series of harsh measures, including a $2-a-day surcharge on parking in major sections of the Washington area. The plan was intended to deter commuters from driving to work and to reduce auto pollution.

Key members of Congress immediately balked at the parking surcharge. EPA quickly retreated, abandoning the surtax. Other major sections of the EPA plan, including requirements for equipping cars with antipollution devices and inspecting autos regularly to enforce exhaust limits, later were thrown out by the U.S. Court of Appeals.

More recently, the Washington area, like most other metropolitan regions has been required to draw up new plans by Jan. 1 for meeting federal clean-air standards by 1987. This federal mandate was included in the 1977 Clean Air Act amendments. It carries a threat of sanctions, including possible cutoff of U.S. highway funds, for regions that fail to meet the congressional-imposed requirements.

One measure that is considered almost certain to be required here, under current federal regulations, is a system of annual auto inspections that would keep cars off the roads if their exhausts exceed pollution limits. In the past, the Maryland and Virginia legislatures repeatedly have refused to set up such inspection programs.

According to federal and local officials, the 1977 Clean Air Act amendments also will give Washington-area governments broader leverage to impose higher parking fees on federal government employes, thousands of whom now are provided with parking spaces free or at low rates. Moves to get federal employes to pay more for parking have met vehement resistance in the past from federal officials. Environmental planners contend that federal workers should pay prevailing commercial parking rates, currently said to be about $60 a month in downtown areas.

In addition to these and other measures currently under study, COG and other Washington-area officials say they also anticipate significant decreases in auto pollution by the late 1980s as a result of federal regulations requiring auto manufacturers to produce cleaner-burning engines. These expectations prevail despite last year's congressional decision, under pressure from the auto industry and the auto workers' union, to relax previous auto-pollution deadlines.

Under last year's Clean Air Act amendments, such inspection programs will be required by 1981 or 1982 for any severely polluted region that fails to comply with federal clean-air standards by 1982, a deadline most officials believe the Washington area cannot meet.

While Washington's auto exhaust pollution remains severe, sometimes climbing to three times the level prescribed by federal health-protection standards, Washington-area officials note that substantial advances have occurred in reducing other forms of pollution caused by industrial plants and other nonautomotive sources. There have been sharp decreases, they say, in particulate pollution—that caused by miniscule particles of dust, soot and other objects—and in sulfur dioxide.

Sulfur dioxide pollution has been reduced by about 50 percent here since 1972, said John V. Brink, the District of Columbia's air and water quality chief, in an interview. The decrease occurred largely because of regional restrictions requiring low-sulfur fuel. In the early 1970s, Brink said, the area violated federal clean-air standards for sulfur dioxide, but now is safely within these limits.

Downtown Washington still violates federal antipollution ceilings for particulate matter, but Brink noted that major decreases in particulates have taken place since 1968, with reductions approaching 50 percent measured at some downtown locations. Officials attribute these decreases partly to regulations curbing pollution from incinerators, industrial boilers and the open burning of debris.

In addition, the Potomac Electric Power Co. has agreed, after protracted court disputes and negotiations, to carry out substantial, costly modifications at its plants to curb particulate pollution, including a $50 million retooling of its coal-burning generating plant beside the Potomac River in Alexandria, expected to be completed by the end of this year.

Brink contends that the major violator of particulate pollution limits in the Washington area today is the U.S. government itself. The General Services Administration operates two heating plants here that long have been the center of a pollution battle in U.S. District Court. While city and federal officials remain in disagreement over many points in this dispute, GSA officials now say they expect to bring their heating plants into compliance with antipollution requirements by early 1981.

Even in their long-stymied efforts to reduce photochemical smog, Washington-area officials point to at least one breakthrough—a controversial program to reduce hydrocarbon fumes at gasoline storage depots and gas service stations through installation of antipollution devices.

Although Washington-area officials say this program has achieved substantial gains, it also has stirred anger and resentment among retail gas industry officials, who complain that some of the costly new antipollution equipment repeatedly malfunctions.

WHEN SMOG MOVES IN, AFFLUENT LEAVE—PROPERTY VALUES TIED TO CALIFORNIA COMMUNITIES' AIR QUALITY

(By Joel Kotkin and Katharine Macdonald)

LOS ANGELES.—The smog that has been making life miserable for millions in this metropolis all summer long is a major factor in creating slums out of some once prime residential communities, according to a study being prepared for the Environmental Protection Agency.

Ralph D'Arge, an economics professor at the University of Wyoming, after over a year of work is now completing a survey of communities here, which, he claims, shows conclusively that smog levels can determine whether a commnuity becomes more or less affluent.

"In these really smoggy areas, you are getting a lower value for housing. People with money and a preference for clean air are moving out," says D'Arge, who expects to present his report to EPA in September. "You're getting poorer communities with increasingly more minorities. It really takes a toll."

One of the smog-infested areas studied by D'Arge is the San Gabriel Valley, a suburban area east of downtown Los Angelss that last year suffered more than 120 days of Stage 1 smog alert, meaning that young children and those with respiratory ailments were urged to avoid strenuous outdoor activity. This summer the valley's more than 1 million residents have been treated to a dozen more serious Stage 2 smog alerts in which even the healthiest individuals are urged to avoid breathing much of the putrid air.

Smog, D'Arge maintains, has changed the life and character of such valley towns as El Monte, Alhambra and San Gabriel, which, virtually all middle class and white before the smog reached them in the 1960s, are quickly becoming dominated by poorer, mostly Mexican-American residents. A recent report by the Los Angeles Community Development Department cited the valley as one area changing dramatically from predominantly Anglo to Hispanic.

Donna Crippen, a 48-year-old native of El Monte, says the smog started pouring over the hills from Los Angeles on a regular basis a little more than a decade ago, changing forever the suburban community of 62,000. "You used to be able to go up in this valley and see Mount Baldy 50 miles away," she recalled. "Now you can't even see the stars at night because of the smog."

Before the smog came, Crippen, whose husband Jack is mayor, says El Monte was overwhelmingly a comfortable community of well-kept houses surrounded by walnut groves and fields of strawberries. Today, many once-substantial homes are rundown, littered with trash and scarred by graffiti, and the tide of Mexican-American immigration has risen to the point where Mexican Americans compose almost one-half of El Monte's population.

The EPA study, according to D'Arge, found similar negative effects on communities all along the Los Angeles "smog belt," stretching 40 miles east and downward of downtown. At the same time, D'Arge adds, many once-deteriorated sections in less smoggy areas, particularly near the beaches, are experiencing an unprecedented boom in real estate.

D'Arge found that people who can afford to are willing to spend, on the average, $2,000 a year extra to live in non-smoggy areas.

Bob Lowes, a spokesman for the California Association of Realtors, agreed that there is no question that prices in "clean" areas are skyrocketing above those in residential areas once considered more fashionable but that now are blanketed by smog.

In the working-class Mar Vista area, in the "clean" west side of Los Angeles, for instance, prices for modest homes have risen in the past decade from $25,000 to more than $110,000, according to real estate agent Joe Viestra. The average price for a home in Upland, a suburban area deep in the "smog belt," today is $53,000, or half that in the "clean" areas, according to figures provided by Vernon Riphagen, president of the local realtors association.

"If you were to overlay a map of the areas which have been growing most rapidly with a pollution map, you'd find a very strong correlation," claims Tom Lieser, an economist for Security Pacific National Bank in Los Angeles. "There is no doubt clean air is capitalized into property values."

Despite the smog and the statistics showing spreading barrio, or Mexican-American slum, conditions throughout the "smog belt," many realtors in areas with poor air quality believe their communities thrive even in the face of the smog. "People will live with it, they get used to it, it's like a toothache," Upland realtor Riphagen said.

But Prof. Ward Elliott, who teaches political science at Claremont University in the San Gabriel Valley, has studied the situation and concludes that property values are being kept down by the smog. "Of course the realtors and the property owners have a vested interest in not admitting that their property values are affected by the smog, but the fact is they are," he says.

While they won't publicly admit concern, valley businessmen privately admit that the almost daily reports here about their area's air quality could be chasing away affluent residents and businesses. "They call the valley unhealthful on the radio and Santa Monica and the beaches healthy. Somebody hears that and you've got to admit it's not encouraging them to come to San Gabriel," one businessman said. "Nobody wants to admit it but there's no question it bothers one."●

HOW INFLATION IS AFFECTING AMERICANS

● Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, the Washington Post on Sunday, July 23, published an article of how inflation is affecting Americans.

Post staff writer, Bradley Graham, is traveling across the country and his Sunday piece reported on conditions and views in Rockford, Ill. Rockford is a typical American community. Its population of 150,000 makes it the second largest city in Illinois.

Among those participating in a conference to share their views on the high cost of living were: businessmen, labor leaders, educators, and office holders.

One participating in the conference said:

The one and only creator of inflation is the federal government, because they can print the money. They print more and more, create more programs, and yet give us undesired, unproductive services.

Another participant had this to say:

There is a mounting weight of evidence—and very strong evidence—that the Federal Reserve Board is the critical factor in the cause of inflation. In the first six months of this year, the expansion of the money supply was at the rate of approximately 8.75 percent.

The politicans in the conference demurred saying reducing government spending is not "politically palatable to anyone in power . . . You just can't turn around now and cut it (programs) all out."

A labor leader, the business agent for the local carpenters union, summed it up this way:

The American public will pay for the services they demand. And they aren't afraid to ask for services. They know those things are going to cost. But the point is the government has gotten out of hand. It's gotten itself too involved in business and labor.

I ask to insert in the RECORD the article from the Washington Post captioned, "The U.S. Heartland Views the Economy."

The article follows:

THE U.S. HEARTLAND VIEWS THE ECONOMY

(By Bradley Graham)

ROCKFORD, ILL.—It started more than 30 years ago when W. Lloyd Warner, a professor of sociology at the University of Chicago, wrote a book entitled "Social Class in America." In the book, Warner described in detail the social structure of a typical American community which he called Jonesville. He based his hypothetical town on three actual ones, one of which was Rockford.

Ever since, this midwestern industrial community has been a favorite plumbing spot for other sociologists, journalists, pollsters and political strategists trying to sound out what Middle Americans are thinking.

The people here have sort of become used to the idea of playing touchstone for the nation's heartland. They don't mind speaking out. They pay attention to the news. They worry about the way America is going, and how their city compares to others. They know they have made a pretty good life for themselves out here in the cornfields 90 miles northwest of Chicago, and they don't want to see it eroded.

Rockford's population of 150,000 makes it the second largest city in Illinois. It has had many of the problems of larger cities—unemployment, for instance, and an inert downtown business district. But the city has not suffered greatly from poverty, the drain of suburbanization, or the turmoil that often accompanies drastic shifts in racial composition. It has been saved from these in large part by a very industrious manufacturing sector that specializes in machine tools and screws.

The city has a strong tradition of business and industrial leadership. Suspicion of government bureaucracies runs deep here, as does an intent devotion to low taxes. Rockford's blue collar workers—many of whom are highly skilled descendants of the Swedish craftsmen who worked in the city's early furniture industry—are considered as conservative as their bosses. Until the last dozen years, Rockford had the distinction of being a resolutely Republican blue collar town. The local Democratic Party gradually has gained narrow majorities on the city council and the county board.

So it seemed Rockford would serve well as the site for a panel discussion of sorts on inflation—not by experts, but by a sampling of those of who live here Representatives of Rockford's business, government and labor groups met Thursday afternoon in a conference room at the Rockford newspaper's building to share their views on the high cost of living.

The participants included:

Seth G. Atwood, owner of several local companies involved in banking, real estate and the manufacture of vacuum cleaners.

H. Lewis Blais, business agent for the local carpenters union.

Ken Kieselburg, a Democrat, vice chairman of the Winnebago County board and chairman of the county's finance committee.

Lynn Martin, a Republican and state representative.

Dean Olson, owner of Rockford Acromatic Products, which makes bearings for automobiles, and also chairman of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association.

Sam Parkinson, president of the Rockford Education Association.

Phil Priola, national field representative for the AFL–CIO.

The discussion was lively and revealing, with this reporter asking as few questions as possible hoping the participants would challenge each other. The session began with the question: How worried are you about inflation?

Priola: No question, inflation has become a national crippling problem. We feel in organized labor that it's eroding our system of life. We also feel we're not responsible for this situation. What we call real wages really has shrunk for us. Some in management might say things have gone up for us, but that doesn't square with the facts.

Kieselburg: With us, the greatest impact has been felt in the road department. Practically everything involved there is energy related. I'm speaking of the petroleum used on the roads and in the steel their trucks are made from. As best we can judge, since 1974 the cost of doing the same kind of road work has doubled, which means the dollar is only buying half of what it did previously. We just don't know how to curb this kind of thing.

Olson: Where we suffer—and I can see this right in my plant—we have X pounds of steel at the beginning of a year. So we make this steel into a product, sell it, and make a profit which we give over half of to the government. Then we turn around at the end of the year to buy more steel at an increased price. Our money goes right back into that same damn steel pile, with nothing left for new machines. Inflation gets right down to reducing capital formation.

Blais: I think one thing that contributes to the inflationary spiral that we're in is that we're very mobile. We get into real estate, for instance. We've driven up the cost of land, the cost of construction. People get into housing now and they'll live in one place only a few years. The house will be 30 years old and will have been sold five times. If you start looking at real estate commissions, you are talking about 25 to 30 percent in there, and everyone wants to make a little on that house when he sells it . . .

In our negotiations this year, we're part of it, too. We knew we had to have 6.8 percent this year just to remain even. We contribute to the inflationary spiral, sure. But it's not just unions. All working people do.

Olson: I don't think the working man is to blame. The one and only creator of inflation is the federal government, because they can print the money. They print more and more, create more programs, and yet give us undesired, unproductive services. And that's what's really the bugaboo in the whole thing. All we do is go after a piece of it once the government gets done creating it.

Atwood: There's a mounting weight of evidence—and very strong evidence—that the Federal Reserve Board is the critical factor in the cause of inflation. In the first six months of this year, the expansion of the money supply was at the rate of approximately 8.75 percent. This is clearly in excess of any productivity figure that we expect out of the sector of producing goods and services. The solution to inflation has to lie in slowing the rate of money growth. Now this, of course, would also mean that government services would have to be curtailed. There would be a necessary reduction in expenditures as a result of this action being taken by the Fed.

But those in the group with public-sector experience were not sympathetic with the desire to cut government spending, at least not to the extent the businessmen were suggesting. Nor did they think political realities would allow many deep cuts.

Parkinson: We say government and I think we forget who the heck government is sometimes. Everybody wants more. We're all asking to pay less but I don't think we're asking to get less. I just came back from Milwaukee, I drove 55 miles per hour and almost got run over, and yet that was supposed to be a simple way to cut back on the amount of energy used.

Martin: The solutions you're giving, Seth, are economically sound and philosophically pure. But they aren't politically palatable to anyone in power. There isn't only an economic base for inflation, there's a psychological one, too. We're a society used to being gratified and satisfied. Also, go back to the Sixties when we underwrote the major social legislation of American history. We had a war on poverty—we called it a war. And we put our costs of government skyhigh. At the same time, we also tried to run a real war. The decision was made then: We will not limit the money supply and we will not tax to pay for these programs. We will defer all that, because although everyone liked the idea of an end to poverty, we didn't want to tell the people how much it was going to cost. You just can't turn around now and cut it all out.

Atwood: I just don't agree. I think people are willing to re-evaluate programs and I have a lot of faith in people re-evaluating programs so that those worthy programs are kept in place. Maybe I'm just naive because I'm not in politics, but I'm just too optimistic to believe that we couldn't have a "rolling adjustment," if you want to call it that, in the money supply situation to bring it down to a noninflationary growth.

Blais: The American public will pay for the services they demand. And they aren't afraid to ask for services. They know those things are going to cost. But the point is the government has gotten out of hand. It's gotten itself too involved in business and labor. The communications industry, for instance, has fantastic regulatory problems that add millions of dollars every year. Banking is the same way. Labor unions—the tons of paper we have to put out every year, it's incredible. We'll pay for the subsidies for necessary services, but not the paperwork.

It was noted that American labor's productivity has been declining at the same time its demands have intensified. This brought an excited response from the businessmen in the room—in labor's defense.

Olson: That's a fallacy that the American worker is no longer the best in the world, because he is. I've traveled around the world quite a bit. It would drive an American manager out of his gourd to see how they work in some places. I bought a factory in France and, hell, they closed the whole country down for a month. That isn't our problem. The reason our productivity has dropped goes back to inflation. With inflation eating up capital, we can't buy the faster machines. And how much better can a man get every year by himself. If you're just talking about the muscles in your arm, it's a damn miracle that guys can get even 2 percent a year better with this inflation taking away the damn tools to do the job.●

THE TUITION TAX RELIEF ACT OF 1978

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, when the Tuition Tax Relief Act of 1978 is considered by the Senate next week, opponents of tax credits for private elementary and secondary school students will contend that providing such aid to individuals favoring nongovernment schools would mark a step backward from this society's commitment to equality of educational opportunity. In particular, it will be alleged that low-income minority group members stand to lose from it.

This line of reasoning appears to assume that whatever educational benefit nongovernment schools may confer on those who are able to pay for them without assistance, no purpose is served by assisting low-income families who seek the same options for their children.

This argument has been eloquently refuted in the spring issue of Policy Review by two distinguished scholars who themselves happen to be black. Prof. Thomas Sowell of UCLA writes that—

> This bill . . . is most important to those who are mentioned least: the poor, the working class, and all whose children are trapped in educationally deteriorating and physically dangerous public schools. Few groups have so much at stake in the fate of this bill as ghetto blacks.

Prof. Walter Williams of Temple University adds that—

> The tuition tax credit bill would create the possibility of school integration in a way that school integration decrees do not—through people voluntarily pursuing what they believe to be in their own best interests.

The pair of articles deserves the closest attention by Senators and others concerned with the relationship between equality of educational opportunity and tuition tax credits at the elementary and secondary level, and I therefore ask that they be printed in full in the RECORD.

The articles follow:

TUITION TAX CREDITS: A SOCIAL REVOLUTION

(By Thomas Sowell)

The Packwood-Moynihan tuition tax rebate legislation is, as Professor E. G. West aptly calls it, "a crucial event in the history of education."[1] Its "revolutionary potential for low-income groups"[2] has been missed by most other commentators and critics and deserves further exploration.

Why is this bill so important—and to whom? It is most important to those who are mentioned least: the poor, the working class, and all whose children are trapped in educationally deteriorating and physically dangerous public schools. Few groups have so much at stake in the fate of this bill as ghetto blacks. To upper-income families with children in college, the maximum $500 tax relief is hardly of decisive importance, when annual college costs range up to ten times that amount. The campaign of misrepresentation by the education establishment has depicted the affluent as the chief (or sole) beneficiaries, when in fact the opposite is nearer the truth. There are many times more students in elementary and secondary schools than in college, and among those children enrolled in pre-college private institutions, there are more whose parents earn from $5,000 to $10,000 a year than those whose parents are in all the brackets from $25,000 on up.

[1] E. G. West, "Tuition Tax Credit Proposals: An Economic Analysis of the 1978 Packwood/Moynihan Bill," Policy Review, Winter 1978, p. 62.

[2] Ibid., p. 64.

Even the current enrollees in private education are not primarily the affluent. The average family income of private elementary and secondary school children is about $15,000. But since the whole purpose or effect of the tuition tax rebate is to extend to others the opportuntiy for private education, the question is not so much who now goes to private school, but who could go after this legislation is in effect. No doubt those who went to college in past generations, before the G.I. Bill and other educational subsidies, were far more affluent than the general population, but to object to the G.I. Bill as aid to the affluent would be to miss the whole point—that it extended a privilege previously enjoyed by a few into an opportunity open to millions more. That is precisely what this bill does. This is precisely why it is being opposed and misrepresented by those whose jobs, pensions, and power derives from the public school bureaucracy.

MOST PRIVATE SCHOOLS LESS EXPENSIVE THAN PUBLIC

While $500 does not begin to cover college costs, it does cover all or most of the cost of sending a child to many private day schools. Most of those private schools are not the expensive Andover or Exeter stereotypes, but rather schools costing a fraction of the tuition they charge—and having costs per pupil that are a half, a third, or a fifth of the per pupil cost in the public schools. It is not uncommon for Catholic parochial schools costing a few hundred dollars a year to have test scores higher than public schools in the same neighborhoods with per pupil cost well over a thousand dollars. One of the misrepresentations by opponents of the tuition tax rebate is that it would cost billions of dollars. They are talking about Treasury disbursements, which may be politically important. What is economically important is that a shift of students to lower-cost private schools can save billions of dollars for society as a whole.

Most of the private schools do not have the runaway pay scales or plush pensions the teachers' unions have extracted from politicians handing out the taxpayers' money. Few parochial schools are surrounded with tennis courts or contain many of the other expensive amenities or status symbols that add little to the education of children, but which have become part of the fringe benefits of public school administrators. Indeed, most private schools have far fewer administrators per hundred pupils, which is no small part of the reason for their lower costs or for the opposition of public school administrators to allowing parents a choice of where to send their children.

The crux of the controversy over this bill is choice and power. If parents are given a choice, public school officials will lose the monopoly power they now hold over a captive audience. That monopoly power is greatest over the poor, but it extends to all who cannot afford to simultaneously pay taxes for the public schools and tuition at a private school. Public schools in affluent neighborhoods where parents already have that option must pay some attention to those parents' wishes and be responsive. But parents in poorer neighborhoods and ghettoes have no such leverage to use to get attention, response or even common courtesy. The mere prospect of being able to remove their children to private schools changes all that. In other words, the benefits of the availability of tuition tax credit do not end with those who take advantage of it, but extend to those who keep their children in the public schools and never collect a dime from the Treasury—but whose children's needs now have to be taken seriously by public school officials no longer insulated or assured of a captive audience.

Much has been made of the fact that most of the enrollment in private elementary and secondary schools is in Catholic parochial schools. Like many other statements about the situation before this bill is passed, it is far from decisive in determining what the situation will be afterwards. The government is constantly overestimating the revenues to be gained from imposing a given tax by assuming that the pre-tax situation will continue unchanged except for the collection of the tax. In the same way, some are now assuming that the social, economic, and religious composition of families with children in private schools will remain unchanged after a subsidy that will put such education within reach of ten of millions of other people. Moreover, not all of the children enrolled in Catholic schools are Catholic. In urban ghettoes, especially, it is not uncommon for many Protestant black families to send their children to Catholic schools, as an escape from ineffective and dangerous public schools. About 10 percent of the ghetto youngsters in Chicago are in parochial schools. In some places, a majority of the enrollees in a Catholic school are non-Catholic. A parochial school can be a social service activity, like a denominational hospital that does not limit its medical care to co-religionists.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUE

The Constitutional ban on government support for religious establishments raises legalistic issues for legislation whose initial impact may be more pronounced on Catholics. The first Amendment, as written, would not prohibit tax rebates for individuals to do with as they please and the G.I. Bill is used at Catholic colleges and universities, but the Supreme Court has sometimes drawn an arbitrary line between higher and pre-college education and made the Constitution more restrictive on the latter. However, the uncertain course of the Supreme Court in this area in recent years and some evidence of at least a pause in the trend toward judicial policymaking under the guise of interpretation leaves reason to hope that extremist extensions of the "separation of church and state" doctrine will not nullify a bill that offers major benefits to all segments of the population. As things stand now, there is no Constitutional limitation on an individual's choice to donate money received from the government—whether as salary, tax refund, or Social Security benefits—to a religious organization. To say that the individual cannot choose to buy an educational service from the same religious organizations with money originating from the government seems inconsistent at best.

Another red flag to many is the possible effect of parental choice on racial integration. Visions of "segregation academies" are sometimes invoked (even though the tuition tax rebates cannot be used for any institution practicing racial discrimination). Quite the contrary is the case. In most of the nation's largest urban public school systems, there are not enough whites left to integrate, so any further racial integration in such places may be achievable only by the voluntary movement of black children into private schools. But even this is objected to by some "liberals," because blacks who take this opportunity to get ahead and leave the ghetto public schools would leave behind only the children of "the least educated, least ambitious, and least aware."[3] In other words, black parents who want to make a better future for their children must be stopped and their children held hostage in the public schools until such indefinite time as all other people in the ghetto share their outlook. Ethnic minorities in the past rose out of the slums layer by layer, but for blacks it must be all or none! This arrogant treatment of millions of other human beings as pawns or guinea pigs would be impossible when parents have individual choice. That is precisely why both the education establishment and the social tinkerers are opposed to it.

TUITION TAX CREDITS: OTHER BENEFITS

(By Walter E. Williams)

"Tuition Tax Credit Proposals," by Professor E. G. West, which appeared in Policy Review (Winter, 1978) is an insightful discussion of several important educational problems that could be solved in part by the passage of the Tuition Tax Credit bill sponsored by Senators Packwood and Moynihan. In this note I would like to briefly comment on some other educational issues, not raised by Professor West, upon which the Packwood-Moynihan bill could have a favorable effect.

DIVERSITY IN EDUCATION

People exhibit different preferences for a host of goods and services produced in the United States, preferences influenced by factors such as culture, religion, education and income. In order to resolve or minimize conflict there must be cooperation without conformity; that is, to the extent possible, there must be a variety of goods and services so that people can choose freely in the manner dictated by their preferences. A large, robust private sector increases the likelihood that there will be cooperation without conformity, through the natural evolution of producers of goods and services who specialize in catering to different tastes. In other words, my purchase of an automobile with a rotary engine does not require that I coerce my neighbors to purchase such an automobile.

A state monopoly in the production of a good or service enhances the potential for conflict, through requiring uniformity; that is, its production requires a collective decision on many attributes of the product, and once produced, everybody has to consume the identical product whether he agrees with all the attributes or not. State monopolies in the production of education enhance the potential for conflict by requiring conformity on issues of importance to many people. For example, prayers in school, ethnic history, saluting the flag and educational tracking are highly controversial issues which have received considerable court attention and have resulted in street fighting and heightened racial tensions. With a larger non-public education sector and hence more diversity in education, parents who, for example, wanted prayer reading could realize this preference by simply enrolling their child in such a school. They would not be required to either lobby for laws requiring all schools to present prayers or to pay a tariff to opt out of the public school system.[1]

---

[3] "Kissing Off the Public Schools," The New Republic, March 25, 1978, p. 6.

[1] Tariff is an appropriate word here because parents who choose to send their children to non-public schools must pay tuition plus continue to pay for public schools. This has disincentive effects similar to international tariffs which protect and preserve relatively inefficient producers from competitive forces.

RADICAL DESEGREGATION

One criticism of the Tuition Tax Credit bill is that it will promote racial homogeneity in our school systems. In fact, for the most part, schools across the country are already racially homogeneous and according to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission they are becoming more so. Contrary to the statements made by its critics, the Tuition Tax Credit may reverse this trend not only in education but in other areas of life as well. This result will be achieved through higher quality education in cities which will follow from market competition encouraged through the Tuition Tax Credit. With higher quality education available in cities, middle-class, predominantly white families will have reduced incentives to flee to the suburbs as a way of insuring good education for their children. It is noteworthy to recognize that the flight to suburbia in search of better schooling is becoming less of an exclusively white phenomenon. Blacks are fleeing the cities in unprecedented numbers.[2]

The Tuition Tax Credit bill would create the possibility of school integration in a way that school integration decrees do not—through people voluntarily pursuing what they believe to be in their own best interests. The use of the courts to promote racial heterogeneity and cooperation in our school systems can be called nothing less than a dismal failure.

ENHANCED EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY FOR MINORITIES

Clearer than its impact on school desegregation is the Tuition Tax Credit bill's effect on the quality of education. The fact that a grossly inferior education is received by most black children has been chronicled in the news media, professional publications and elsewhere. Test performance scores show that the great majority of black children are three to five years behind the national norm. These facts make meaningless the argument advanced by the critics of the Tuition Tax Credit, that if it were enacted there would be a ground swell of fly-by-night, poor quality schools which would exploit the poor.

Black parents, educated or not, can discern high and low quality education. This is evidenced by the fact that many black (as well as white) parents have given false addresses so that their children could attend better schools outside of their districts. The recent surge in the number of non-Catholic black parents sending their children to Catholic schools and the increased number of community and Islamic schools in black ghettos all point to the fact that black parents who want higher quality education for their children and have the financial resources seize the opportunity to opt out of the public school system. What the Tuition Tax Credit will do is enable more parents, black and white, who are dissatisfied with public education, to obtain a better and more productive life for their children.

COSTS

Professor West and others have evaluated the costs of the proposed Tuition Tax Credit in terms of its impact on the federal budget—a particularly narrow view of costs and benefits of the proposed legislation. The social cost of education is the amount of resources that the society gives up. The cost is seriously understated if in our general view we exclude state and local expenditures. This everyone knows. However, the social cost has not so far entered the debate on the Tuition Tax Credit.

Many non-public schools educate youngsters at costs that are only a small fraction of the cost of public schools. Many parochial schools charge an annual tuition of $600.00 and there are Islamic and community schools which charge similar tuitions. On the other hand, the per child cost of education in some metropolitan school systems approaches $3,000.00. Old or new mathematics tells us that if we reduce the number of children receiving a $3,000 per year, poor quality education and increase the number of children receiving a $600.00 higher quality education, the nation as a whole will benefit by reduced educational expenditures and better education.[3]

Therefore, a broader assessment of costs would consider the likely reduction of educational expenditures at the state and local levels which would be the ultimate result of fewer children attending public schools. Tax credits will provide freer choice and as Professor West comments, ". . . insofar as choice promotes competition the result will be education that is more effective and less costly."

THE PROSPECTS FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The prediction that Tuition Tax Credits would lower the number of children attending public school has given rise to the argument that this tax measure would contribute to the destruction of public schools. This perhaps is the most revealing confession of the opponents of the Packwood-Moynihan bill, who are mostly members of the public education establishment. This position does not differ from one which says that if parents were given freedom of choice many would opt out of the public school system. In other words, the public education establishment is saying that if their state-granted monopoly powers are reduced, the schools run by them will be destroyed.

Destroyed is obviously too strong a word, because many, many public schools are doing an excellent job of educating America's youth. These are schools which satisfy parents and would not be threatened by increased competition. The schools that would be threatened by the reduction of monopoly powers are those public schools failing to do a job at least as good as their nearby competitors. These schools, for the most part, are those in inner cities that produce a product grossly inferior to their non-public counterparts. If such schools go out of business (become unattended), such an outcome is consistent with market efficiency and enhanced social welfare: the inefficient producers are weeded out and replaced by efficient producers.

CONCLUSION

At the heart of the problem in public education is a system of educational delivery which creates a perverse set of incentives for all parties involved. At the core of the perverse set of incentives is the fact that teachers get paid and receive raises whether or not children can read and write; administrators receive their pay whether or not children can read or write. Children (particularly minority children) receive grade promotions and diplomas whether or not they can read and write.

The individual parent who is poor is helpless in such a setting. It is quite difficult for the individual parent or group of parents to effectively force the public school system to produce a higher quality education. The benefit of the Tuition Tax Credit is that it enhances the possibility for the individual parent to fire the school providing poor services and to enroll his child in some other school providing better services. The Packwood-Moynihan bill promises to give low-income parents at least some of the powers that their higher-income counterparts have, namely a greater role in determining educational alternatives for their children.●

JOHN D. WORTHINGTON

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, when a community leader dies, his death has reverberations far beyond his local area. This is even more true when an influential community newspaper editor dies. John Worthington's influence in the life of the State of Maryland's extended far beyond the Harford County seat of Belair. For 20 years, as editor of the Harford Aegis, he saw his community grow from rural county seat to a major metropolitan bedroom suburb with all of its attendant problems and advantages. He guided the Aegis through this period with intelligence and sound business sense, so that today the newspaper he inherited from his father has a reach beyond the community of Belair. John Worthington's editorial commentary has fallen on receptive ears in his own Harford County, in the entire northeast corner of the State, in the councils of State government in Annapolis, and in the halls of Congress.

Mr. President, I wish to submit an announcement of his death for the RECORD, and in addition, a column from the Baltimore Sun by Peter Jay.

Peter Jay, himself a Harford County editor as well as a columnist in the Baltimore Sun, broke in as a reporter under John Worthington at the Aegis. He said it well in a recent column: "A Remembrance, With Affection." I would like, Mr. President, to have Mr. Jay's column of July 19 printed in the RECORD.

The articles follow:

J. D. WORTHINGTON, BEL AIR PUBLISHER

BALTIMORE (AP).—John D. Worthington III, 57, Harford County publishing and broadcasting executive, died Friday evening, two days after suffering an apparent stroke while driving to work.

A former president of the Maryland-Delaware-D.C. Press Association, Mr. Worthington was co-owner and publisher of the Aegis newspaper in Bel Air and president and co-owner of Bel Air Broadcasting Inc., which operates radio station WVOB.

He also served as president of the Maryland State Fair and Agriculture Society, which runs the state fair and Timonium Race Track.

Although Mr. Worthington lost control of his car at the time of the stroke, the vehicle came to rest in a field with little damage. He was transported first to Fallston General Hospital and then University Hospital here, where he died of a cerebral hemorrhage.

Survivors include his wife, two sons and a daughter.

A REMEMBRANCE, WITH AFFECTION

(By Peter A. Jay)

John Worthington was my first editor, and news of his death last week, at 57, hit me—and many others who knew him—very hard.

By anybody's standard, he was a kind and decent man, easily amused and gently tolerant. He was a newspaper editor neither by instinct nor by early training, but by circumstance, and he never seemed entirely comfortable in the role.

He had a problem shared by many sons of strong fathers: People often expected him to be a chip off the old block, and he wasn't. His father edited the weekly Aegis in Bel Air for the better part of a half-century until his death, very much in harness, in 1964; he was the archetypical country editor of his generation—a generally benign autocrat who was always consulted and usually deferred to.

(A former Harford county legislator remembers that he once introduced a local bill in Annapolis without discussing it first with old Mr. Worthington. A friend, horrified, told him he'd better go and see the editor quickly before the measure was denounced in the paper. He did, and the bill was later pronounced, editorially, to be "good legislation, poorly presented.")

Young John, who was really John 3d but whom everyone called Johnny, wasn't like that at all. He was an easy-going, friendly country boy, who in his youth worked not for the family newspaper but breeding and milking pedigreed Guernseys on the family dairy farm. It wasn't until the farm was sold for a housing development that he picked up a pencil and went to work at The Aegis. He was 36 at the time.

When his father died seven years later, he and his brother Dick found themselves in charge, and right in the middle of fast-changing times. Bel Air turned almost overnight into a traffic-choked bedroom suburb. Harford county, between 1960 and 1970, grew by 50 per cent. Business boomed. The Aegis's circulation grew and grew, as did its size and its revenues. It was another town, another life, and another paper from the one old Mr. Worthington had known.

But Johnny Worthington coped. He could have retired and lived on the paper's earnings, but he didn't. He was in the office daily, Saturdays too, answering the telephones and patiently enduring the abuse that is any editor's lot in these querulous times.

He wasn't a writer, but he did some writing, because that was part of the job. And his writing, especially a column called "Sitting on the Sidelines" he did in later years, a column full of homely anecdotes and local history, had a large following; it became one of the nicest and most personal features of the newspaper.

He never mastered the typewriter, though, and did his writing in pencil on yellow legal pads, using every other line. His handwriting was very neat, and the typesetters never complained.

Once, I remember, he was writing a letter that had to be typed, and he came into the newsroom where I was working as a reporter to use a typewriter. He rolled his paper carefully in, stared at the machine thoughtfully for a long time, and then carefully raised one finger and hit one key. "Damn it!" he said in exasperation, and everyone watching howled with glee. I never saw him at a typewriter again.

In recent years, with newspapers of all sizes being gobbled up by chains, the brokers were beating a path to his door. But he and his family held out, and The Aegis continued to grow. As time went on, John learned much more about publishing, especially its new technology and its economics. He was active in the state press association, and served a term as its president.

He was a community kind of a man. Both because he was John Worthington and because he was the local newspaper publisher, he was constantly asked to serve on this or that board—and he seldom refused. He was on the boards of two schools, the hospital, and (a job he loved) president of the Maryland state fair. He seldom missed a meeting, and in his amiable way helped resolve countless disputes.

A lot of people are going to miss Johnny Worthington, who made his own way as a man and a local newspaper publisher; hundreds of them, all sorts of people from all over the state, came to his funeral here on Monday. His son, John 4th, is working at The Aegis now. He probably isn't a chip off the old block either, but if he is, he can be proud of it.●

CHANGING ENERGY FORECASTS

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in March of this year, the Subcommittee on Energy of the Joint Economic Committee held hearings entitled "Energy in the Eighties: Can We Avoid Scarcity and Inflation?" Out of the hearings came forth what was then considered to be a radical idea; namely, that the world was not running out of oil at the pace suggested by the administration.

Since then, the evidence presented by some of the witnesses at our hearing, such as former Federal Energy Administrator John C. Sawhill, Britain's North Sea energy adviser Peter Odell, and geologist Dr. Bernardo Grossling, have come to be recognized as being closer to the truth. Each of the three were more optimistic than the administration, which feared that another severe price jump was likely by 1985.

The Washington Post, in an article which appeared on July 23, has now summarized the studies and opinions which have emerged since our hearings. For example, the Post story quotes a recent Trilateral Commission report, which John C. Sawhill coauthored, as stating:

After analyzing recent forecasts, the authors judge it unlikely that there would be any sharp and sudden upward movement in real prices of oil for at least the next ten to fifteen years—a judgment less alarmist than some others.

Similarly, the Post refers to an article in this month's Guardian in which Peter Odell cites three recent international studies that concluded that world oil reserves are two to six times larger than the conventional wisdom of the past suggested.

I want to draw the Senate's attention to this matter and again emphasize the need for additional exploration activities in the world.

Mr. President, I submit the Washington Post article, "Array of Experts Dispute 'Energy Crisis' Forecasts" for the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 23, 1978]

ARRAY OF EXPERTS DISPUTES "ENERGY CRISIS" FORECASTS

(By William Greider)

President Carter and the Congress have been so busy in the trenches, battling over solutions to the so-called "energy crisis," that they seem to have missed the good news from petroleum experts:

The world is not running out of oil and gas after all, not for a long time.

A substantial array of respectable sources agrees on this much:

The threat of "crisis" is not nearly as imminent as it was originally portrayed in the glooming warnings of the Carter administration. The possibility of an abrupt oil shortage is now considered unlikely for at least 12 to 15 years. The shock of another sudden rice escalation, likewise, will not threaten western nations before the 1990s. Around the world, nations are finding and beginning to produce new oil that was overlooked or undiscovered a few years ago.

In sum, the future energy problems look quite different today—and considerably less menacing—than they did 15 months ago when President Carter proposed his five-part energy package.

This message has emanated from various U.S. and international experts, month after month, for the past year, yet it has not made much impact on official Washington. The implications are so much at odds with the heavy rhetoric of the energy debate that neither the Carter administration nor its adversaries on Capitol Hill seems willing to take these new predictions seriously.

Carter's energy secretary, James R. Schlesinger, is sticking to his original dire forecast—that sometime between now and 1985 the world will suffer a terrible crisis if the United States doesn't adopt the administration's proposals for conservation by tax-and-price increases. Schlesinger dismisses holders of contrary opinion as "energy optimists."

The American public, however, has never taken the "energy crisis" as seriously as do the politicians and technocrats of Washington, who periodically scold the nation for its ignorance or greed. The public skepticism is encouraged, if not fully confirmed, by the optimistic revisions in recent forecasts.

A Schlesinger aide, after arguing vigorously against the competing forecasts, offered a mild concession to the possibility that they are right and the Carter administration is wrong. "These guys may be right," he allowed, "but it's the government's function to do the kind of worst-case planning and prepare for it. Our view is, fine, maybe they'll be right, maybe the crunch doesn't come until the 1990s, in which case we will have more time. That doesn't mean you don't have to set up the machinery."

In the meantime, the world markets are glutted with oil, particularly on the West Coast of the United States. This condition of surplus, which everyone agrees will last at least another year to two, appears to complicate Carter's selling job on Capitol Hill, but no one claims that the current oil glut is the main reason members of Congress are stalled over raising natural gas prices or taxing domestic crude oil up to the world market level.

Rep. Abner Mikva (D-Ill.), who supports the president's program, thinks the oil glut simply gives politicians one more reason to resist measures they don't much like in the first place. "It's hard to explain to people that you're going to raise prices and pretend there's a shortage when there isn't one," Mikva said.

In the long-range future, beyond the next couple of years of surplus, all predictions become less reliable, but outside the Carter administration there is a lengthening list of people who disagree with Schlesinger's forecast of crisis by 1985.

The list includes some people who should know. Ali Attiga, secretary general of the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC), assured a group of European businessmen last month that he now sees the world getting through the 1980s without any crisis of oil shortage and, thus, no sudden upward shock in Arab oil prices.

The Trilateral Commission, comprised of corporate leaders and government technocrats from North America, Western Europe and Japan, issued a new energy outlook that gently disagreed with former Trilateralist Jimmy Carter on the shape of the energy problem. "After analyzing recent forecasts, the authors judge it unlikely that there would be any sharp and sudden upward movement in real prices of oil for at least the next 10 to 15 years—a judgment less alarmist than some others," the Trilateral Commission report noted.

One of its co-authors, former federal energy administrator John C. Sawhill, explained the different outlook as a more reasonable form of persuasion.

"The way to characterize the problem is not to try to scare people into thinking that there's going to be an immediate shortage and long lines at gasoline pumps in the 1980s," Sawhill said, "but rather that by the 1990s we're going to have to develop a new generation of energy technology."

Other "energy optimists" include such conservative organizations as the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation. The industry-oriented foundation concluded that "oil shortage before the end of the century is a possibility but not a probability."

Some independent petroleum experts express their skepticism about a coming crisis in much stronger terms and they worry that political decisions will proceed now on wrong assumptions.

Bruce Wilson, an investment banker who specializes in petroleum, describes a wide variety of new developments, ranging from Canadian natural gas to Mexican oil discoveries, that argue for legislative caution.

"It is less certain now that we need the program drafted in 1977," Wilson said. "A reasonable man would look at the situation today and question whether it makes sense to go ahead."

Peter Odell of the Netherlands, an energy adviser to the British government on North Sea oil development, argues that the long-range future of oil is bright indeed. He predicts that world production should continue to grow for 50 more years—until the year 2025—and the oil industry may triple its size in that period.

"Even using relatively conservative figures for future oil availability," Odell wrote this month in the Guardian, "there are still at least two generations available to us to undertake the necessary research and development on alternative sorts of energy. This gives us time enough to weigh very carefully the pros and cons of different options so that we do not have to be rushed into premature decisions on issues such as the rapid development of nuclear power."

The Dutch expert, incidentally, thinks the American public is on the right track in suspecting that the oil companies invented the crisis for their own benefit. "The so-called generally accepted oil shortage," Odell wrote, "is the outcome of commercially oriented interests rather than a statement of the essential realities of the oil resources of the world. Oil companies are, of course, privileged to try to create the environment in which their own best interests are served, but there is no reason why the whole western world community should accept the companies' evaluation as the last or even the most appropriate word on the subject."

Odell cites three recent international surveys, conducted by institutes in France, Austria and the Soviet Union, that concluded world oil reserves are two-to-six times larger than the conventional wisdom of the past.

In the last year, Mexico has provided the petroleum world with a stunning example of how the old estimates of oil potential can be overtaken by new events. Seven years ago, the oil reserves of Mexico were listed at a piddling 3.6 billion barrels, about one-tenth of U.S. reserves. By 1974, the Central Intelligence Agency reported that Mexico might hold as much as 16 billion barrels.

With more aggressive exploration Mexico is now unofficially listed at somewhere in the range of 100 billion barrels—second only to Saudi Arabia and possibly Iraq—an estimate accepted privately by the Department of Energy.

The U.S. government is negotiating now for a trade and production agreement with Mexico that would insure development of that oil and gas and its delivery to American consumers, which could reduce the U.S. dependence on Middle East oil considerably. Mexico, in any case, intends to become a major exporter by the mid-1980s, selling 3 million to 4 million barrels a day.

Iraq, which used to be listed with reserves of 45 billion barrels, is now considered by experts to have at least 100 billion and is beginning to show greater interest in marketing that oil to the West.

A long list of other concrete changes, less spectacular than the Mexico finds but cumulatively perhaps as important, is cited by petroleum experts to support a more relaxed view of the future. Important natural gas deposits are being developed for export in Canada and Pakistan. Countries like Peru are becoming oil exporters and India is developing self-sufficiency.

Each of these and other developments will take some pressure off the world's prize supply of oil, the Middle East. Some experts like Wilson foresee a continuing period in which there is "tremendous downward pressure" on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) oil price, which in real terms has declined since the price shock of 1973, due to inflation.

The energy outlook also looks modestly brighter in the United States. The first trauma that led to public formulations of an "energy crisis" occurred when U.S. production of oil peaked in 1970 and began to decline. The same thing happened to U.S. natural gas production in 1972. The awareness of "finite resources" suddenly became a very serious issue, followed abruptly by the Arab oil embargo and four-fold price increase.

U.S. oil and gas production has turned around in the last year and increased modestly for the first time in five years. This is due to the new oil from Alaska's North Slope and offshore drilling for natural gas which started in the early 1970s. Meanwhile, imports declined modestly and the domestic problem at the moment is too much oil and gas.

The "energy optimists," as Schlesinger calls them, cite three fundamental reasons for the brighter picture, involving both the market forces of resource economics and the influence of government regulation.

OPEC's sharp price increases five years ago stunned the world and made a lot of companies and nations go looking for new oil and gas. In addition, previously known deposits of natural gas and oil, which were regarded as uneconomic when crude oil was at $2.50 a barrel, became worth developing when oil was at $12.50 a barrel.

Consumers, meanwhile, tried to use less—thus slowing down the natural increase in world consumption—and governments, including the United States, imposed conservation regulations designed to save oil by introducing new technology which is more efficient.

A leading example is the much-maligned American automobiles. Faced with the energy scare, Congress three years ago ordered Detroit to make smaller, lighter cars that are more fuel efficient. That changeover is under way and government energy officials predict that, even if Congress never passes another "gas guzzler" bill, U.S. consumption of gasoline will peak in the next couple of years and begin to decline—even with more cars and trucks, and more miles driven by Americans.

Schlesinger contends that the new optimism is ill-founded and the conflicting projections are all flawed one way or another, either by overstating the production potential of the Arab nations or by assuming a slow-growth economic future that would require less energy but would also be disastrous for the United States and its industrial allies.

"While novel and optimistic estimates of energy supply and demand do add spice to the energy debate," Schlesinger sarcastically told an Ohio audience last month, "the ultimate question comes down to whether the United States should base its policies and our national future on the hope that the prevailing projections might be wrong."

In Congress, Schlesinger is maneuvering to hold the fragile support for the compromise natural gas bill, a gradual schedule for lifting price controls, and he still hopes to revive the measure that nearly everyone else considers dead—the crude oil tax that would fill President Carter's promise to European allies by raising U.S oil prices to the world level.

Rep. Bob Eckhardt (D-Tex.), an administration supporter, thinks President Carter could wisely drop the issue of a crude oil tax until next year because the brighter forecasts give the country more time to settle the issue of oil pricing. Getting a tax bill this year cannot be done, he said, "without making enormous concessions to the oil companies in other ways than pricing."

The Western European nations and Japan are pushing for higher U.S. prices—not necessarily because of oil shortages—but because the lower-priced domestic oil in the United States gives American manufacturers a trade advantage. Cheaper oil means lower prices for U.S. products sold abroad.

"There was a long time in the 1950s," Eckhardt noted, "when our domestic oil was priced higher than theirs and you didn't see the Europeans doing anything about it. The heavens didn't fall nor was there any loud cry that it was destroying the economies of the world. Why should the world fall apart if we have a little manufacturing advantage?"

A handful in Congress have felt from the beginning, that the "energy crisis" was manufactured by the oil industry and they have fought any of the measures to raise prices and taxes on consumers.

One of them, Sen. James Abourezk (D-S.D.) plans to filibuster once more against the natural gas bill when the conference report comes to the Senate floor next month. This time, Abourezk may be joined by some pro-industry conservatives such as Sen. John Tower (R-Tex.) who think the deregulation compromise is worse than no bill at all.

Abourezk argues bluntly that "energy crisis" is a propaganda game to raise oil prices, nothing more.

"Not many understand that the crisis is a phoney," he said. "Even if they do, they don't know what to do about it."●

HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS ON CYPRUS

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, in early 1977, the British press revealed a confidential report by the prestigious European Commission on Human Rights concerning Turkish violations on Cyprus during and after Turkey's 1974 armed invasion of that country. The London Sunday Times account of that report appears below. I urge Members carefully to review this report as it details egregious violations of human rights by Turkey's Armed Forces on the tragic Island of Cyprus.

Furthermore, just last week, the European Commission on Human Rights again agreed to hear testimony on Turkish violations of human rights on Cyprus, this time concerning those alleged violations from July 10, 1976, to present. The Commission's decision to review the period since its first report on Cyprus came after 3 days of hearings on complaints by the Cyprus Government and responses thereto by the Turkish Government.

In undertaking this latest review the European Commission on Human Rights rejected the argument of the Turkish Government that Turkey has no jurisdiction and responsibility in respect of the part of Cyprus presently occupied by her military forces. Matters to be looked into by the European Commission on Human Rights include a wide range of actions by the Turkish forces concerning people under their jurisdiction and concerning the refugees who had been driven from their homes.

Mr. President, I ask that the London Sunday Times account referred to above be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the London Sunday Times, Jan. 23, 1977]

TURK ATROCITIES: WHAT SECRET REPORT REVEALS

The Sunday Times has obtained a copy of a secret Council of Europe report which finds Turkey guilty of violating seven articles of the European Convention on Human Rights. It amounts to a massive indictment of the Ankara government for the murder, rape and looting by its army in Cyprus during and after the Turkish invasion of summer 1974.

The politically explosive report by leading jurists on the European Commission of Human Rights is regarded as so confidential that only one copy has been lodged with each of the Council of Europe's 19 member states. Its impact could result in the withdrawal or expulsion of Turkey from the Council.

Allegations made by the Cyprus Government against Turkey covered systematic killings of civilians who were not involved in the 1974 fighting; repeated rape of women aged from 12 to 71, often brutally, in public; the torture and savage and humiliating treatment of hundreds of Greek Cypriots, including children, during their detention by the Turkish army; and charges of extensive looting and plunder which were supported by unpublished United Nations documents.

The Commission said it could reach no conclusion on allegations of forced labour.

The inquiry by the Commission of 17 members, under their British president, James Fawcett, began in May 1975. A delegation visited the island in September 1975, and submissions were received up to May 18, 1976.

The investigators were hampered by Turkey's refusal to participate in the inquiry—they were denied access to the "Turkish Federated State" unilaterally established in the occupied north of Cyprus. They were also hampered by the sheer number of alleged violations of the Convention, and had to restrict their investigation to a limited number of cases "selected as representative."

Copies of the report were sent to member governments as long ago as last August, but it will be next month before the Council's committee of ministers meets in Strasbourg to consider what action to take.

The Turkish government's response to the Commission's report has been to reject it out of hand. A statement issued by the Turkish Foreign Ministry in Ankara said: "The Commission examined the Greek [allegations] in a manner which we don't think is in accordance with the European Human Rights agreement, and in Turkey's absence.

"The Commission has thus based its report on the allegations of the Greek Cypriot Government and the statements of a few Greek witnesses alone which it listened to in four short days in Cyprus. And it prepared it [the report] with unusual haste."

Both the Turkish Foreign Ministry and Prime Minister, Suleyman Demirel, also complained that the Commission had not taken into account "the terrorist activities undertaken by the Greeks against the Turkish community" in Cyprus.

Referring to inter-communal strife on the island between 1963 and 1974, Mr. Demirel said: "Why does nobody see cruelty when it is committed against Turks? For years (Cypriot) Turks were subjected to cruelty but everyone was silent. Turks were pitilessly slaughtered from the baby in the cot to old people of 90. They were evicted from their houses and homes. Nobody saw that. Now they condemn Turks with a report."

Mr. Demirel added that Turks were "extraordinarily civilized people" and "have not committed cruelty or anything against anyone."

Last night a senior official of the Turkish Foreign Ministry said it was "a scandal" that The Sunday Times had obtained a copy of the Commission's report. He blamed "the Greeks."

TURKEY AND CYPRUS

On page ten of today's issue, we publish some of the details from a report about alleged Turkish atrocities in Cyprus. The report is the work of the Human Rights Commission of the Council of Europe. It is a horrendous indictment against Turkey and its soldiers and civilians sent from the mainland to the Turkish areas of Cyprus. The member Governments of the Council of Europe must decide next month whether or not to accept the report. If they do accept it, and it is difficult to see, on the evidence, how they can avoid doing so, then Turkey will stand condemned before the bar of European and indeed world opinion.

The first thing to be clear about is that these wrongdoings are the work of the Turks from the mainland. Turkish Cypriots harbour a credible sense of past grievance against the Greek Cypriot majority on the island. But they know that they can and must eventually live, as they have done for centuries, in peace with their Greek neighbours. The invaders from the north are another matter altogether. The government in Ankara as well as Turkish public opinion itself, must be brought to see that Turkish behaviour in Cyprus is a blot upon the good name and reputation of the Turkish people themselves. "Turks are extraordinarily civilised people," Mr. Demirel, the Turkish Prime Minister, said last week.

The Prime Minister can, of course, sustain this claim by producing counter evidence for the period of the European Commission report. But there are other steps of immediate relevance to the people in northern Cyprus today. He should issue orders—and see they are obeyed—for the protection of human rights. And he should permit free access (denied even to Turkish Cypriots) to all parts of northern Cyprus. These would be measures of good intent. The new President of the United States, who has pledged himself to defend human rights, should encourage Turkey in this; his moral fervour and humanity will be an important element in reasserting the need for America's NATO allies to observe irreducible standards of conduct.

THE TERRIBLE SECRETS OF THE TURKISH INVASION OF CYPRUS

(The plight of Cyprus, with 40 percent of the island still occupied by Turkish troops who invaded in the summer of 1974, is well known. But never before has the full story been told of what happened during and after the invasion. This article is based on the secret report of the European Commission of Human Rights. For obvious reasons, Insight has withheld the names of witnesses who gave evidence to the Commission.)

KILLING

Relevant Article of Human Rights Convention: Everyone's right to life shall be protected by law.

Charge made by Greek-Cypriots: The Turkish army embarked on a systematic course of mass killings of civilians unconnected with any war activity.

Turkish Defence: None offered, but jurisdiction challenged. By letter dated November 27, 1975, Turkey told the Commission it refused to accept the Greek Cypriot administration's right to go to the commission, "since there is no authority which can properly require the Turkish government to recognize against its will the legitimacy of a government which has usurped the powers of the estate in violation of the constitution of which Turkey is a guarantor." No defence therefore offered to any other charges either.

Evidence given to the commission: Witness Mrs. K said the powers of the state in violation that on July 21, 1974, the second day of the Turkish invasion, she and a group of villagers from Ella were captured when, fleeing from bombardment, they tried to reach a range of mountains. All 12 men arrested were civilians. They were separated from the women and shot in front of the women under orders of a Turkish officer. Some of the men were holding children, three of whom were wounded.

Written statements referred to two more group killings: at Trimithi eyewitnesses told of the deaths of five men (two shepherds aged 60 and 70, two masons of 20 and 60, and a 19-year-old plumber). At Palekythron 30 Greek Cypriot soldiers being held prisoner were killed by their captors, according to the second statement.

Witness S gave evidence of two other mass killings at Palekythron. In each case, between 30 and 40 soldiers who had surrendered to the advancing Turks were shot. In the second case, the witness said, "the soldiers were transferred to the kilns of the village where they were shot dead and burnt in order not to leave details of what had happened."

Seventeen members of two neighbouring families, including 10 women and five children aged between two and nine were also killed in cold blood at Palekythron, reported witness H. a doctor. Further killings described in the doctor's notes, recording evidence related to him by patients (either eyewitnesses or victims) included:

Execution of eight civilians taken prisoner by Turkish soldiers in the area of Prastio, one day after the ceasefire on August 16, 1974.

Killing by Turkish soldiers of five unarmed Greek Cypriot soldiers who had sought refuge in a house at Voni.

Shooting of four women, one of whom survived by pretending she was dead.

Further evidence, taken in refugee camps and in the form of written statements, described killings of civilians in homes, streets or fields, as well as the killing of people under arrest or in detention. Eight statements described the killing of soldiers not in combat; five statements referred to a mass grave found in Dherynia.

Commission's verdict: By 14 votes to one, the commission considered there were "very strong indications" of violation of Article 2 and killings "committed on a substantial scale."

RAPE

Relevant article: No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Charge by Greek-Cypriots: Turkish troops were responsible for wholesale and repeated rapes of women of all ages from 12 to 71, sometimes to such an extent that the victims suffered hemorrhages or became mental wrecks. In some areas, enforced prostitution was practised, all women and girls of a village being collected and put into separate rooms in empty houses where they were raped repeatedly.

In certain cases, members of the same family were repeatedly raped, some of them in front of their own children. In other cases women were brutally raped in public.

Rapes were on many occasions accompanied by brutalities such as violent biting of the victims causing severe wounding, banging their heads on the floor and wringing their throats almost to the point of suffocation. In some cases attempts to rape were followed by the stabbing or killing of the victims, victims included pregnant and mentally-retarded women.

Evidence given to commission: Testimony of doctors C and H, who examined the victims. Eyewitnesses and hearsay witnesses also gave evidence, and the commisison had before it written statements from 41 alleged victims.

Dr. H said he had confirmed rape in 70 cases, including:

A mentally-retarded girl of 24 was raped in her house by 20 soldiers. When she started screaming they threw her from the second-floor window. She fractured her spine and was paralysed;

One day after their arrival at Voni, Turks took girls to a nearby house and raped them;

One woman from Voni was raped on three occasions by four persons each time. She became pregnant;

One girl, from Palekythron, who was held with others in a house, was taken out at gunpoint and raped;

At Tanvu, Turkish soldiers tried to rape a 17-year-old schoolgirl. She resisted and was shot dead;

A woman from Gypsou told Dr. H. that 25 girls were kept by Turks at Marathouvouno as prostitutes.

Another witness said his wife was raped in front of their children. Witness S. told of 25 girls who complained to Turkish officers about being raped and were raped again by the officers. A man (name withheld) reported that his wife was stabbed in the neck while resisting rape. His granddaughter, aged six, had been stabbed and killed by Turkish soldiers attempting to rape her.

A Red Cross witness said that in August 1974, while the island's telephones were still working, the Red Cross Society received calls from Palekythrou and Kaponti reporting rapes. The Red Cross also took care of 38 women released from Voni and Gypsou detention camps: all had been raped, some in front of their husbands and children. Others had been raped repeatedly, or put in houses frequented by Turkish soldiers.

These women were taken to Akrotiri hospital, in the British Sovereign Base Area, where they were treated. Three were found to be pregnant. Reference was also made to several abortions performed at the base.

Commission's verdict: By 12 votes to one the commission found "that the incidents of rape described in the cases referred to and regarded as established constitute 'inhuman treatment' and thus violations of Article 3 for which Turkey is responsible under the convention."

TORTURE

Relevant article: see above under Rape.

Charge by Greek-Cypriots: Hundreds of people, including children, women and pensioners, were victims of systematic torture and savage and humiliating treatment during their detention by the Turkish army. They were beaten, according to the allegations, sometimes to the extent of being incapacitated. Many were subjected to whipping, breaking of their teeth, knocking their heads against walls, beating with electrified clubs, stubbing of cigarettes on their skin, jumping and stepping on their chests and hands, pouring dirty liquids on them, piercing them with bayonets, etc.

Many, it was said, were ill-treated to such an extent that they became mental and physical wrecks. The brutalities complained of reached their climax after the ceasefire agreements; in fact, most of the acts described were committed at a time when Turkish armed forces were not engaged in any war activities.

Evidence to Commission: Main witness was schoolteacher, one of 2,000 Greek Cypriot men deported to Turkey. He stated that he and his fellow detainees were repeatedly beaten after their arrest, on their way to Adana (in Turkey), in jail in Adana and in prison camp at Amasya.

On ship to Turkey—"That was another moment of terrible beating again. We were tied all the time. I lost the sense of touch. I could not feel anything for about two or three months. Every time we asked for water or spoke we were being beaten."

Arriving at Adana—". . . then, one by one, they led us to prisons, through a long corridor . . . Going through that corridor was another terrible experience. There were about 100 soldiers from both sides with sticks, clubs and with their fists beating every one of us while going to the other end of the corridor. I was beaten at least 50 times until I reached the other end.

In Adana anyone who said he wanted to see a doctor was beaten. "Beating was on the agenda every day. There were one or two very good, very nice people, but they were afraid to show their kindness, as they told us."

Witness P spoke of:

A fellow prisoner who was kicked in the mouth. He lost several teeth "and his lower jaw came off in pieces."

A Turkish officer, a karate student, who exercised every day by hitting prisoners.

Fellow prisoners who were hung by the feet over the hole of a lavoratory for hours.

A Turkish second lieutenant who used to prick all prisoners with a pin when they were taken into a yard.

Evidence from Dr. H. said that prisoners were in an emaciated condition on their return to Cyprus. On nine occasions he had found signs of wounds.

The doctor gave a general description of conditions in Adana and in detention camps in Cyprus (at Pavlides Garage and the Saray Prison in the Turkish quarter of Nicosia) as reported to him by former detainees. Food, he said, consisted of one-eighth of a loaf of bread a day, with occasional olives; there were two buckets of water and two mugs which were never cleaned, from which about 1,000 people had to drink; toilets were filthy, with feces rising over the basins; floors were covered with feces and urine; in jail in Adana prisoners were kept 76 to a cell with three towels between them and one block of soap per eight persons per month to wash themselves and their clothes.

One man, it was alleged, had to amputate his own toes with a razor blade as a consequence of ill-treatment. Caught in Achna with another man, they had been beaten up with hard objects. When he had asked for a glass of water he was given a glass full of urine. His toes were then stepped on until they became blue, swollen and eventually gangrenous. (The other man was said to have been taken to hospital in Nicosia, where he agreed to have his legs amputated. He did not survive the operation.)

According to witness S, "hundreds of Greek Cypriots were beaten and dozens were executed. They have cut off their ears in some cases, like the case of Palekythro and Trahoni. . . ." (verbatim record).

Verdict by commission: By 12 votes to one, the commission concluded that prisoners were in a number of cases physically ill-treated by Turkish soldiers. "These acts of ill-treatment caused considerable injuries and in at least one case, the death of the victim. By their severity they constitute 'inhuman treatment' in the sense of Article 3, for which Turkey is responsible under the convention."

LOOTING

Relevant article: Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions.

Charge by Greek Cypriots: In all Turkish-occupied areas, the Turkish army systematically looted houses and business premises of Greek Cypriots.

Evidence to commission: Looting in Kyrenia was described by witness C: "* * * The first days of looting of the shops was done by the army, of heavy things like refrigerators, laundry machines, television sets" (verbatim record).

For weeks after the invasion, he said, he had watched Turkish naval ships taking on board the looted goods.

Witness K, a barrister, described the pillage of Famagusta: "At two o'clock an organised systematic, terrifying, shocking, unbelievable looting started * * * We heard the breaking of doors, some of them iron doors, smashing of glass, and we were waiting for them any minute to enter the house. This lasted for about four hours."

Written statements by eyewitnesses of looting were corroborated by several reports by the secretary-general of the United Nations.

Verdict of Commission: The commission accepted that looting and robbery on an extensive scale, by Turkish troops and Turkish Cypriots, had taken place. By 12 votes to one, it established that there had been deprivation of possessions of Greek Cypriots on a large scale.

OTHER CHARGES

On four counts, the commission concluded that Turkey had also violated an Article of the Convention asserting the right to respect for private and family life, home and correspondence. The commission also decided that Turkey was continuing to violate the Article by refusing to allow the return of more than 170,000 Greek Cypriot refugees to their homes in the north.

On three counts, the commission said Turkey had breached an Article laying down the right to liberty and security of person by confining more than 2,000 Greek Cypriots in schools and churches.

Finally, the commission said Turkey had violated two more articles that specify that the rights and freedoms in the Convention shall be secured without discrimination on any ground, and that anyone whose rights are violated "shall have an effective remedy before a national authority."

GRONSETH ON PROPOSITION 13 AND THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, a distinguished pastor in my State, the Reverend Harold Gronseth, has written an article with respect to Proposition 13, the Declaration of Independence, and the remarks by Alexandr Solzhenitsyn at the Harvard graduation. It is a very interesting summary of these important events, and I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROPOSITION 1776

(By The Rev. Harold O. Gronseth)

Abraham Lincoln said it at Gettysburg: "Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." That proposition takes us back to 1776.

For 169 years the 13 colonies had been loyal to their mother country. Repeated abuses of power, by both the Parliament and the king, stirred an exceptional group of angry intellectuals to form a new nation. Pledging to each other their lives, fortunes and sacred honor, they signed a Declaration of Independence which contained 27 charges of "repeated injuries and usurpations." The result was a long and bloody war for those who wanted—more than gold—life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

The Declaration states: "Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends (inalienable rights) it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it. . . ." Proposition 13 in California is a revolt of taxpaying citizens, not to abolish government, but to alter it. It is being led by Howard Jarvis, who for 16 years has battled for more simplicity and economy in government. Ignored by the "big shots," he took the issue to the people—and they spoke so loudly politicians are running scared. The heart of the protest is just two words: "too much."

Too much taxation. The 1776ers' indictment read: "Imposing taxes on us without our consent." They called it, "Taxation without representation." We have representatives, but too many of them are thinking of news ways to tax. There are 116 different taxes on a loaf of bread.

We have the service tax, the excessive capital gains tax and the double taxation of dividends. And who can afford to die, having dependents, with the present estate tax? The colonist protested the stamp tax and the import tax by dumping the tea into the sea. It has been well said the power to tax is the power to destroy. Ask farmers who have lost their way of life. Ask businesspersons who have been destroyed by taxation. People are tired of those who have the power to raise their own salaries and avoid some of the taxes the common herd has to pay.

Too many payrollers. The proposition of 1776 reads: "He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither a swarm of officers, to harass our people, and eat out their substance." Boy, does that sound familiar! One out of every five workers is employed by government—federal, state or local. Just too much government, with agencies galore investigating and directing nearly every area of your life. Forms and questionnaires, which, according to the Office of Management and Budget, consume 785 million hours of time each year, and drive citizens into near insanity.

It is the citizens who love America who want to alter it before inflation, a depreciated dollar, titanic debts and uncontrolled deficit spending destroy our democracy. They believe in and are ready and willing to be justly taxed for defense, education, police and fire protection, and to meet reasonable human needs. They also believe there are millions of public workers and legislators who are to be commended for their services to the nation. They do want to weed out the loafers and the cheaters. Jarvis may have jarred us into action. Born in protest, we may be reborn the same way.

Where did our nation's founders get their Proposition 1776 ideas? From their practical experience in public life, and from the writings of Aristotle, Thomas Aquinas, Isaac Newton, John Locke, Patrick Henry, Thomas Paine—and the Bible. In the Declaration they left us the words, "Nature's God" and "Divine Providence." On their Liberty Bell, used to announce the Declaration, were the words: "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." (Lev. 25:10) They must have read Proverbs 29:2 "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice: But when the wicked bareth rule, the people mourn"—and also come up with Proposition 13.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn, in his commencement address at Harvard, spoke for an hour on both the sins of the Soviets and of Americans. He accused us of many evils—civic cowardice, immoral legalism, licentious press, Godless humanism. This good, brave and brilliant man is both right and wrong. As an exile he really knows very little of the American character and of the flexibility of our democracy. Our history speaks for itself. It needs no defense. Before next Tuesday, read the Declaration of Independence and on Sunday sing with your congregation:

"America! America!
May God thy gold refine
Till all success be nobleness
And every gain divine."

THE PLIGHT OF THE KURDS DEMANDS RATIFICATION OF THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, we have recently paid much attention to the problems of the Middle East. The sale of fighters to Egypt, Saudi Arabia, and Israel, the arms embargo against Turkey, and our efforts to achieve peace between Israel and her neighbors have all figured prominently in the public eye. In the midst of so many grave international dilemmas, we seem to have forgotten one small, but important matter, worthy of international concern.

Mr. President, we have forgotten about the Kurds. The 10 million Kurdish people scattered across Turkey, Iran, Iraq, and Syria are right now engaged in a struggle to exist. It is a struggle that has gone on for at least half a century.

Descended from the Medes, who brought down the vast Assyrian Empire 2½ millenia ago, the Kurds possess a long and noble history. With the formation of powerful Middle Eastern States in the first part of this century, the Kurds came under increasing pressure to give up their national identity. Valiant, bloody rebellions by the Kurds in Turkey, Iran, and Iraq were crushed, one after another. Still, the Kurds have refused to abandon their heritage.

Mr. President, this is not the first time that we have forgotten the Kurds. In 1974, when it served our foreign policy interest to have the Arabs fight among themselves, we supplied a Kurdish rebellion against Iraq with arms, by way of Iran. The political climate changed in 1975. Iran and Iraq became reconciled, and we responded by cutting off aid to the Kurds. Since then, the rebellion has been crushed by the Iraqis.

The persecution of the Kurdish people now taking place brings to mind another matter of international concern that seems to have been forgotten. The Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide has awaited ratification by the Senate for 29 years.

Ten million Kurdish people are threatened with the destruction of their culture and their lives. No matter of international concern can be so important that 10 million people can be forgotten. We must ratify the Genocide Convention and recognize the persecution of the Kurdish people for what it is—an international crime.

AIRLINE MUTUAL AID PACT

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, Senate Joint Resolution 149 introduced last week may have given some the feeling that in directing the Civil Aeronautics Board to terminate the Airline's Mutual Aid Pact that it provides only restriction for airline companies with no examination of the pilot's part in this prolonged 85-day strike of Northwest Airlines.

Not so. Read section 3 of Senate Joint Resolution 149. It directs the CAB to report back in 6 months recommendations for better collective-bargaining methods for the airline industry to avoid future long strikes.

The pilot's middle range of pay is $40,000 to $60,000 per year and the senior overseas captains make over $100,000. That is not bad.

I do not feel qualified to determine the right pay range for pilots any more than I feel qualified to gage the proper salaries for some airline executives I know who point out that the pilots are well paid for working only half of the month.

But I do know that over the years in the collective-bargaining process the airlines themselves have created the pilots' pay structure. That is not because there has been or is now a shortage of pilots.

My concern with the Mutual Aid Pact is that during the past 8 years with 5 strikes totaling 348 days Northwest has on 3 occasions had protracted strikes. They bargained tough with pilots or clerks because, in my judgment, they could afford the long strikes with heavy contributions of the pact funds. The record shows Northwest is one of two airlines that have shown a profit each year during the past 10 years. That includes a good profit even in 1970 when Northwest's strike lasted 163 days—almost half the year. The formula of the pact assures a struck airline a percentage of their average daily operating costs that they pay out when actually flying. That percentage paid by the other pact airlines goes to Northwest even though their airplanes are on the ground with no fuel costs and the laid off workers are not costing Northwest. Yet the pact funds flow into Northwest's till.

Currently they have realized $85 million for not flying 85 days.

I believe it is an anticompetitive arrangement, benefiting a strong airline like Northwest at the expense of the weaker airlines draining their finances.

The victims of this strike have my greatest sympathy.

These victims are:

First. Northwest's 9,500 other workers not on strike but who are laid off.

Second. The public dependent upon Northwest for needed travel and air freight, particularly in much of Northwest's territory where alternative air service is not available.

Third. The air terminals and related businesses primarily served by Northwest that are suffering losses because of loss of business.

Fourth. The passengers on the other pact airlines who, through their ticket purchases help subsidize the pact for Northwest's strike which ironically impacts other airlines making reservations tough and seats scarce or not available.

Senate Joint Resolution 149 provides the proper and timely means of opening the discussion of the mutual aid pact and collective bargaining procedures in the airline industry. It is time we do; because the public interest is at stake on both issues—and on both sides—and Congress is the proper forum for public hearings.

I hope my fellow Senators will consider the resolution as a start to avoid future long strikes in this vital industry—a needed part of our transportation system which contributes heavily to a healthy economy.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF POSITION ON VOTES—S. 3085 AND S. 2534

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, on Friday, July 21, the Senate passed two measures, the so-called child nutrition bill, S. 3085, and the health maintenance organizations bill, S. 2534.

I was in Alaska meeting with the Governor and addressing a group of the University of Alaska when these votes were taken. However, I would like the record to show that if present and voting, I would have voted "yea" in favor of both measures.

LIMITED EMBARGO ON ARMS TO TURKEY

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, the Senate will vote tomorrow on amendments to repeal the limited embargo on arms to Turkey. In considering this issue, I hope Members will review the following editorial from Saturday's New York Times, which urges that the Senate maintain the limitations on arms sales to Turkey.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the editorial be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, July 22, 1978]

CYPRUS AND THE SENATE

The Senate is about to vote on whether to continue the limitations on arms sales to Turkey. They were imposed after Ankara used American-supplied weapons to occupy two-fifths of Cyprus in 1974, in violation of a Congressional prohibition. We have argued in the past that the limits should be kept until Turkey indicates it will withdraw its forces. We still think so.

Few controversies are as vexing as the feud between the half million Greek Cypriots and the 120,000 Turkish Cypriots over how they will coexist on their island. Their centuries-old quarrel has reached into American politics. The Turks and Turkish Cypriots and their American sympathizers contend that national pride forbids concessions on Cyprus so long as the "embargo" stands. Direfully, they predict that maintaining last year's $175-million limit on arms sales will drive Turkey out of NATO, perhaps even into Moscow's arms. But it would be no gain for the West to purchase Turkish good will at the price of Greek resentment.

When Jimmy Carter was a candidate for President he held that the restriction on arms sales should stand until Ankara withdrew the force that enables Turkish Cypriots, with 20 percent of the island's population, to occupy roughly 40 percent of its territory. This spring, however, he urged that the embargo be lifted. Administration spokesmen maintain that once it is lifted, Ankara will make generous diplomatic proposals. But the Government of Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit has so far given no sign that it is prepared to risk the domestic consequences of offering the concessions needed to reach an accommodation. The vague proposal put forward by the Turkish Cypriots on Thursday for resettling some Greek refugees is welcome but scarcely sufficient. The Turkish concessions need to be territorial.

Where Greek Cypriots go wrong is in insisting that their preponderance in numbers also entitles them to the kind of predominance they enjoyed under the island's 1960 constitution. If the Turkish Cypriots would yield significantly on territory, they could more credibly insist on a constitution that provides for virtually autonomous states for the two communities, linking them only for a minimum of such "federal" functions as conducting foreign affairs and issuing currency.

Greek Cypriots denounce this idea as a mere division of the island. Even if this were true, there would be no alternative; nothing except good will can force the two communities to work together. Because ending Turkey's occupation remains an essential first step toward creating an atmosphere of trust, Congress should not yet relax the restrictions on arms sales. It should make clear to the Greek Cypriots, however, that the United States intends to help them reclaim their farms and villages but not to restore their domination of the Turkish population.

SPECIAL ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the orders for the recognition of Senators previously entered have been consummated, Mr. MCGOVERN be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes and Mr. DURKIN be recognized for not to exceed 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe the lineup of Senators for recognition under orders previously entered is as follows: Mr. MOYNIHAN, 15 minutes; Mr. YOUNG, 5 minutes; Mr. JAVITS, 15 minutes; Mr. MCGOVERN, 5 minutes, and Mr. DURKIN, 10 minutes. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

TIME-LIMITATION AGREEMENT—H.R. 12935

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at such time as the legislative branch appropriations bill, Calendar Order No. 953, H.R. 12935, is made the pending business before the Senate, there be a time agreement thereon as follows: One hour to be equally divided between Mr. SASSER and Mr. SCHWEIKER, 30 minutes on any amendment, 20 minutes on any debatable motion or appeal or point of order if such is submitted to the Senate for its discussion, and with the proviso that there be 1 hour on an amendment by Mr. CHAFEE, and that the agreement be in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TIME-LIMITATION AGREEMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT, S. 1678

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at such time as the conference report on S. 1678, the Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act, is called up, there be a time limitation overall of 1 hour, to be equally divided between Mr. LEAHY and Mr. DOLE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING COMMITTEE REPORT ON S. 3077

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Environment and Public Works have until July 26 to report on S. 3077, the Export-Import Bank reauthorization amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR JOINT RESOLUTIONS TO BE HELD AT DESK

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to hold at the desk, pending further disposition, House Joint Resolution 682 and House Joint Resolution 946.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, appoints the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) as a congressional adviser to the official delegation to the second session of the United States-ASEAN Dialog, to be held in Washington, D.C., August 2–4, 1978.

ORDER TO CONVENE 9:30 A.M. ON WEDNESDAY, JULY 26, 1978

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the convening hour tomorrow is 10 o'clock a.m. Is the convening hour on Wednesday set for 9:30 a.m. or 10?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is now set for 10 o'clock.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the convening hour on Wednesday be 9:30 a.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR SENATE TO CONVENE AT 9 A.M. ON THURSDAY, FRIDAY, AND SATURDAY OF THIS WEEK

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate completes its business on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, it stand in recess until the hours of 9 o'clock a.m. on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, respectively.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR SENATE TO CONVENE AT 10 A.M. ON MONDAY, JULY 31, 1978

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes on Monday of next week, it convene at the hour of 10 o'clock a.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I want to indicate to all Senators that on tomorrow the Senate will come in at 10 a.m.

There will be some orders for the recognition of Senators, and then the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Foreign Assistance Act. There will be rollcall votes on various amendments to that act tomorrow; and if we do not complete action on tomorrow, the votes will continue into Thursday.

I anticipate that the subject of the repeal of the embargo on arms to Turkey probably will be the first matter to be decided by the Senate. I hope that issue could be resolved before the day is over tomorrow and that perhaps the Senate could get some of the other controversial issues resolved as well.

I thank the Senate for its patience.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to and, at 7:52 p.m., the Senate recessed until tomorrow, July 25, 1978, at 10 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

AMENDMENT TO COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT EXTENSION

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall be offering an amendment to the Commodity Exchange Act Extension (H.R. 10285) that would tighten up the procedures under which the Commodity Futures Trading Commission oversees rule changes proposed by the numerous contract markets in this country.

Among the many responsibilities assigned to the Commission under the Commodity Exchange Act, section 5(a) places an oversight responsibility on the Commission to review and sanction all changes that are proposed in the rules that govern the operation of contract markets. The Commission currently receives approximately 300 notifications of rule changes per year, about 200 of which are actually presented to the commissioners for approval.

The Commodity Exchange Act and the regulations which accompany it are vague, to say the least, on the administrative procedures which the contract markets and the Commission are required to abide by. There is currently no requirement for the posting of public notice of a proposed rule change. There is no right provided for in the act or the regulations for an aggrieved party to petition for a public hearing before the commissioners.

Although a contract market is currently required to state the purpose of a proposed rule change in its submission for approval to the Commission, there is no requirement that the underlying reasoning or possible impacts of the change be included in the submission.

The purpose of my amendment is to extend to the Commodity Futures Trading Commission similar administrative procedures that apply to other Government agencies under the Administrative Procedures Act. Simply put, I believe that a public agency such as the CFTC charged with oversight functions in the public interest should operate openly and guarantee the right of the public to observe and take part if they so desire in the decisionmaking process.

My amendment calls for the submission by the contract markets of an economic and statistical analysis that would accompany any application to the Commission for approval of a rule change. Ironically, this provision would actually reduce the administrative workload of the Commission. By shifting the burden of proofing the proposed rule change on to the promulgator of the rule—that is, the contract markets—this would serve to reduce the amount of investigative research that the Commission is currently required to undertake.

Other parts of my amendment incorporate similar language to that included in the Administrative Procedures Act. On receipt of a proposed rule change, the Commission would be required to publish notice of the change in the Federal Register and allow a period of 60 days for public comment and participation in the approval process. In addition, my amendment would guarantee the right of a public hearing before the commissioners to an aggrieved party. All decisions of the Commission would be required to be reached at a public hearing within 90 days of receipt of the proposed rule change.

In urging you to support my amendment, I want you to know that I would be the last person to propose unnecessary burdensome regulations on yet another agency. In this case, however, I think the administrative procedures that I am suggesting are fully justified both to protect the rights of the public in decisionmaking and protecting the Commission itself from possible charges of unfair or secretive practices. If the contract markets or the Commission have nothing to hide, there can be no strong objection to this amendment which seeks only to insure that decisions are reached openly and above board.

I urge your support for this amendment.●

HOUSE SOLAR PROJECT

HON. J. J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I commend my able colleagues Chairman "Bizz" JOHNSON, Subcommittee Chairman NORMAN MINETA, and the Honorable BILL WALSH for moving ahead in the introduction today of legislation to authorize the installation of solar collectors on certain House Office Buildings.

At the beginning of this Congress I introduced legislation for a feasibility study to determine if solar collectors could be used in a beneficial and cost effective manner on any of the House Office Buildings. This measure passed the House by a vote of 368 to 29 on May 17, 1977. On April 28 of this year the Architect of the Capitol transmitted to the Speaker of the House the completed study.

This study indicated that over 50 percent of the domestic water heating, 13 percent of the building heating, and 34 percent of the air-conditioning needs of House Office Building Annex No. 2 could be supplied with solar energy; and that over 48 percent of the domestic water heating, 33 percent of the winter preheating and 79 percent of the summer reheating needs of the Rayburn House Office Building could be supplied through the use of solar collectors. Translated into a long-range overview, the study indicates the solar collectors would repay their installation costs and begin to reap concrete savings within a reasonable time. The collectors would save over $4.5 million in utility costs for these two structures within the first 20 years even assuming only moderate increases in current fuels costs. Since the buildings have a life expectancy of far more than 20 years, this is a useful and cost-effective step.

The collectors on the Rayburn Building will not be visible from the ground so that the architectural integrity of the Capitol complex will not be disturbed.

A study was made of the Longworth and Cannon House Office Buildings as well, but these buildings do not have enough proper roof space with sufficient structural strength to make the use of solar collectors economically viable given the current State of solar technology.

Accordingly, the legislation being introduced today contains no authorizations concerning these two structures.

This legislation, therefore, does not expect too much, and it does not expect too little. It is carefully thought out, and it is prudent and cost effective.

I think it is a healthy step for the Congress to take. While the experts argue over when, where, how, and at what cost we will face a fossil fuel energy shortage, all are agreed that between now and the early years of the next century we need to be developing alternative energy sources.

The Congress has taken the lead more than once in providing funding for a national effort to improve our alternative energy possibilities. But, as the Good Book says in James 1:22, "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only;" and that is what we can do here. If every Congressman can go home and say, "We use solar energy in our office buildings in Washington," it will speak louder than a thousand grant and loan programs—and at a very small cost which will be repaid to the taxpayer in a short time.

So I am very pleased that the distinguished chairman of the Public Works Committee and other members of that committee are moving forward on this matter. I thank them for their assistance, their encouragement, and their support.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. TOM CORCORAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, due to a previous commitment in my district, I was forced to be absent during the consideration of several important issues during part of Wednesday, July 19. In order that my positions on these issues will be a part of the public record, I insert the following voting record for the four recorded votes that I missed in today's RECORD:

Rollcall No. 566: On final passage of H.R. 1609, Coal Pipeline Act of 1978, "nay."

Rollcall No. 567: On ordering the previous question to House Resolution 1172, providing for consideration of H.R. 11983, Federal Election Commission authorization, fiscal year 1979, paired for.

Rollcall No. 568: On final passage of H.R. 11983, "yea."

Rollcall No. 569: On agreeing to House Resolution 1277, providing for consideration of H.R. 13385, temporary increase in the public debt limit, "nay." ●

CHASING SUBATOMIC PARTICLES AND FERMILAB

HON. TOM CORCORAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, during my nearly 18 months in Congress, I have become acquainted with several national scientific achievements. One such area of expertise is the high energy physics field. In my district in Batavia, Ill., there exists one of the most prestigious facilities in the country where these types of experiments and research are carried out each day—Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory (Fermilab).

It is with a deep sense of reluctance that I announce the resignation last week of Dr. Robert Wilson, the founder of the lab and its "father" since its inception in 1967. Dr. Wilson resigned because of the problems the facility was having with Federal funds, at least primarily. But he was also concerned with the keen competition from Europe in the high energy physics field.

Fortunately, the House of Representatives has increased the appropriations for Fermilab by $13 million over that of the Department of Energy budget for next year; and I thank my colleagues for their assistance in this respect. The Senate hopefully will also increase appropriations for this laboratory. This certainly will help the facility, but the increased competition from Europe will necessitate an awareness on our part that this country must continue to forge ahead in this field or be left behind. At this time, I am including an article from the Tuesday, April 11, 1978 Christian Science Monitor which details some of the problems which are of concern to American scientists. I would ask that this article by Robert C. Cowen be included in the RECORD:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Apr. 11, 1978]

CHASING SUBATOMIC PARTICLES

(By Robert C. Cowen)

As physicist Robert R. Wilson puts it, in the pursuit of subatomic particles, "something interesting is up."

A confluence of discovery and theoretical insight suggests that the particle hunters are on the verge of a deeper understanding of the basic structure of matter.

New machines, planned or under construction, promise to carry the search into an energy range where some long-standing mysteries should be resolved, and perhaps new puzzles revealed.

Yet, just when his field is poised for this breakthrough, Dr. Wilson has resigned the directorship of the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory (Fermilab) at Batavia, Illinois—a facility physicists have considered the jewel among American high-energy physics research centers.

This resignation is a dramatic protest against what Dr. Wilson calls "funding . . . below that necessary to operate . . . responsibly." But his gesture has an even deeper meaning. For the American physicist's underlying concern seems to be what he considers an inability to keep up with European scientists. The rise of that competition in this decade marks a historic change for a field of fundamental science that was created in the U.S. and dominated by Americans for 40 years.

"Now we're going to have to be satisfied to compete in this field, rather than dominate it. Now we are learning to live with others, especially the Europeans, as vigorous partners," says Sidney Drell of Stanford University and chairman of the High Energy Physics Advisory Panel (HEPAP) of the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE).

CRITICISM REJECTED

Dr. Drell disagrees with the contention that American high-energy physics is underfunded. Some critics, such as those at Fermilab, feel the present roughly $300 million-a-year level is some $50 million short of what is needed. But Dr. Drell says the administration's fiscal 1979 budget request ($288.1 million for DOE with a few percent more available from the National Science Foundation) is the minimum needed to maintain a "viable level." "In my opinion," he adds, "it provides for a very healthy program."

That, however, is very much a matter of opinion. Milton G. White of Princeton University, who is chairman of the Board of Trustees of University Research Association (URA), says he believes American high-energy physics is not able to fulfill its potential. It is falling behind that of Europe, and this is discouraging many of the bright, able, dedicated people who carry it out. URA is a consortium of 53 universities (52 in the United States, one in Canada) that manages Fermilab for the DOE. While Dr. Drell speaks for a panel whose judgments represents a quasi-official assessment of priorities among senior physicists, Dr. White has a vantage point from which he can discern a wider spectrum of feeling.

Thus it is that American physicists, whose first particle-probing accelerator was invented in 1930, are adjusting uneasily to the fact that others may preempt the laurels of discovery—and this at a time when the promise of major new findings gleams tantalizingly on the horizon.

To appreciate the agony this causes, one must plunge, at least briefly, into the bewildering world of the particles. It is a cosmos where even experts are hard put to find a handy image to help visualize what is going on.

Hit a plutonium atom with the right kind of particle (a neutron) and it "splits," releasing energy in the process. The image is rough, but workable enough to visualize what happens in nuclear fission.

But what do you make of two protons (particles that help make up the nuclei of atoms) banging together? The protons don't "split." There is just a profusion of new particles, including more protons, which appear out of "nowhere" as energy transmutes itself into material mass—according to the famous equivalence of mass and energy deduced by Einstein.

GARBAGE CANS IN COLLISION

It's a situation that Dr. Wilson calls "as complex as two garbage cans in collision." That is perhaps as good an image as you can get to help visualize the interaction. The "true" picture—to the extent that physicists can get at the "truth" about particles—is represented by abstractions that are best handled mathematically.

Nevertheless, physicists have brought a high degree of order to their description of the particles over the past 20 years, and this can be outlined simply.

To begin with, physicists distinguish between what they call matter and antimatter. The latter is a kind of mirror image of ordinary matter. A particle and its antiparticle are alike in all respects except that certain properties, such as electric charge, may be reversed between them. Thus, while a proton has a positive electric charge the antiproton has a negative charge.

Particles and their antiparticles often are created in pairs in subnuclear interactions. A photon (a particle of light) may materialize as an electron and its antiparticle the positron (a positively charged electron). When particle and antiparticle meet, they may annihilate each other, dematerializing their mass into a burst of pure energy. Electrons and positrons can vanish in a flash of light.

Physicists classify particles and their antiparticles into two major families called leptons and hadrons—names that could have come straight out of Tolkien.

Leptons are particles that don't "feel" the so-called strong force that binds together protons and similar but electrically uncharged particles called neutrons to make the nuclei of atoms.

Leptons are the closest thing to an elementary particle that physicists have seen. There is no hint they consist of anything more fundamental. And there is only a handful of them. So far, the existence of four leptons (plus their antiparticles) has been established. They include the electron, a similar but more heavily charged particle called the muon, and two kinds of neutrino, which are electrically neutral particles that have no intrinsic mass but which carry energy.

Hadrons, on the other hand, do respond to the strong nuclear force and are anything but elementary. They include the proton and neutron and hundreds of other particles that may just be different manifestations of something more fundamental. Over the past decade, physicists have convinced themselves that this "something" is a set of elementary particles called quarks—a term originated in James Joyce's novel "Finnegans Wake."

Quarks come in several varieties. They have electric charges that are positive or negative fractions (one-third or two-thirds) of the amount of charge on an electron. At first, there was evidence of three quarks called "up," "down," and "strange." Then indications of a fourth quark appeared, a particle with a property called "charm." Now physicists are in hot pursuit of definitive evidence for what may be two more quarks tentatively called "top" and "bottom" or "truth" and "beauty."

While physicists don't understand in a fundamental sense all the properties that distinguish such particles, they give them whimsical names and can take precise account of them mathematically. Thus hadrons are said to come in different "flavors" while quarks carry well defined "colors." "Particle physicists just seem to like familiar names for their rather abstract notions," observes R. L. Jaffe of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The trouble with quarks is that, no matter how they try, physicists have yet to isolate one. The conviction is growing that quarks cannot appear in isolation. They may be bound together by a new kind of force so that they only exist in combinations that appear, to the outside world, to be some sort of hadron—say a proton or neutron.

The known basic forces—such as electromagnetism or the strong nuclear binding force—are strongest when particles are close together, weakest when particles are far apart. But the force with which quarks interact, if it exists, would be weakest when particles are closest and grow stronger as two quarks tried to separate. Dr. Jaffe calls this notion of quark confinement a young, radical idea for which "we have no fundamental explanation."

NO PRECISE CALCULATIONS

"Nothing like the permanent confinement of quarks has been encountered before in the study of the structure of matter," he explains in reviewing the situation in the journal Nature. Dr. Jaffe elucidates: "Subnuclear physics is in a rather peculiar state at present. There is wide agreement as to a prospective theory of hadrons. . . . Yet there are no precise, unequivocal, and successful calculations of anything to bolster our faith. . . ."

"Nevertheless," he adds, "the theory which has emerged is very precisely formulated. . . . It offers the hope of explaining hadron properties in precise detail although at present only approximate calculations are possible."

Physicists place even more hope in the next generation of accelerators, which will bang patricles together with energies far higher than any available in the laboratory so far. Then data may emerge that will give theorists the insight they need, or which may prove decisively the value or folly of such things as the quark confinement force.

"It's hard for me to think of anything much more exciting than observing an isolated (quark). . . ." says Dr. Wilson, adding, "and if all that energy doesn't produce a quark, then at some stage we must admit that we have experimentally demonstrated a new force, and that's as interesting as a new particle—or more so!"

Physicists also hope that higher energy interactions will shed new light on the leptons. Recent data suggest there may be a fifth lepton, perhaps even a sixth (plus their antiparticles), in addition to the four already known.

There are Nobel prizes to be won elucidating such things, to say nothing of a host of lesser discoveries. It adds to the sense of frustration of many American high-energy physicists to think that such rewards would be well within their grasp if only they had the money to move ahead at a pace of which they are capable.

For example, Drs. Wilson and White are concerned both with funds to run experiments and with the timetable for building new accelerators. Fermilab now has the most powerful machine, an accelerator that can boost protons to energies of 500 billion electron volts—or 500 GEV, in physicists' shorthand. That's the amount of energy an electron would gain if accelerated by the force associated with 500 billion volts. On the subatomic scale, it's a lot of energy. But to put it in perspective, it's only about a billionth of the energy a 100-watt light bulb uses in one second.

CERN IN COMPETITION

CERN, the European Center for Nuclear Research which 12 countries maintain in Geneva, is a close competitor to Fermilab, with a 400 GEV accelerator. It also has a facility in which beams of protons, each with 28 GEV of energy, circulate in opposite directions to meet in head-on collisions.

This is the route to the highest useful energies. A moving proton (or other particle) hitting a stationary target is like a moving car hitting a stationary vehicle from behind. Much of the energy of the incoming missile goes into setting the target in motion. Thus for a 500 GEV proton hitting a fixed target, only about 31 GEV of energy is available for creating new particles. But when two 500 GEV protons meet head on, all of their combined energy is available to cause events of interest to experimenters. It would take an accelerator 1,000 times more powerful—500,000 GEV—to equal that performance by shooting at a fixed target.

Several such colliding beam facilities for protons or electrons are built or planned in Europe, besides that already operating at CERN.

In the United States, a 4 GEV electron facility at the Stanford Linear Accelerator Center (SLAC) in California will be joined by a 24 GEV electron-positron unit. And at Upton, Long Island, Brookhaven National Laboratory is to build a facility called Isabelle, in which protons can collide at beam energies ranging from 30 GEV to 400 GEV.

While this may seem like healthy progress to Dr. Drell and the HEPAP, it hurts Fermilab officials. Under Dr. Wilson's leadership Fermilab has developed a project to upgrade its accelerator to 1,000 GEV while cutting $5 million or more a year from its electricity bill by using more efficient magnets. This upgrading provides eventually for colliding beam experiments of up to 2,000 GEV total energy. Furthermore, Fermilab is poised to begin construction. Dr. Wilson says he could finish the first phase—upgrading the accelerator—within a year if only there were another $10 million for this purpose in the 1979 fiscal year budget.

But HEPAP advised giving first priority to Isabelle at Brookhaven and stretching Fermilab improvements over a several-year timescale. This will slow research down, Dr. Drell admits. Isabelle won't be ready until about 1986. But, when it is ready, it will ultimately allow a richer spectrum of research to be done than will the Fermilab plan, Dr. Drell explains. Hence the priority given Isabelle.

The Carter budget follows the HEPAP recommendation, subject to congressional approval. Fermilab supporters are lobbying Congress for more money. But at this writing it was hard to assess their likelihood of success.

EXPERIMENTS CANCELED

Dr. White, who does not share HEPAP's view, says the panel paid insufficient attention to CERN-Fermilab competition. Even part from the accelerator improvement project that a number of important experiments have had to be canceled at the laboratory, which, he says, is only operating at a fraction of its potential. Since Fermilab was built as the main national accelerator facility, Dr. White considers this chronic malnutrition a self-defeating policy.

Putting parochial concerns aside, Dr. White goes on to point out that the present budget level for American high-energy physics as a whole won't support new machines such as Isabelle plus those at Fermilab and SLAC and others when these all are upgraded and operating. Yet he senses a desire in Washington for "level budgets" in this field for a number of years.

Here Drs. Drell and White can agree. Dr. Drell says he too would be concerned if present budget levels were to be adhered to in the long run. In that case, American physics might indeed be unable to compete with that of Europe and be in danger of withering.

In the long run, observes Dr. White, it comes down to a question of why society should support high-energy physics anyway. "Why support telescopes or anything else?" he asks rhetorically. "High-energy physics is the cutting edge of fundamental knowledge. When you have the best people in the business, you should support them," he adds. "I don't think high-energy pyhysics in this country is supported at that level."●

THE AIRPORT AND AIRCRAFT NOISE REDUCTION ACT, H.R. 8729

HON. HAROLD T. JOHNSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 8729 was reported by the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation on December 13, 1977, and will be considered in the House in the near future. A discussion of the purposes of this important legislation is, therefore, in order.

I am inserting for the RECORD the remarks which I and my distinguished colleagues, Congressman WILLIAM HARSHA, ranking minority member of the Public Works and Transportation Committee, Congressman GLENN ANDERSON, chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation, and Congressman NORMAN MINETA, chairman of the Public Buildings and Grounds Subcommittee and a member of the Aviation Subcommittee, made this past week in appearing before the House Rules Committee:

TESTIMONY OF CHAIRMAN HAROLD T. "BIZZ" JOHNSON BEFORE THE RULES COMMITTEE, JULY 18, 1978

Chairman Delaney, I want to express my appreciation for your prompt scheduling of hearings today and tomorrow on two bills of great importance: aircraft noise and regulatory reform of the airline industry. My committee colleagues and I here at the table thank you for allowing us to appear today and tomorrow to testify in favor of these two measures.

I would like to proceed with a brief summary of the noise bill reported by the public works and transportation committee, H.R. 8729, and give you my views on the present need of this legislation. I will also discuss the nature of the rule we are seeking. I shall leave for my good friend, aviation subcommittee chairman Glenn Anderson, who has worked tirelessly on the noise problem this entire Congress, to give you a more detailed explanation of the bill's major provisions.

Before I begin I might indicate to you the extent to which the aviation subcommittee studied past, present and proposed federal policy on the abatement of aircraft noise. Over the past two years that subcommittee held 27 days of hearings in Washington and in the field on current and proposed aircraft noise policy. Some 2,000-plus pages of printed transcript were amassed during the hearing process. Truly this represents the most exhaustive look ever undertaken into the noise problem. The results of the effort are before you today.

In summary the bill H.R. 8729, as reported, does the following:

"Title I establishes a new voluntary program to assist airports and surrounding jurisdictions to develop and carry out programs to reduce existing land use incompatible with airport operations.

"Title II makes a much needed increased in authorized funding levels for the airport development program and extends for two more years the 90 percent Federal share for grants to our smaller, non-self sustaining airports.

"Title III finances a program, through a series of charges assessed airline passengers and shippers to assist air carriers to comply with federally mandated noise standards which in effect make obsolete nearly three-fourths of the currently active jet fleet by January 1, 1985.

"Title IV, requested by the Committee on Science and Technology, would provide for an annual authorization process for that portion of the Federal Aviation Administration's budget dealing with research development and demonstration."

Aircraft noise has been and continues to be a national problem. While the greatest impact can be found around our busiest airports, careless local decisions on land development and lack of effective Federal policies on aircraft noise threaten currently and relatively less-impacted airport environs. Aircraft noise poses a real threat to the continued growth effectiveness and vitality of our fine air transportation system. In too many instances fragmented local action threatens to disrupt the system and all too often needed airport development for safety and capacity expansion has been bogged down in costly delays because of aircraft noise. The several millions of Americans daily bombarded with excessive aircraft noise demand and deserve relief.

The legislation you have under consideration is comprehensive. It not only tackles noise at the source effectively, but for the first time provides a mechanism whereby airports and surrounding communities can receive substantial Federal assistance in planning and carrying out programs to abate the noise problem.

And, although the environmental advantages of the bill are paramount and obvious, many other benefits will be derived from passage of the bill. The bill provides substantial energy savings because the new technology aircraft to be generated by this bill will be up to 30 percent more fuel efficient than today's aircraft. This legislation will provide thousands of jobs in the aerospace and related industries as well as thousands of construction jobs connected with airport development. The bill will help reduce current balance of payments deficits by spurring our aerospace industry, which has not developed a new transport aircraft in a decade, to compete more favorably with formidable foreign competition.

In my letter to you of July 3, I noted our request for an open rule on titles I, II and IV of H.R. 8729 and one hour of debate. That is our wish.

It is my understanding that the bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee, H.R. 11986, will be offered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute to title III of H.R. 8729. If such is the case, I would point out that sections 305 and 306 of H.R. 8729 are not contained in H.R. 11986. I would request, therefore, that provision be made in the rule for it to be in order for sections 305 and 306 to be offered on the floor as a separate title.

To conclude, Mr. Chairman, this is very important legislation and it is essential that a comprehensive noise bill be passed by this Congress. We are submitting this legislation only after a very thorough hearing and deliberation process. Again, I appreciate your spirit of cooperation in holding these hearings and I look forward to working with you and your colleagues as the bill moves through your committee and onto the floor.

RULES COMMITTEE STATEMENT: HON. WILLIAM H. HARSHA—H.R. 8729, THE AIRPORT AND AIRCRAFT NOISE REDUCTION ACT AND H.R. 11986, THE NOISE AIRCRAFT REVENUE AND CREDIT ACT OF 1978

Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to join Chairman Johnson here today in requesting a rule on H.R. 8729, the Airport and Aircraft Noise Reduction Act. He has ably expressed the views of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation regarding this legislation—and may I say that I concur fully with his remarks.

As Chairman Johnson has stated, we approach the aircraft noise problem along two tracks. First, in title I, we seek to encourage voluntary action by airport operators and local communities to control noncompatible land uses in areas surrounding airports—including authorization of grants from the airport and airway trust fund to assist with the implementation of local noise control programs. Second, in title III, we seek to assist air carriers in meeting the costs of complying with Federally mandated noise standards—a burden which air carriers had no reason to anticipate when they purchased their aircraft.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 8729 was reported by our committee with the bipartisan support of an overwhelming majority of our members. I would state that most of the concerns expressed by our minority members with respect to major provisions of earlier versions of this legislation were resolved to our satisfaction during the aviation subcommittee and full committee markups. Most notable in this regard was the fact that we sought successfully to eliminate the mandatory land-use provisions which appeared initially in title I. Participation by airport operators and local communities in the title I program to reduce noncompatible land uses in areas surrounding airports now is entirely voluntary—as it should be.

The Committee on Ways and Means has revised certain sections of our title III by placing the financing mechanism in a tax context rather than a surcharge. However, we do wish to retain our section 305 foreign aircraft compliance provision, as well as our section 306 compliance waiver authority provision—both of which were not included in H.R. 11986, the ways and means version of our title III. The issues dealt with in those sections more properly lie within the jurisdiction of the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation, and it is the desire of the committee that these provisions be retained. Therefore, it is my suggestion that the rule granted make provision that H.R. 11986 be considered as a substitute only for sections 301–304 of H.R. 8729, and sections 305 and 306 be allowed to remain in H.R. 8729 subject to an open rule.

I understand that the Ways and Means Committee has requested a closed rule waiving points of order for their bill precluding amendments that may be offered on the floor. Section 305(d) of that legislation provides that no trust fund monies may be spent unless FAA annually consults with the National Transporation Safety Board on unsafe airport or airway operating conditions.

Mr. Chairman, such a limitation is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and we should not be precluded from taking steps to eliminate this proviso from the Ways and Means bill. The Public Works Committee has not had an opportunity to examine this proposed limitation and we should have that opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, I can and do express my belief that H.R. 8729 is good legislation which is carefully tailored to remedy a serious national problem. It is worthy of prompt and favorable floor consideration—and I request your committee to issue an open rule for all aspects of H.R. 8729 with one hour of general debate making the Ways and Means bill in order as a substitute amendment for sections 301–304 of our bill. Out of monetary deference to my friends on that committee, I would support a closed rule which I understand they have requested. However, since the Ways and Means legislation contains language relating to safety in section 305 which is clearly the jurisdiction of Public Works and Transportation, I urge the committee to grant a rule allowing us to make a point of order against section 305 (d) and if that is not sustained then making an amendment in order to strike section 305(d) from the Ways and Means version.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

TESTIMONY OF CONGRESSMAN GLENN M. ANDERSON BEFORE RULES COMMITTEE, JULY 18, 1978

Mr. Chairman, I want to associate myself with the remarks made by my colleague, Chairman "Bizz" Johnson, and ranking minority member, Bill Harsha. A great deal of credit must be given to them for their fine leadership in bringing this legislation along.

I would like to expand upon their remarks, if I may, and to put in perspective the scope of the aircraft noise problem.

Nearly seven million Americans and nearly a million acres of valuable land are impacted by aircraft noise levels deemed normally unacceptable for new residential construction loan guarantees by the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Last year the President's Council on Wage and Price Stability estimated that aircraft noise was costing property owners near airports some $3.25 billion annually in decreased property value. This certainly has an erosive effect on local tax bases around the country.

Our nation's airports are spending millions of dollars to acquire noise impacted land. According to a November 1977 survey of its membership, the Airport Operators Council International reports that some $229 million has been spent on land acquisition over the last seven years by U.S. airports. In addition, airports currently have pending against them lawsuits with potential liability which can be measured in the hundreds of millions of dollars. Citizen opposition to aircraft noise has delayed and in many cases prevented needed airport development and expansion and the installation of facilities to improve safety, airport capacity, and efficient utilization of airspace.

During our lengthy hearing process on this bill, it became abundantly clear that comprehensive legislation is required to deal with the noise problem—and it is needed now.

New housing developments and other land uses incompatible with normal airport operations are springing up near our airports as we meet today. Furthermore, the clock is running on compliance with FAA noise standards under which nearly three-fourths of the entire air carrier fleet will have to be replaced or modified with a schedule beginning in 1981 and ending January 1, 1985.

The Federal effort to date has focused on reduction of noise at the source, the aircraft. Based on legislation passed in 1968 and 1972 FAA has, in my view, gone a long way toward carrying out the expressed Congressional mandate to quiet noise at the source. However, source control, we are finding, has technological limits, and no amount of quieting existing aircraft will totally solve the problem. Although making aircraft quieter will shrink the areas of greatest impact significantly, whether through retrofitting or replacing noisy aircraft or a combination of both, incentives must be provided to airport operators and surrounding communities to get on with the long-neglected need to make land surrounding airports more compatible with airport operations. To continue placing sole emphasis on source noise control, to continue talking just about making aircraft quieter, without making significant progress on the land use side will have the effect, in my opinion, of unwisely raising the public's expectations for noise relief. Although we must continue efforts at source noise control unabated, let's face it—normal airport operations involve noise because aircraft do and will continue to make noise—we must start with the assumption that some unacceptable noise will continue in areas immediately adjacent to airports and work from there.

The efforts of the House Public Works and Transportation and Ways and Means Committees have resulted in the preparation of comprehensive legislation which will expedite the introduction of quieter aircraft into the fleet and will provide incentives to airport operators and the communities they serve to get on with the much too long delayed need to make the land surrounding our airports more compatible with airport operations.

Under the voluntary provisions of Title I, planning grants will be available to airports for developing noise impact maps showing present and projected cumulative noise impacts in areas surrounding the airport as well as present and projected land uses within the impacted areas.

Another part of the planning process will be the development of noise compatibility programs which will consist of those actions which the airport proprietor and surrounding communities will voluntarily take, for example, zoning, land purchase, sound proofing, and airport operations, to lessen the adverse effects of aircraft noise and to prohibit the introduction of noncompatible land uses in the impacted areas.

Programs developed from this planning process are submitted to the Secretary of Transportation for approval if the proprietor wants to receive funding to implement the program. The Secretary may approve a program if the measure set forth in the program provide for safe flight, do not create an undue burden on interstate or foreign commerce and are consistent with the goal of reducing existing noncompatible land uses and preventing the introduction of additional noncompatible uses.

Title I, in my opinion, is an essential ingredient of the House effort. As I stated earlier, source noise control alone is insufficient to solve the noise problem. Title I provides an incentive from the Federal Government for local communities to solve essentially local problems, but these incentives do not in any way take from local government the traditional role of making land use decisions.

A unique feature of Title I is that money is made available to carry out the programs which have been approved by the Secretary of Transportation. These 80 percent Federal share grants will be available not only to airport operators but to communities surrounding airports which have been identified as being in the noise impact zone. Money is made available for these grants in Title I, including $165 million for fiscal year 1979 and $250 million for fiscal year 1980.

Title II increases the current authorized funding level for airport development grants for fiscal year 1979 by $260 million; for fiscal year 1980 the current authorized level is raised by $310 million. Significant indicators of national airport system need have identified problem areas requiring review of the funding adequacy of the ADAP program in advance of the anticipated Congressional consideration in 1980 of the future of the Airport and Airway Trust Fund. For example, the revised National Airport System Plan calls for some $10.6 billion in development over the next decade, with three-fourths of that forecast to be needed in the next five years. Also a number of sponsors of smaller airports have communicated their view that current funding levels do not provide sufficient funds distributed at the discretion of the Secretary. Most, if not all, of the new money contained in Title II will go into the Secretary's discretionary fund.

Title III, which is a financing mechanism to assist air carriers to meet Congressionally mandated noise rules adopted by FAA, is based on several assumptions, including the following:

We can no longer delay providing meaningful relief on the noise issue.

2. We cannot count on the regulatory process to provide sufficient returns so that air carriers can meet these deadlines on their own.

3. A Federal program is required to assure that existing aircraft noise standards are met by 1985.

4. The industry and the users of the air transportation system, and not the general taxpayer, should bear the cost of meeting the noise standards.

5. Incentives should be sufficient to make it attractive for carriers to replace noisy aircraft with new technology aircraft which are less noisy and more energy-efficient but not to encourage the purchase of excess capacity.

6. Industry should be able to meet the noise standards in an efficient and economical manner with government involvement in management decisions kept to a minimum.

The bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee, H.R. 11983, which will replace most of the Public Works Committee's Title III, is consistent with these principles. I am sure Chairman Ullman will give a more detailed explanation of these provisions.

This concludes my remarks on the noise bills, Mr. Chairman, and I thank you for your attentiveness. In summary, this is very important legislation, and it is essential that a comprehensive noise bill is passed by the Congress this session. This legislation is important to the nation from the standpoint of the environment, energy conservation, community tax bases, balance of payments, and jobs. We can accomplish a great deal without raising the cost of transportation, without increasing the burden on the taxpayer, without jeopardizing the Airport and Airway Development Program, and without adversely affecting the safety of our airways.

TESTIMONY OF CONGRESSMAN NORMAN Y. MINETA BEFORE RULES COMMITTEE, AIRPORT AND AIRCRAFT NOISE REDUCTION ACT, JULY 18, 1978

Mr. Chairman, I greatly appreciate the opportunity to speak before your Committee in support of this important legislation dealing with the problem of aviation noise. In associating myself with the remarks of the Chairmen of both the Full Committee on Public Works and the Subcommittee on Aviation, I'd like to point out that it is more than sheer coincidence that we are all representatives of the great State of California.

As you may know, California has been an aggressive pioneer in the field of aviation noise, having itself already established Noise Standards requiring compliance by all airports in the state at the criterion noise level of 65 CNEL (Communist Noise Equivalent Level) by 1985. To a great extent, the effectiveness and success of the California noise law depends on a vigorous enforcement of Federal noise standards, and similarly, the success of enforcement of Federal noise standards depends on the passage of the Airport and Aircraft Noise Reduction Act.

I would like to take a moment of the Committee's time today to discuss the development of the Federal Aviation noise standards; the impact of those standards in San Jose, California; the need for this legislation; and the interrelationship between this legislation and the aviation regulatory reform bill which will be considered by your committee tomorrow.

Ten years ago, Congress recognized the impact which aviation noise has on millions of Americans living and working near airports, and the fact that this noise had seriously interferred with the development and expansion of our air transportation system.

In response to that Congressional action, FAA published a new Part 36 to the Federal Aviation Regulations which required that, effective December 1, 1969, no newly designed aircraft could go into production unless it met the standards established by FAA. The FAA did not at that time require retrofit of existing aircraft which did not comply with these standards, nor did it cover production aircraft which had obtained an FAA type certificate before December, 1969.

In October, 1973, an amendment to Part 36 regulations was finalized which applied the 1969 part 36 standards to newly Produced aircraft of older type (or pre-1969) designs.

In December, 1976, the FAA announced the so-called "Fleet Noise Rule" under which the Approximately 1,600 previously exempted older aircraft would be required, under a phased time schedule, to comply with the Part 36 noise level limitations by January 1, 1985.

Through this action the Federal Government, for the first time, required retroactive compliance with standards on planes which it had previously certified as airworthy. In other words, as a result of the fleet noise rule, airlines were required to modify or replace equipment previously certificated by the U.S. Government. I believe that this retroactive compliance requirement, while absolutely essential if we are to reduce aviation noise provides a compelling rationale for support of this legislation.

Finally, in 1977, the FAA published another amendment to FAR 36 which increases the stringency of noise standards for new aircraft designs. These 1977 standards will provide a reduction of 20 to 45 percent in the perceived loudness of an airplane's noise. It is important to note that these 1977 standards are encouraged through the formula for assistance established in our legislation.

The Airport and Aircraft Noise Reduction Act provides assistance to our airlines to achieve compliance with the noise standards established by FAA—through retrofit, reengining, or replacement. Clearly, retrofitting alone will not solve the growing problem of airport noise, but it is an essential part of any solution because it will reduce the costs and constraints of other components in that solution by more than it adds to the total cost. Furthermore, the assistance provided through this legislation to airports, while essential, would clearly be less meaningful without this effort to reduce aviation noise at its source.

Although the issue of the benefits to be achieved through retrofitting has been hotly debated, I believe the situation in my own district, at the San Jose Airport, provides conclusive evidence that retrofitting will result in a substantial reduction in the costs associated with noise reduction programs.

Airports in California are required to meet certain State noise standards by 1985. Clearly, their ability to meet these standards depends to a great extent upon our airlines meeting federally established noise standards.

In fact, a study done for the San Jose Airport by Parry Noise Consultants last year showed that compliance with FAR 36 would reduce the 65 CNEL noise footprint by 1,471 parcels (or 1,350 acres). This represents a cost of $110,325,000 which would have to be borne for removal and relocation if the planes using the San Jose Airport are not in compliance with FAR 36. It is my belief, and that of the airport officials in San Jose, that compliance with FAR 36 is dependent upon passage of the legislation before you today.

This bill has been criticized by some as a subsidy to the airline industry. This is simply not accurate. The Airport and Airway Trust Fund was created in 1970 to collect taxes from users to support the development of our Airport and Airways System.

In order to facilitate the achievement of aircraft noise abatement by 1985, the Ways and Means Committee reported HR 11986, which temporarily reduced or suspends the existing passenger and freight excise taxes, and substitutes new excise taxes, continuing the concept of user taxes for meeting FAA-mandated noise rules. Credits are allowed against the taxes for certain percentages of costs incurred in complying with the standards. These funds will, in fact, pay for only a small percentage of the total cost of compliance.

Although the industry's earnings during the past decade were unreasonably low, carrier profits have been making a remarkable recovery in recent months. It is hoped that this recovery will continue into the next decade, but predictions as to the future of this industry are inevitably risky since this is such a dynamic industry and it is so subject to the vagaries of economic regulation. Let me also point out that even if the profits were to continue at their present level (about 90 percent) they would still fall far short of meeting the industry's needs for replacement of equipment and compliance with noise requirements.

When my colleague, Chairman Johnson, spoke in support of this bill, he mentioned his appreciation that your Committee has acted promptly to consider it as well as the equally important aviation regulatory reform bills. I believe it is important for your deliberations to emphasize the interrelation ship between these two bills.

In the first place, one of the major goals of the aviation regulatory reform, legislation is to increase competition, thereby lowering costs and fares and increasing traffic. Increased traffic will, by its very nature, increase the severity of the aviation noise problems and thus the need for enactment of the Airport and Aircraft Noise Reduction Act.

Furthermore, if the Airport and Aircraft Noise Reduction Act were not enacted, there exists considerable potential that achieving our noise abatement goals by 1985 could cause severe financial hardships such as bankruptcies, cutbacks in operations and large-scale lay-offs.

Dr. Alfred Kahn, Chairman of the CAB, recently testified that in the absence of the assistance provided throughout this legislation, compliance with noise standards could actually jeopardized the entire program of regulatory reform. He further stated: "Financial assistance by the federal government could reduce the likelihood of unfavorable development (like bankruptcies and layoffs) and, in this way could conceivable mean the difference between success and failure of not only the noise abatement program, but of restoring this industry to the free enterprise system.

I believe enactment of this legislation is essential for the significant benefits which will be experienced at the local level where the airports are located. This legislation has a national importance in terms of its contribution to the development of our aviation industry, aerospace employment, and balance of payments situation. Finally, I believe it is essential in order to ease the transition of the aviation industry into a less-regulated atmosphere.

I appreciate the opportunity to present these views to the Committee and urge your favorable consideration of the Airport and Aircraft Noise Reduction Act.

Thank you.●

I LOVE NEW YORK

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, the New York State Department of Commerce has gained national attention—and deservedly so—through its imaginative "I Love New York" advertising campaign.

Recently the Washington Star published an article describing this campaign, its origins, and its impact. I would like to share it with our colleagues, and present it for publication in the RECORD at this time:

[From the Washington Star, June 27, 1978]

HOW THE CATCHY NEW YORK JINGLE CAME ABOUT

(By Marcia Gauger)

The phrase is from the newest Steve Karmen hit. The lyrics read: "I . . . Love . . . New York." They pulse through the most arresting commercial in years, a commercial that has become almost inescapable for Washington television watchers. They grin from the bumpers of countless Manhattan taxis, usually with a fat, red heart substituting for the word "love." The phrase stubbornly sticks in the mind and occasionally even leaps from the lips with the insistence of a simple hit tune, "I . . . Lo-o-ove New York."

It is part of a two-year-old campaign by the State Department of Commerce to get the message out that New York is more than an enormous financial problem, that there is more to the state than street crime, debt and taxes. When William Doyle took office as the Commerce Department's deputy commissioner in 1976, it was with a franchise to pinpoint what New York really is, and exploit it.

Doyle, who had been a Chase Manhattan Bank vice president in charge of marketing, brought to the challenge what he knew best: marketing. He ordered a survey. The survey showed, says Doyle, "that people wanted to escape from the hassle of cities to beautiful trees, lakes and mountains—like Switzerland. We have more lakes . . . more mountains in New York State." The survey also indicated that people who travel to New York City do so for the unique cultural opportunities the city has to offer.

Doyle took his challenge to one of the most creative of New York's advertising agencies, Wells, Rich, Greene. For $4.6 million, Wells, Rich, Green's creative director, Charles Moss, translated it into themes of two 60-second commercials: The scenic beauty with the testimonials to the state's outdoors—"I live in New Hampshire, but love New York," or "I live in West Virginia, but I love New York"—and the celebration of New York City's theater district—"There's only one Broadway, and it's in New York."

Of his inspiration, Moss says earnestly, "It's as simple as having people say, 'I live somewhere else,' but 'I love New York.'" Moss, whose advertising successes include the ubiquitous "Plop, plop, fizz, fizz, Oh, what a relief it is," and "I can't believe I ate the whole thing," put his ideas to composer Steve Karmen. Some of Karmen's hits are "Doublemint Gum" and "When You Say Bud," and he did it again with "I Love New York."

Filming the commercials, which were directed by Stan Dragoti (who also is the husband of model Cheryl Tiegs), took place on location in the great New York outdoors and on a West 54th Street sound stage in Manhattan. With professional actors (who were actually from West Virginia, or North Carolina or Brooklyn) reciting their lines, the outdoor sequences were shot at Glens Falls, Whiteface Mountain or Lake George.

Putting together the Broadway segments took almost as much effort as mounting a show. The theme "I Love New York" was orchestrated into an overture conducted by Milton Rosenstock; the casts of "Grease," "The Magic Show," "Annie," (Sandy had a hard time sitting still and not saying "arf"), "Chapter Two," "The King and I" and "Chorus Line" all sing of their love for New York. The cast of the "Gin Game" loves New York silently, and Frank Langella, as Count Dracula, whips his cape in one of the count's characteristic gestures and says, seductively, "I Love You, New York—especially in the evening." The commercial was shot over three wintry January days of which the third was a snowstorm; the cast of "Chorus Line" straggled through the streets to the studio in a blizzard for their segment. The cast of "Same Time, Next Year" was snowbound in Connecticut and couldn't make it.

Starting the week, to emphasize the state's attributes as a vacation spot and a place to get away from it all will be two new commercials—one with a water theme and one with a wilderness theme. The wilderness spot will stress the state's beauty and its wildness, filmed from an ascending helicopter—it has few people in it. The commercial with the water theme has more action. "I love to surf in it," says a man riding a surfboard, prone, on a breaking wave. "I love to fish in it," says a man in a boat holding up two fish. "I love to canoe in it," says a man shooting the rapids of a Hudson River tributary in a canoe, "I love to sail in it," says a fellow in a sailboat, and "I love to splash in it," shouts an exuberant kid in the middle of a 20-foot drop from a rock into the river. Finally, a misty young couple in black slickers aboard the Maid of the Mist IV hard by Niagara Falls, after an embrace, admit, "I love to kiss in it."

The promotion is working. For years, the state's tourist industry employed 200,000 New Yorkers—it brought $4.6 billion into the state in 1975—but was growing at a pace less than half the national rate and was actually lagging behind inflation. Now New York is enjoying the beginnings of a tourist boom. Statistics for the first year of the commercials indicate an increase of 3.9 percent in constant dollars over 1976. That is nearly 4 percent better than inflation. The commercials increased theater revenues $3 million during the campaign in 1978 over 1977, with a 15 percent rise in hotel and restaurant business during the same period.

For the money, the state is getting a new map, brochures ("I love New York Broadway show tours," New York City and New York State "I love New York travel guides," a new booklet of ski packages, camping packages, fishing packages, white-water canoeing packages, dude ranch packages) all mailed at the drop of a request to an 800-number telephone call and "I Love New York" bumper stickers, T-shirts and buttons. And a disco version of the theme song. And of course that insistently haunting commercial, "I . . . Lo-o-ove New York."●

UTAHANS CELEBRATE 131ST ANNIVERSARY OF MORMON ARRIVAL IN UTAH

HON. DAN MARRIOTT

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. MARRIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House today to the most important State holiday in Utah, held on July 24. It was 131 years ago today that the first pioneers from the Midwest arrived in the valley of the Great Salt Lake. When they arrived, there was no one to greet them or note the event. They began planting crops immediately in preparation for the harsh winter. They knew they would have to survive on their own ability to produce. The life there was so rugged that during the first winters most people slept in the wagons in which they had driven across the plains. Many lives were lost in the crossing of the plains in the dangerous conditions of no roads, lack of proper food, and harsh weather. But each year for half a century thousands of pioneers travel to Utah from all parts of the world.

It is not without great admiration and thanksgiving that all Utahans remember the origins of their State. The Mormon pioneers, driven from more than one home, were driven from the State of Illinois under an extermination order signed by the Governor. Tired of the persecution without protection of the law, they sought a place apart from the mainstream of commerce and population centers. In the 1840's the intermountain area of the Rocky Mountains was the emptiest and most undeveloped part of America. The valley of the Great Salt Lake was arid, remote, and unwanted. But the weary Mormon pioneers wanted nothing more than to be left alone.

In the last 131 years, the State of Utah has blossomed like a rose, under the skill and ability of people from around the world. There are substantial numbers of people with Greek, Japanese, Italian, English, Scandinavian, and German ancestry. If recent opinion polls are any guide, Utahans have built a State which ranks very high in interest and attractiveness, both as a place to visit and a place to live.

It is fitting that we remember the great sacrifices these pioneers made for all of us and that we remember the pioneer spirit which is still alive in the hearts of Utahans. The exploits of these pioneers have created legends of honor and courage which continue to inspire our appreciation, particularly in light of the adversity which they faced.●

TWO MAJOR COPPER CLOSINGS

HON. JIM SANTINI

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. SANTINI. Mr. Speaker, this is a Nevada experience but our Nation should know what is happening to our domestic capacity to supply our own copper needs. The voice of concern about our Nation's hardrock minerals needs does not receive a fair hearing within the upper echelon of executive decisionmaking.

A prominent exception to the foregoing conclusion occurred in June 1977 when President Carter, in response to our collective plea directed that there should be a national minerals policy.

That policy is now in the implementation stage. As the author of the plea, it is my fervent hope that the realities of our Nation's mineral needs and problems will not be buried under a mountain of preexisting prejudices within the reviewing agency. This Nation does have significant—in some instances of crisis proportions—mineral problems.

The following editorial provides a vivid and well written insight into Nevada's recent copper closing experience:

COPPER ERA ROLLS TO HALT

"Nevada out of the copper business," reads the headline, and it is like hearing Levi's has quit making jeans—it boggles the mind.

The mining industry is older than the state itself. Minerals, principally gold and silver, are the state's very reason for being. The color, the drama and the glamor of the era still survive today.

After the famous mines of the Comstock Lode had disappeared from the public consciousness and Americans of the 1940s and 1950s learned to identify Nevada as the gambling-sin (synonymous) capital of the nation, mining, in reality, continued to dominate the state's economy.

No one seemed to know in those days that is was mining first, agriculture second and gaming a slow third. It was a question good for stumping contestants on radio quiz shows. The huge Kennecott Copper operation in Eastern Nevada was the main reason residents of then sparsely populated Nevada could piously boast to incredulous visitors that their home state's chief industry was mining and not gaming.

Then came the Anaconda Copper endeavor at Yerington. They cautioned that they would only be around for a decade or so. They stayed for 25 years and their extended run merely lulled Nevadans into a false sense of permanence instead of steadily increasing apprehension of the inevitable.

Scientific progress was a big reason for Kennecott's and Anaconda's long endurance. Improvement of mining skills, development of more efficient equipment and ore processing procedures increased operation efficiencies. Kennecott officials bragged a few years back that the performance of copper extraction procedures had improved to the point they could go back and economically process piles of old overburden and tailings.

At Anaconda, the ore supplies simply petered out. Ore supplies abound in Eastern Nevada but a one-two punch of a sagging domestic copper market coupled with exacting and costly environmental protection demands succeeded in shutting down Kennecott.

The Nevada Mining Association says that copper ore remains plentiful in Nevada but as long as foreign companies can produce copper abroad, ship it to the United States and then sell it at a lower price than can domestic suppliers, Kennecott will remain closed.

A few years ago, when the U.S. Government demonetized silver (or more precisely desilverized money) and removed the price ceiling on gold, everyone in Nevada mining circles got excited. If gold and silver were allowed to flow at true monetary value, the two precious minerals would become profitable to mine in Nevada.

One of the popular rumors abounding in Nevada at the time was that when silver passed $5 an ounce and gold started drawing at least $100 an ounce, then mines would begin opening back up. It was an exciting possibility to contemplate. But silver went as high as $6 an ounce at one point in time and now wallows between $5 and $5.25. Gold quickly shot past the $100 mark and sells readily for $185 an ounce. Despite all that, the hundreds of marginal mining operations around Nevada remained closed and the only activity seen came from the typewriters of mining stock promoters.

What went wrong? Nothing, really. The handsome prices and their fascinating growth patterns were merely reflecting inflation trends. The price of an ounce of gold may have doubled over the past few years—but so has the cost of digging an ounce of gold out of the ground.

The mines that were fallow before the price boom remain fallow today. The ones that were operating and "getting by" back then are today only "getting by." For them, the market rise has meant nothing.

This all goes to show just how untenable Kennecott's situation was. In addition to the problems of inflation and increased costs faced by the gold and silver interests, Kennecott had the problem of a collapsing copper market.

Nevada is apparently shucking the mining image in actuality if not in reputation. The towns of Yerington, Ely and McGill, even though their lord and master, king copper, is dead, have declined to commit suttee on the funeral pyre. That may well be the most important development in the whole sad affair.

Kennecott and Anaconda made important and well-appreciated contributions to their communities which separates them from their rapacious predecessors in such towns as Virginia City and Austin. And their community involvement is the likely reason the towns are showing a propensity for survival.

But if mining ever rebounds as a growth industry, and such an event is quite likely, Nevadans will keep their eggs carefully separated in individual baskets and will avoid the life-and-death situation of total commitment.●

CALIFORNIA DIRECTOR OF TRANSPORTATION URGES ADOPTION OF H.R. 8729, AIRPORT AND AIRCRAFT NOISE REDUCTION ACT INCLUDING TITLE III, ON PRACTICAL AND HUMANITARIAN GROUNDS AND WARNS OF RESTRICTED AIRCRAFT OPERATIONS AND CURFEWS WITHOUT THE BILL

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, today I was furnished a copy of a telegram which Adriana Gianturco, director of transportation of the State of California, has sent to some Members. It concerns H.R. 8729, the Airport and Aircraft Noise Reduction Act, which is now before the Rules Committee. Director Gianturco takes a strong stand on this bill and its importance to the general public.

Because this important bill is not well understood, I thought I should share Ms. Gianturco's wire.

TELEGRAM

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.,
July 19, 1978.

It is my understanding that H.R. 8729 is under consideration by the House Rules Committee. This bill is extremely important to all Californians. It will provide the funding necessary to meet the requirements imposed by federal regulations regarding the reduction of aircraft noise at its source. This is the key to making our airports compatible with their communities.

Without the funding program included in

H.R. 8729 (which is correctly generated from user fees), we will continue to see additional restrictions imposed upon our major air carrier airports. Groups of citizens living near our "noise problem" airports want reduction in aircraft operations at a time when public demand for air transportation is rapidly increasing. Group action to restrict aircraft operations, invoke curfews, and disapprove airport construction projects is a direct result of aircraft noise being imposed upon the communities near our airports.

The effect of these actions is already visible in that the general public is being denied the desired level of air service for at least four of our air carrier airports, and others will likely become affected under status quo. The situation would be greatly improved through the passage of H.R. 8729. It is also my personal belief that a humanitarian viewpoint would agree with whatever action is required to reduce aircraft noise at the source. For these reasons, I strongly urge your favorable action of H.R. 8729.

ADRIANA GIANTURCO,
Director of Transportation.●

VIKTORAS PETKUS—PRISONER OF CONSCIENCE

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, the trials of dissidents in the Soviet Union have very properly been given a great deal of coverage and attention. One such "prisoner of conscience" is Viktoras Petkus, a leading spokesman against Soviet repression in Lithuania.

In an attempt to exercise his basic human rights, Viktoras Petkus was recently sentenced to a 10-year term in prison and 5 years in exile. Petkus at various times has already served more than 18 years in prison and exile for speaking out against Soviet oppression in Lithuania.

Petkus, a member of the Lithuanian group to promote the implementation of the Helsinki accords, was first arrested in 1947, for his activities in the Catholic Youth Organization, and after serving 6 years, he was released in 1953. He completed high school and then attended the University of Vilnius where he studied literature.

Petkus was arrested again in 1957, this time for possession of anti-Soviet literature—a collection of poems by Jurgis Baltrusaitis. These poems were published 5 years before the revolution in 1912, and were included among the "Anti-Soviet literature." He was not released until 1965. Since that time, while working as a hospital attendant, and then as a church sextant, Petkus became an expert in Lithuanian literature and had collected a massive bibliography on Lithuanian poets. He attracted a wide circle of young Lithuanians, who were constantly shadowed by the KGB and questioned about Petkus. Several of these young people were forced to sign false statements concerning Petkus, which were later used in the trial proceedings against Petkus.

For the last 38 years, freedom, self-determination, and independence have been denied to the Lithuanian people and others held captive by the Soviets. Soviet repression in Lithuania as well as in other nations under Soviet domination has reached alarming proportions. "Show trials" and harsh sentences as demonstrated in recent weeks are used to intimidate and to silence the widespread nationalistic and religious movements.

It is important for us to remember that human rights not only encompasses personal and civil rights but also national rights. Viktoras Petkus and other dissidents who publicly deplore these violations of human rights deserve our support. The future of the over 100 million people held captive within the U.S.S.R. and the millions of others in Eastern Europe and Asia are at stake.●

NEED TO ENACT THE FUELS TRANSPORTATION SAFETY AMENDMENTS ACT

HON. JOE MOAKLEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, today I am inserting in the RECORD an article entitled, "Gas Fireball in Boston? It Could Happen," which appeared in the Boston Globe today, July 24.

This article was written by the Honorable EDWARD J. MARKEY and excellently describes the hazards faced all across our country in the transportation and storage of volatile fuels such as liquefied natural gas (LNG) and liquefied petroleum gas (LPG).

Later this week the House will have an opportunity to pass urgently needed legislation designed to protect the public from these hazards: H.R. 11622, the "Fuels Transportation Safety Amendments Act of 1978." This important bill, sponsored by Congressman JOHN DINGELL and Congressman EDWARD MARKEY is also discussed in this article which I want to commend to the attention of my colleagues.

The article follows:

GAS FIREBALL IN BOSTON? IT COULD HAPPEN

(By Congressman EDWARD MARKEY)

On July 11, in Los Alfaques, Spain, a tank truck swerved out of control, exploded and engulfed a vacation campsite by the road in burning propylene gas, a form of liquefied petroleum gas—LPG. At least 160 men, women and children were killed instantly. Another 230 were so severely burned that more than half are not expected to survive. Then, on July 16, a similar accident occurred on a highway outside Mexico City, again killing and badly wounding scores of people.

Can such an accident happen in Greater Boston? The answer is emphatically yes.

Similar vehicles are traveling through every major city in the United States, delivering fuel of this type. In addition, day and night trucks currently transport liquefied natural gas (LNG)—an equally hazardous energy source—through some of the most congested roads in the Commonwealth to LNG storage facilities from Neponset to the banks of the Merrimack River.

LNG itself is created by super-cooling natural gas to a temperature of minus 259 degrees Fahrenheit. At that temperature, natural gas is compressed in volume over 600 times, thus making possible its storage as well as its marine and truck transportation. LNG is an important energy source for our region, for on cold winter days, LNG supplies up to 40 percent of all home heating gas in Massachusetts.

Earlier this month, representatives of a New England gas company reported to the federal government that they are unable to estimate the number of fatalities which might occur should one of the large LNG trucks serving its Rhode Island facility crash. In the past eight years, trucks from this one facility alone have had 14 serious accidents, three of which included LNG spillage.

It can largely be attributed to luck that we have not yet had an accident in our region of similar or greater dimensions than those which recently occurred in Spain and Mexico.

One would assume that the federal government has been vigorously at work developing policies to protect the public health and safety in the transportation and storage of these extraordinarily hazardous materials. But one would be wrong.

The federal government to date has established no coherent safety policy for either LNG or LPG. The principal agency with responsibility in this area is the Office of Pipeline Safety Operations in the US Department of Transportation. Their irresponsible neglect of these vital safety issues must end.

The General Accounting Office (GAO), the investigative arm of Congress, is expected to publish a major report in a matter of days on the dangers associated with LNG. In a draft of that report, which appeared in the press earlier this year, the GAO singled out LNG shipments through downtown Boston for special criticism. The draft warned that if an LNG truck crashed over the barrier of an elevated roadway such as the Southeast Expressway, it would almost certainly rupture. A cloud of LNG vapor then would hug the ground, go down into sewers, subways and basements through any available opening. Explosions and fires could be ignited, since the vapor is so combustible it could be set off even by the spark generated by an automobile horn.

The GAO report forecasts that LNG accident could result in tens of thousands of deaths, for while a typical LNG tank truck carries about 10,000 gallons, the twin LNG storage tanks in Everett have a capacity of more than a million gallons. While the implications of an LNG truck accident are very serious, an accident at a storage facility could result in a truly major disaster.

In 1944, 128 persons were killed by a series of fires which followed the rupture of an LNG storage tank in Cleveland. Federal studies of that accident led to recommendations that future LNG facilities be located away from populated areas. Thirty-four years later, no such action has been taken and the GAO repeats this same recommendation.

The need for action is clear. Fortunately, action is about to be taken.

This week the House of Representatives is scheduled to consider legislation which will mandate strict new national safety standards for the siting and operation of LNG facilities. This bill, which I co-authored with Rep. John Dingell (D-Mich.), also brings strong new safety regulations to bear on the transportation and storage of LPG and natural gas.

Our bill, the Fuels Transportation Safety Amendments Act, incorporates many of the recommendations contained in the GAO report on LNG hazards. It is the result of many weeks of consideration and hearings in the Energy and Power Subcommittee and the full Commerce Committee.

Under this bill, the Department of Transportation would be required to establish standards regulating the location and design of any new LNG facility or any construction at an existing facility. These standards would require remote siting to the maximum extent possible. In addition, all LNG facilities would be required to comply with new operating standards covering areas such as security against terrorists and fire prevention capacity. All related facilities, including truck transportation, would be covered by strict new standards.

Many segments of the oil and gas industry have opposed this bill, claiming, like the owners of the Titanic who insisted that their ship was "unsinkable," that we already live in the safest of all possible worlds.

Too many lives are at stake. The battle for significant new safety measures for LNG and LPG must not stop until they are enforced by federal law.

THE UNHAPPY HISTORY OF TRADE PROTECTIONISM

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, our colleague, STEVE NEAL, authored a first-rate piece in the Washington Post last week in which he carefully detailed the disasterous effects of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930.

The history is accurate and Congressman NEAL's conclusions are sound. I invite the attention of all Members to the article, which follows:

THE UNHAPPY HISTORY OF TRADE PROTECTIONISM

(By Stephen L. Neal)

Before we become saturated with 1930s nostalgia, with Little Orphan Annie, "The Waltons" and art deco, we ought to review one of the hard lessons of the Great Depression: Protectionism is not the answer to our economic problems.

At a recent White House meeting, I was surprised to hear one of our leading industrialists suggest that Congress protect American industries from foreign competition by enacting legislation frighteningly similar to the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930.

I have since heard that kind of protectionist talk increasingly from businessmen and from an alarming number of my House colleagues, who are under pressure to secure for their home-state industries some quick relief from import competition.

The reasons for this sentiment are clear. Unemployment is still high. Inflation persists. Our industries face strong competition at home and abroad from the aggressive traders of Europe, Japan and the rapidly developing Third World. We are importing more foreign goods than ever, but the demand for American products overseas has been sluggish. As a result, our trade deficit exceeded $3 billion last year, and the dollar's value has been depreciating.

I am keenly aware of how those economic stresses make protectionism seem attractive. I am no purist on this issue. I have supported limited protection when I thought it was justified, particularly for the textile industry, which is highly vulnerable to competition from newly industrializing nations. But I sense that some of my colleagues are tempted to go beyond limited administrative measures that assist distressed industries on a selective basis. They would shove aside the administration's trade negotiations and legislate broader measures reminiscent of Smoot-Hawley.

Like most of those who talk protectionism today, Smoot-Hawley supporters saw themselves as prudent men acting to avert an economic crisis. President Herbert Hoover originally asked only that Congress protect farmers and a few industries. But once the bill started through Congress, the logrolling began in earnest, with members insisting that their home industries be included. No fewer than 1,250 amendments were attached to protect various products. Tariffs were raised by an average of 53 percent.

More than 1,000 economists unsuccessfully petitioned Hoover to veto the bill. So did our world trade partners, who pointed out that they would have no dollars to buy American goods if their own products were shut out here. Even before the bill had cleared Congress, the anticipation of its passage contributed to the panic precipitating the stock-market crash of 1929. Businessmen and investors sensed all too well the potential dangers of high tariff walls. Their instincts proved correct.

Foreign retaliation was swift: Our trading partners erected their own tariff walls. Within three years, our industrial exports had declined by 73 percent and our agricultural exports by 67 percent. The loss of foreign trade, of course, eliminated more jobs, closed more factories and prolonged the Depression. Even worse, the protectionist spirit spread throughout the world and contributed to the economic and political unrest that ultimately led to World War II.

The lesson was clear. President Franklin Roosevelt pushed through the Reciprocal Trade Act of 1934 to get our foreign trade moving again. And ever since, despite an occasional instance of backsliding, the United States has worked toward freer world trade.

If Smoot-Hawleyism didn't work in the 1930s, it obviously won't work in today's interrelated world economy. The United States now exports one-sixth of everything it manufactures and one-third of its farm products. Overall, we exported some $120 billion worth of goods and services last year, and this trade supported at least 4.5 million jobs in the United States. All this is at stake, remember when we play the protectionist game—a game always played by more than one.

Indiscriminate protectionism would have other serious consequences. It would deprive consumers of the wide choices and lower prices made available by imports. It would accelerate inflation by eliminating import competition. It would jeopardize our foreign relations and undermine a generation of efforts to build a peaceful and productive world. In particular, it would poison our relationships with the emerging countries of the Third World, who need trade to survive, to pay debts, to modernize and—significantly—to continue to be able to buy our products.

As I said, I am no purist. Free trade, like world peace, human perfection and the low-calorie banana split, is something we have to keep working toward, not something we have achieved. So long as other countries protect some of their industries, it is only common sense that we do the same—in a selective, painstaking way. We should be tough negotiators, yielding trade concessions only to those who give in return. We should vigorously oppose dubious trade practices such as the dumping of foreign products below the cost on our markets and the predatory financing schemes some countries employ to promote their exports.

If we keep trying, however, many trade barriers eventually can be eliminated by negotiations and by the working of market forces. The important thing is that we continue to move toward freer trade, inch by inch if necessary, and that we not retreat in panic to wholesale protectionism achieved by political logrolling in Congress.

History is a great teacher. We should remember its lesson on protectionism.●

HOMESELLERS TAX RELIEF: A REPUBLICAN CONCEPT FOR CAPITAL GAINS REDUCTION

HON. STEWART B. McKINNEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I support the Steiger proposal for an overall reduction of capital gains tax rates to stimulate capital formation and reward economic risk taking at all levels of wealth. However, I have long felt that such relief was most needed by those seeking to sell a value-added home and I have introduced the Homeseller Tax Relief Act every year since 1975. That bill would grant a one-time exemption to any taxpayer, regardless of age, trying to sell a principal residence and keep the proceeds. In 1976 the Ways and Means Committee saw the need for such relief but took only half a step toward the goal by increasing the cost ceiling for those over 65 using the exemption.

Now, this Congress is on the verge of finishing that half-done job and I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to consider the following Washington Star article before deciding to endorse any so-called new proposals for capital gains relief to homeowners age 59 or over. That analysis clearly points out the benefits of general capital gains rate reduction to the homeowner and argues strongly that arbitrary value and age limits as a condition to capital gains savings will not be acceptable to the taxpayer. The article follows:

HOMEOWNER IS GAINER IN ANY CAPITAL GAINS CUT

(By Lew Sichelman)

The House Ways and Means Committee resumed work yesterday on tax legislation that holds substantial benefits for millions of homeowners. The measure had been stalled since May.

The major obstacle to action on the broad tax relief measure has been the capital gains tax. On the one hand, President Carter wants to remove profits on the sale of homes from an increase in the capital gains tax that was adopted in 1969. On the other is a large, bipartisan effort to cut the tax back to the pre-1969 level on the sale of all long-term assets.

No matter which faction prevails, the clear winner would be the nation's 50 million homeowners, and would-be homeowners as well.

Presently, owners who live in their homes longer than 12 months and then sell them pay the capital gains tax. Under the so-called roll-over provision, however, the tax can be deferred if the profit realized from the sale is reinvested in another principal residence within 18 months.

Under the capital gains tax, only half the profit is taxed as ordinary income. If, for example, a house that was purchased for $50,000 is resold several years later for $100,000 and the gain is not put into another home, the seller would pay taxes on half of the $50,000 gain at his ordinary rate.

Under the Tax Reform Act of 1969, the other half of the profit is taxed at a flat 15 percent if it is more than half of the taxes paid on the homeowner's regular income. That is, if the excluded $25,000 in the above example is more than half of the taxes paid on regular income, it is taxed, too.

While the capital gains portion of the president's proposal is aimed at giving relief solely to homeowners, the bipartisan effort led by Rep. William A. Steiger, R-Wis., would exclude all investors from the so-called 15 percent "minimum."

President Carter feels the capital gains tax causes undue hardship on homeowners, especially on older individuals who want to sell their homes when they retire.

Given the rapid increase in housing prices, a homeowner wishing to sell his home and not buy another, more expensive home must pay a substantial capital gains tax. In some cases, the "minimum" tax is substantial, too, particularly if the seller's income is relatively modest. There also is some question as to whether the minimum tax was ever intended to apply to the sale of principal residences.

But not only would the president's proposal—and the opposition's, too—save homeowners a considerable sum, it also would add considerably to the nation's available housing stock.

Under the present tax structure, many persons, particularly empty nesters, stay in houses that have become too big for them rather than move to smaller houses or apartments and pay the capital gains taxes on their profits.

If their tax burden were reduced, they might elect to put their houses on the market and move. This, of course, would free more housing for several segments of the market—for growing families who are looking for large houses and for first-time buyers who can afford only those houses growing families move out of.

Steiger's broader proposal would, he says, get the economy out of its present period of "stagflation." But it would accomplish the same thing Carter is trying to do—reduce the rate of taxation on home sellers who have not depreciated their assets to cut taxes.

The only way the nation's homeowners can lose is if the president ends up vetoing the legislation that Congress eventually passes and Congress fails to override him. Then there would be no relief at all.

Footnote: There is talk on Capitol Hill about extending a tax provision applicable to individuals aged 65 and over to all taxpayers.

This provision exempts gains of the sale of homes where the sales price is $35,000 or less. When the sales price exceeds $35,000, the exemption is for a fraction of the gain equal to $35,000 divided by the selling price.

Such an extension, it is said, would give all homeowners a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to earn tax-free money. It would offer even more of an incentive to present owners to move on.

If you believe, as I do, that the homeowner needs and deserves to keep the accrued value of his or her major investment, I would ask that you review the Homesellers Tax Relief Act and the accompanying Library of Congress analysis and join all those who seek true tax relief, rather than another half step that inflation will soon absorb. The bill and analysis follow:

A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to allow an individual to exclude from gross income the gain from the sale or exchange of the individual's principal residence.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subsection (a) of section 121 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to gain from sale or exchange of residence) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—At the election of taxpayer, gross income does not include gain from the sale or exchange of property if, during the 8-year period ending on the date of the sale or exchange, such property has been owned and used by the taxpayer as his principal residence for periods aggregating 5 years or more.".

(b) Subsection (b) of section 121 of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(b) LIMITATION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any sale or exchange by the taxpayer if an election by the taxpayer or his spouse under subsection (a) with respect to any other sale or exchange is in effect.".

(c)(1) The heading of such section 121 is amended by striking out "WHO HAS ATTAINED AGE 65".

(2) The table of sections for part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking out (in the item relating to section 121) "who has attained age 65".

(3) Paragraph (1) of section 121(d) of such Code is amended by striking out "the age, holding, and use requirements" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "the holding and use requirements".

(4) Paragraph (2) of section 121(d) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(2) PROPERTY OF DECEASED SPOUSE.—For purposes of this section, in the case of an unmarried individual whose spouse is deceased on the date of the sale or exchange of property, if the deceased spouse (during the 8-year period ending on the date of the sale or exchange) satisfied the holding and use requirements with respect to such property, then such individual shall be treated as satisfying the holding and use requirements of subsection (a) with respect to such property. An election by the deceased spouse under subsection (a) in effect with respect to a prior sale or exchange shall not limit such individual from the election under subsection (a) with respect to such property.".

(5) Sections 1033(h)(3), 1034(k), 1038(e)(1)(A), and 6012(c) of such Code are each amended by striking out "who has attained age 65".

(6) Section 1250(d)(7)(B) of such Code is amended by striking out "who has attained the age of 65".

(d) The amendments made by this section shall apply to dispositions after the date of the enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Congressional Research Service,
February 19, 1976.

To The Honorable STEWART B. MCKINNEY,
Attention David Kiernan,
From Economics Division
Subject Analysis of H.R. 11563, a bill to exempt capital gains on sales of a principal resident from the income tax.

H.R. 11563, introduced on January 28, 1976 by Congressman McKinney would exempt capital gains on the sale of a principal residence from the income tax. The exemption would only apply if the property was owned and used by the taxpayer as his principal residence for five of the previous eight years. The provision could only be used once by the taxpayer.

I. IMPACT OF THE BILL

The impact of the bill must be examined in the context of other provisions of the tax law which affect such sales. These provisions are discussed below:

A. One half of any capital gain is excluded from gross income.

B. For individuals age 65 or over the portion of gain attributable to the first $20,000 of basis is excluded from income. (For example, if the residence is sold for $40,000, ½ of the gain will be exempt; if the residence sells for $60,000, one-third ($20,000/$60,000) of the gain will be exempt.)

C. There is a deferral of gain on the sale of a principal residence if a new residence is acquired within a specified period. In order to qualify the taxpayer must purchase a new residence within 18 months before or after the sale of the old. If the residence is newly constructed, construction must begin within 18 months and the taxpayer must occupy the new residence within two years. The new residence then has the basis of the old so that if the new residence is sold gain on the first sale and the second sale will be taxed unless the taxpayer uses the deferral provision again.

Full deferral only applies if the new residence costs as much or more than the sales price of the old. If the new residence costs less, the difference (up to the total amount of the gain) between the sales price of the old residence and the new residence is taxed as a capital gain.

This provision will be retained under the proposed bill.

D. When a taxpayer acquires a residence by inheritance, the gain is not subject to income tax at the time of death. In addition, the basis of the new residence becomes the fair market value at the time of death. Thus if the taxpayer sells the residence immediately little or no gain will occur.

Thus, a taxpayer will be subject to tax on all or part of the gain on a sale of a personal residence under the following circumstances:

(1) When he moves from a more expensive residence to a less expensive residence, if he is under 65.

(2) When he sells his residence and does not purchase a new residence within the time requirements, and is under 65.

(3) When he does either of the above and is 65 or over, but the sales price of the old residence exceeds $20,000.

There may, of course, be a variety of circumstances which lead to a taxpayer desiring to take one of the actions listed above. The $20,000 limit was enacted in 1964 and the value has been eroded by inflation. Thus it may be quite likely that some of the gain on sales by those 65 or over will be subject to tax because of the increase in housing prices.

There may be a variety of reasons that a taxpayer may elect to move to a smaller residence or not to purchase a new residence, including regional variations in housing prices for those who are relocating, changes in family circumstances, the supply of housing, mortgage interest rates and particular circumstances of the individual. Current tax treatment acts to encourage taxpayers to rent under such circumstances and to discourage home sales by taxpayers who might otherwise wish to sell. To the extent that these effects exist, there are distortions created in the housing market. However, there is no data available to estimate the impact on the supply and demand for housing arising from these circumstances.

II. REVENUE LOSS

Because of the lack of up-to-date data on realized capital gains by types of capital assets, it is extremely difficult to estimate the revenue loss from the changes proposed in the bill. However, based on the latest data on the share of gains realized on sales of residences and extrapolating to the present, the revenue loss may be estimated at roughly $150 million. This estimate should be used with care, because of the limitations of the data on which the estimate is based.[1]

---

[1] The latest data on capital gains by types of capital assets are for 1962. The estimate assumes that the proportion reflecting gains on the sales of residences remained relatively constant (with adjustments made for changes in the tax law). The resulting base is multiplied by the marginal tax rate to determine revenue loss.

III. ARGUMENTS FOR AND AGAINST THE BILL

A. Arguments for

(1) Capital gains are in large part a reflection of inflation and represent an illusory gain. In addition, the taxation of gain in one lump sum presents problems under a progressive rate structure since all of the gain is taxed in one year.

(2) Even if capital gain on investments is subject to tax, it is not appropriate to subject gains on the sales of personal consumption items such as homes. The purchase of a residence is less of a profit-motivated investment than are other types of investment. In addition, since the tax law does not recognize capital losses on the sales of personal assets, it is not equitable to tax capital gains.

(3) The present treatment in the tax law discriminates against taxpayers who are unable to qualify under other provisions of the tax law. For example, an individual over 65 in an urban area may find the $20,000 base so low as to offer very little relief as compared to a taxpayer in a rural area. A taxpayer moving to a new area may find it difficult to acquire a new residence within the time limits or may not desire to purchase a new residence because of the expectation that he will not remain in the area for a long period of time. Taxpayers may wish to move to a smaller residence or an apartment because of reduction in family size or income.

(4) The $20,000 limitation in the current provision has been substantially eroded by inflation. Elderly taxpayers whose residence represents much of their savings may find that saving reduced by the payment of capital gains tax.

B. Arguments against

(1) This provision will add to the extensive number of tax provisions in the law which favor investment in housing as opposed to alternative types of investments. This favorable treatment has distorted consumer choice and encouraged investment in housing in a substitute for business investment.

(2) Capital gains are already subject to favorable treatment not only because one half of capital gain is exempt but also because the taxpayer does not pay tax on gains as accrued but rather on gains when realized. This deferral of tax constitutes an advantages in itself. In addition, provisions in the law such as income averaging provide relief from excessive high income in one year due to the realization of capital gains.

(3) The present provisions in the law are designed for those particular circumstances requiring relief. The deferral provision recognizes that the sale of one residence and purchase of another is in the nature of an exchange and is something which the taxpayer may find necessary (e.g. due to job changes). The periods for reinvestment are liberal. The exemption for the elderly is designed to provide relief for such taxpayers. The limitation in the base orients the provision more towards the lower income elderly.

WE STRUCK OUT IN AFRICA—AGAIN

HON. ROBERT L. F. SIKES

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, last week the Organization for African Unity held its summit meeting in Khartoum. Great hopes had been held for a strong stand against Russian and Cuban colonialization in Africa and against obvious intervention by foreign military forces from these and other countries. These expectations came to naught. After days of squabbling on many issues of importance to the continent, much of which accomplished nothing, the conference placed its stamp of approval on the efforts of the Marxist revolutionaries to control Rhodesia and warned the United States against lifting the embargo on Rhodesian chrome. Apparently, that is about all that was accomplished.

If Russia and Cuba had been seated at the conference as voting members, they could not have been more pleased with the result. Whether or not they engineered the result is, at the moment, inconsequential.

I wonder how we will explain to the rest of the world why the U.S. struck out although the wizardry of Mr. Andrew Young is guiding our policies in Africa on items of interest to the United States.●

SALUTE TO STEVE MIKOSKY, STATE COMMANDER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA AMERICAN LEGION

HON. JOHN H. DENT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to recognize an outstanding individual from my congressional district: Steve Mikosky, the newly elected State commander of the Pennsylvania American Legion.

Steve Mikosky, of Jeannette, is a man worthy of the new office he holds. As a World War II Navy veteran, Steve has devoted his time, efforts, and considerable talents to assisting his brothers in the American Legion. Before his recent election to the State commander's post, Steve served as the senior vice president of the Jeannette American Legion Post 344 and had twice served as its commander. In recognition of his service, and his commitment to the goals, ideals, and activities of the American Legion, Steve was elected to the top State position by an overwhelming majority of the delegates at the Legion's 60th annual convention in Philadelphia, July 13–15, 1978.

As an expression of its pride in Steve Mikosky, the city of Jeannette has honored him by proclaiming August 4, 1978, "Steve Mikosky Day." I, too, am proud of Steve Mikosky for devoted service to his country and to the American Legion. I am confident that he will lead the Pennsylvania American Legion with wisdom and effectiveness. Steve Mikosky deserves to be honored by a grateful community and it is fitting and proper that he be recognized by this House of Representatives.

On behalf of the good citizens of Pennsylvania's 21st Congressional District and the U.S. House of Representatives, it therefore gives me a great deal of pleasure to salute Steve Mikosky, the new State commander of the Pennsylvania American Legion.●

WILSON GERMANY

HON. JAMES M. COLLINS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. COLLINS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, last week we held funeral services down in Dallas for a great man, Wilson Germany. As I sat in the crowded Highland Park Methodist Church, it was heartwarming to see the love and appreciation that his friends had for his dedicated life.

Wilson was a friend to everyone and worked hard on every project that was good for the community. When you told Wilson there was a job to be done, he rolled up his sleeves and got with it. Whenever he joined an organization, he gave his heart and soul to it. In life we remember our old friends so well and Wilson and I lived together in the Phi Delta Theta House back in my college days at S.M.U. His love for the university actively continued as he served as president of the S.M.U. Alumni Association. He was serving at the time of his death on the S.M.U. board of trustees. Last year he headed up the S.M.U. Sustentation Drive which was the greatest financial success in the university's history.

Wilson lived in University Park and for all of these years he served as the mayor of University Park. There is no salary. It is just complaints and suggestions from every neighbor in town about the garbage, the police, the schools, and the highways. Always Wilson was available to hear their story and to find a way to build a better community.

At the funeral I had a long visit with Mrs. E. G. Germany, who is Wilson's wonderful mother. I remember her friendly hospitality from way back when we were in college. We would always go in the Germany's house at any time and you never rang the doorbell. You just went in the side door. If we were hungry, and we usually were, you could always get a sandwich, a glass of milk, and ice cream. How we all loved and cherished the warm hospitality out at the Germany home.

Wilson Germany was recognized as one of America's greatest independent oilmen. He had developed fields in every part of the country. He fought hard to build all of the oil trade association.

Banking has played a large part in the development of Texas. Wilson Germany was one of the recognized banking pace setters serving as chairman of the Preston Bank in Dallas.

Wilson was a dedicated individual of independent strength. His father, Col. E. B. Germany, had served as chairman of the Democratic Party in Texas. But Wilson had the courage to become a Republican leader of Texas.

When Dr. Layton Farrell delivered his beautiful eulogy, he said there was not a single project of development in the Dallas community that at one time or another in Wilson's life he had not served in its leadership. He worked on every good project, whether it was a high school football team, the United Fund, YMCA, PTA, or the Scouts. I could name hundreds of organizations because he was part of every one of them.

For a life so rich in service to others, Wilson will always be remembered. His wife, Sis Germany, will carry on the traditions. She has the commonsense, the sense of humor, and the dedication that has made her such a pillar of strength in our community.●

SPENDING LIMITATION AND TAX REDUCTION

HON. MARJORIE S. HOLT

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, last spring, when we were deliberating on the first budget resolution for the 1979 fiscal year, I sponsored a substitute budget resolution that would have reduced the growth rate of spending from 11 to 8 percent. My substitute also accommodated the 1st-year tax reductions of the 3-year Kemp-Roth plan.

You will recall that my substitute budget failed by only six votes on the House floor, and then only after the Speaker and majority leader persuaded eight of their Members to change their votes to oppose my amendment. You will also recall that every House Republican except one supported my substitute.

It is also important to note that my budget amendment represented the official policy of the House Republican leadership. The Republican plan announced by JOHN J. RHODES, the minority leader, is to balance the Federal budget in 5 years at lower tax rates. This plan requires limiting the growth rate of Government spending.

To my mind, there is one dominant reason for a large general tax reduction: Income belongs to the people who earn it, and Government is taking an excessive amount of individual earnings for public purposes.

A major tax reduction, phased in over 3 years as provided by the Kemp-Roth plan, would have gratifying results in terms of increasing investment, economic expansion, jobs creation, and rapid recovery of revenues lost initially because of the tax cuts.

I am convinced that tax reduction on the scale provided by Kemp-Roth is critically needed for the future economic health of our Nation. We must restore the American incentives to work, save, and invest that have blessed our country with prosperity never before seen in history.

Nobody knows how much of the initial revenue loss would be recovered, or how quickly. When you hear economists debating these points, you come to realize that we can only speculate as to the revenue effects of Kemp-Roth.

However, we can address the spending side of the fiscal equation. This we can do with considerable certainty as to results. Therefore, I have introduced legislation which would gradually slow the growth rate of Government spending while the Kemp-Roth tax reductions are stimulating growth in the private sector.

My legislation is entitled the "Spending Limitation and Tax Reduction Act of 1978." It totally embraces the Kemp-Roth tax cuts, but it also provides some compensatory limits on Government spending.

The growth rate of new budget authority would be limited to 8 percent in fiscal 1980, 7 percent in fiscal 1981, and 6 percent in fiscal 1982.

My legislation reaffirms the commitment by Kemp-Roth supporters to slow the growth rate of Government spending. It also reaffirms the voting records of many Members of this House.

In July 13 testimony before the House Budget Committee, Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller expressed concern that the Kemp-Roth legislation would provide major tax reductions over 3 years without limits on spending.

"The more sensible plan is the one I have been trying to promote," said Mr. Miller. He described it as "deciding where we want to be in 5 to 7 years, beginning to reduce Federal expenditures, and, as we reduce them, cut taxes to give back the reductions to people and to businesses."

I agree with the point made by Mr. Miller. I believe that tax reductions should be accompanied by limitations on spending. That is why I have introduced legislation attaching spending limitations to the Kemp-Roth tax reductions.

Following is a chart comparing the budget authority estimated by the Carter administration with the budget authority allowed by my legislation for the 1980, 1981, and 1982 fiscal years. You will note that the moderate growth rate allowed by my legislation would save approximately $29 billion initially.

TRIBUTE TO ED GALLAGHER, PUBLISHER OF LACONIA, N.H., EVENING GAZETTE

HON. NORMAN E. D'AMOURS

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. D'AMOURS. Mr. Speaker, the State of New Hampshire and the city of Laconia, N.H., have lost a leader and a friend with the death last Wednesday of Edward J. Gallagher, publisher of the Laconia Evening Citizen.

Ed Gallagher's dedication to journalism and community service was best summed up by Ed himself in an interview several years ago. Asked why he had chosen the name "Citizen" for his newspaper, Ed replied that the name appealed to him because it stands for "public rather than political interests."

During his lifetime Ed Gallagher certainly succeeded in living up to the name of his newspaper. He practiced his citizenship not only by publishing a fine paper serving the needs of Laconia and the entire Lakes Region of New Hampshire, but also by lending his talents and energy to city government in two terms as mayor of Laconia and in service to countless other causes, including the Salvation Army and the Laconia Public Library.

The deep respect and friendship Ed Gallagher earned among his peers has been demonstrated by an outpouring of tributes in virtually every newspaper in New Hampshire since Ed's death last week. Mr. Speaker, I would like to present two of these tributes at this time. The first, which appeared in the Laconia Evening Citizen, was written by Larry Smith, Ed's son-in-law and managing editor of the Citizen. The second appeared in the Concord, N.H., Monitor and was written by Leon W. Anderson, New Hampshire's legislative historian.

[From the Laconia Evening Citizen, July 20, 1978]

MR. GALLAGHER

We will sorely miss Mr. Gallagher.

His many friends throughout the city and State are remembering the wise counsel and inspiration he provided.

In the publishing field he holds a special niche in the minds of a legion of newspaper people throughout the United States who graduated from the Evening Citizen clan. They, like the present staff, remember him not only as "The Publisher", but as a friend and teacher.

They are proud to be known as Gallagher men and women.

We first heard the term as a cub reporter when we were introduced to a public official on a city beat. He referred to us as a Janson man, a trainee of city editor Ebba Janson who had a great part in moulding the policy of the Evening Citizen with Mr. and Mrs. Gallagher. Joining the regular staff you graduated to a Gallagher man.

He contributed greatly to his craft. At an early age he was given a $1 toy typewriter and in his hands it became an extension of his physical being. Though his tool changed over the years to an L. C. Smith and lately to a futuristic electric model he always used it wisely and honestly in his trade.

He chose not to be an opinion maker but a guide in the community and he followed his creed not only in his daily articles and the columns of his newspapers but in his personal life and associations as well.

His favorite theme, explaining the art of journalism to young reporters and older ones as well, was his Bronx angle. He coined the phrase from an early New York paper he came in contact with. It was the ability to tie a national or international story to a local person or event.

The Bronx paper's staff were past masters at it and he brought the concept to his Evening Citizen. An editor one told us "Whenever a big story breaks I watch for the Citizen to see how Ed Gallagher got a local handle on it."

He could always find one.

There were many Evening Citizen trained reporters and editors scanning the wire copy in newsrooms across the country yesterday when the report of his death was carried.

They had a Bronx angle.

They were fortunate enough to have known him.

EJG—DEVOTED TO NEW HAMPSHIRE'S WELFARE

(By Leon W. Anderson)

Publisher Edward John Gallagher of the Laconia Evening Citizen will long live in Granite State newspaper annals, out of a most unusual origin.

A Concord native of 1890, he was the only child of Irish immigrants and was raised in the Catholic faith by a gracious Protestant family. He was stricken with intestinal tuberculosis, which terminated his education beyond grade school.

We pried details of Ed Gallagher's childhood out of a long personal friendship with this man, whom we came to respect and admire for his graciousness, common qualities of character and friendliness for little people.

Gallagher's father died while he was an infant, and his mother had to work as a domestic to support herself. It was because of such circumstances that EJG, as he liked best to sign himself, learned how to be grateful and thankful for his early lot in life and the loving care of foster-parents.

Editor Ed Gallagher—the manner in which we best liked to address him—will long live in our upcoming history of the 300-year-old New Hampshire Legislature. He is the starry-eyed hero of a chapter on the 1907 Legislature, when the late governor Robert Perkins Bass of Peterboro killed a quarter-century legislative custom of paying newspapermen handsome fees for writing up the lawmakers' doings.

Bass was then chairman of the House Committee on Retrenchment and Reform. He induced his group to recommend abolition of $100 payments to each newspaperman, per session of some 10 weeks, as an undesirable conflict of interest practice. While recovering from his stomach sickness, young Gallagher eyed the $100 gift, set himself up as the "F. P. Gilpin Syndicate," induced a couple of weeklies to pay him 50 cents a week to report legislative life and qualified as a legislative newsman.

Gallagher was then 16 years of age, and he grinningly recalled he was so frail that the reporters would not even permit him a seat at the two long newsmen's tables which then adorned the front of the House Speaker's rostrum. But Gallagher persevered, and a month later he won equal status when he was employed by the Manchester Union to fill in for a reporter who had become suddenly ill.

As the 1907 session drew to adjournment, Bass went into action, and the attractive $100 emoluments went into oblivion for all time. So, Gallagher liked to recall, he had to labor much longer and much harder before enjoying the thrill of his first $100 paycheck.

Friend Gallagher also liked to tell us of an unusual relationship he once had with the Christian Science Church. Before 1910, the Concord Evening Patriot (now part of the Concord Monitor) was for a short time owned by a St. Louis Christian Science leader, and its equipment was used to publish pamphlets for that denomination. This was before the founding of the Christian Science Monitor, which was named after the Concord Monitor.

In 1910, the Concord Patriot's Christian Science ownership was turned over to Ed Gallagher. He paid for it over a period of years, in which the Patriot's circulation grew from 300 to more than 3,000, to exceed that of the Monitor before 1923. In that year, Gallagher sold his Patriot to the late James M. Langley, who also bought the ailing Monitor and merged the two.

After disposing of the Patriot, Gallagher went to the Midwest for a brief period. He then returned to New Hampshire and launched the Laconia Evening Citizen in 1925. The continued success of this daily newspaper, and its unstinting promotion of the welfare of the Lakes Region and its citizenry, reflects Edward John Gallagher's unselfish devotion to his beloved state and his fellow citizens in fitting fashion.

We like to think that many of us are the better from having shared EJG's friendship.●

FOR A REDUCED CAPITAL GAINS TAX

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, Sunday's lead editorial in the Minneapolis Tribune was a statement in favor of a reduced capital gains tax.

The rationale was the need for increased capital investment and increased economic activity. The President's argument that a reduction is a windfall for the rich was dismissed as not persuasive.

The thoughtful editorial follows:

[From the Minneapolis Tribune, July 23, 1978]

FOR A REDUCED CAPITAL GAINS TAX

President Carter may be looking for a graceful retreat from his opposition to capital-gains tax reduction. There was a hint of that in his press conference Thursday night: He said that he would make his final decision after Congress completes action on the total tax package.

That is a welcome change from Carter's needlessly strident statements last month, when he dismissed a leading proposal on capital-gains tax reduction as one that "underestimates the intelligence of the American people." A lot of intelligent Americans do oppose cutting capital-gains taxes. But other intelligent Americans support cuts, and we think their case is stronger.

Last week, key congressional leaders said the same thing. The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee suggested that a part of capital gains be adjusted for inflation—that is, reduced. And the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, joined by the committee's ranking Republican member, announced support for a bill to reduce capital-gains taxes by other means. The administration is studying such proposals, perhaps searching for a compromise with a Congress increasingly committed to reductions.

Administration opposition has been on two grounds: that reductions would create windfalls for the rich and would reduce federal revenues. Neither argument is persuasive.

The United States needs capital investment. A number of studies indicates that the higher capital-gains tax enacted in 1969 has discouraged new investment: People have tended to hold onto assets rather than selling them to reinvest in new industries. Or they have bought tax-exempt securities, or simply have spent their extra money.

If a lower capital-gains tax would benefit the wealthy, it would also benefit the not-so-wealthy—small investors, including homeowners who decide to move to a smaller house or an apartment. And it would probably benefit the economy by increasing stock-market activity, stock prices, industry growth and jobs.

Assertion that federal revenues would drop after a capital-gains tax cut are contested by economists who argue that more people and companies would be willing to sell assets like stocks and houses, which would produce more capital gains to be taxed. A general rise in economic activity would create additional capital gains.

Congress is right to be moving toward lower capital-gains taxes. If the president cannot add his enthusiastic support, he should at least withdraw his opposition.●

HOUSE AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE BEGINS MARKUP ON NEW SUGAR LEGISLATION

HON. RICHARD NOLAN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, July 25, 1978, the House Agriculture Committee will begin markup on new sugar legislation.

The following letter to President Carter from Irvin L. Zitterkopf, general manager of the Southern Minnesota Beet Sugar Cooperative, clearly explains why U.S. sugar beet growers need at least 17 cents per pound for their production. Mr. Zitterkopf's letter also explains why the 17 cents price objective should be achieved through import fees and quotas. Otherwise, according to Zitterkopf—

Unfair competition from imported sugar will ruin and ultimately destroy domestic sugar production. . . .

Department of Agriculture officials have described the Upper Midwest as one of the most efficient regions of sugar beet production. Yet, the Carter administration has proposed a sugar program which will drive even the efficient sugar beet producers out of business. The administration's sugar bill establishes a sugar price level which is below the cost of production. The administration's low sugar price level, reached through a combination of import fees, import quotas and payments, jeopardizes the livelihood of sugar beet growers in the Upper Midwest and, because of the payment program, will drain the Treasury at the same time.

I urge the President and my colleagues to pay careful attention to Mr. Zitterkoph's letter.

The letter follows:

SOUTHERN MINNESOTA
BEET SUGAR COOPERATIVE,
RENVILLE, MINN., July 21, 1978.

Re: Pending Sugar Legislation.

President JAMES CARTER,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: As the new General Manager of Southern Minnesota Beet Sugar Cooperative located in southwestern Minnesota, I believe it is necessary for me to make this relatively new farmer-owned cooperative's position known regarding some of the problems facing the domestic sugar industry. This cooperative was organized in 1972 by approximately 300 farmers who invested $10 million and borrowed another $40 million to build a sugar factory to process sugarbeets from 55,000 acres of the finest farming land in the country.

As a result of low sugar prices over the past three years (after termination of the Sugar Act on December 31, 1974), the $10 million invested by these farmers was lost. While the 300 farmers who produced sugarbeets for their factory have absorbed losses in excess of $10 million over the past three years, they still desire to produce sugarbeets if the impact of foreign sugar production is controlled to the extent that it is fair and equitable competition. The shareholders/producers of this cooperative believes that they are as efficient farmers as there are in the world today, but that unfair competition from imported sugar will ruin and ultimately destroy domestic sugar production unless something is done at the federal level to give necessary protection to the domestic sugar industry.

This cooperative's farmers have a cost of production in the range of $350 to $375 per acre for growing sugarbeets. To enable the farmer to cover his costs and make a small profit, this cooperative needs to be able to sell its sugar for at least 21¢ per lb. in the Chicago-Midwest marketing area. The proposed 17c per lb. base for New York raw is endorsed by this cooperative.

The shareholders/growers of this cooperative are not asking for an unfair advantage over other farmers, laborers, businesses, etc. They are only asking for an opportunity to compete competitively with their fellow American farmers.

To accomplish this objective and to prevent the American farmer from abandoning the domestic sugar industry, it is our recommendation that import restrictions or limitations be established to prevent the "dumping" of foreign sugar in the United States. These import restrictions should be imposed either through import fees that are high enough to keep the price of sugar at a level that will allow the American farmer and the domestic industry to compete for a fair return, or there should be importing quotas that will accomplish the same objective. We also believe that the result of restrictions could bring an increased activity in some segments of the sweetener industry. This increase should be regulated on a pro-rata basis, with equal consideration to the beet, cane and corn growers.

It is our belief that a long term sweetener program that allows for fair competition between the American farmer and the domestic industry is in the best interest of the United States and will enable the American farmer to make his farming decisions based on domestic, competitive forces rather than competing with foreign farmers who are being subsidized by their governments.

We believe this issue to be of extreme importance to the survival of the domestic sugar industry and would appreciate the opportunity to make our views, both those of the cooperative and of the sugarbeet farmer, known to any legislative committee considering these issues. We are available on a moment's notice to make our views known.

Sincerely,

IRVIN L. ZITTERKOPF,
General manager.●

SOLVING CENTER'S DIFFICULTEES

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, on December 20, 1977, the General Accounting Office reported to the Congress on the long-term financial situation at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. In detailing problems in the financial outlook of the Kennedy Center, the GAO report concluded, "GAO believes the Congress should consider these problems. It alone can make both the value judgments and tradeoffs involved in solving the Center's difficulties."

I fully agree with that conclusion. The Center has been operating for approximately 6 years and it is time for the Congress to review the entire financial picture at the Center and to make such changes as it deems advisable. Our deliberations should include all aspects of the Center's financial situation, because the various problems are unavoidably interrelated.

The two principal problems define the time-frame for our deliberations. First, the existing bonds agreements allow the Kennedy Center Board of Trustees to defer interest payments through calendar 1978, meaning that the first interest payment must be paid by December 31, 1979. Second, the Congress has authorized nonperforming arts funding through fiscal year 1979 under the present maintenance agreement between the Center and the National Parks Service. That agreement is an important part of the Center's financial picture and has been recently renegotiated in principle by the Center and the Park Service. The Congress should consider that agreement in time for fiscal year 1980 authorization as part of its overall review of Kennedy Center finances.

As part of this overall review process, the Kennedy Center has submitted its own proposals. I am today introducing a bill to amend the John F. Kennedy Center Act in the form which is proposed by the Board of Trustees of the Kennedy Center. This bill should be included in the deliberations of the Congress in general and of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation in particular. This bill is not now specifically endorsed by any member of the committee, but is a welcome addition to our comprehensive review of the Kennedy Center financial situation as called for by the GAO report.●

CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

HON. MATTHEW F. McHUGH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 18, 1978

● Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, at a time when many groups throughout our country are commemorating Captive Nations Week, the news has provided us with the sad details about Anatoly Scharansky and Alekandr Ginzburg.

The trials and conviction of these two Soviet dissidents, together with the less-publicized conviction of Lithuanian dissident Viktoras Petkus, have been grim reminders of the continued repressiveness of the Soviet regime.

During the course of these events, our Ambassador to the United Nations, Andrew Young, was widely criticized for a statement made during a foreign newspaper interview, a statement which implied that there is also much political repression in the United States.

Ambassador Young's statement was certainly ill considered. Indeed, his own personal history demonstrates the real differences in the political systems of Russia and the United States. As he himself pointed out, 3 years after being jailed for participating in a demonstration, he was elected to high office in his home State of Georgia. In his celebrated newspaper interview, he was apparently trying to make the point that anything can happen. But in contemplating his own meteoric career he apparently forgot that such dramatic political "rehabilitation" can only occur in a country which respects the individual and by its laws insures freedom of expression in the political process.

Andrew Young and the Soviet dissidents stand in contrast under two very different political systems. Ambassador Young's exercise of free speech may sometimes prove embarrassing to him and his superiors, but it never puts him in danger of imprisonment. The same cannot be said for the Soviet dissidents. Their plight reminds us that for many millions of people across the globe, there is no such thing as free speech or basic human rights. Not only have individual rights been stifled, but whole nations have been robbed of freedom and independence.

Twenty years ago, the U.S. Congress first proclaimed a commemoration of Captive Nations Week. It was designated the third week of July, and is to be commemorated yearly until all the world's captive nations achieve independence and self-determination. Its purpose is to maintain our vigilance against erosions of freedom anywhere, as well as to protest the imperialistic practices which have subjugated over 30 nations throughout the world. It is also an opportunity to express our support for those brave peoples who tenaciously maintain their national identity in the hope of a new day of freedom to come.

Captive Nations Week was initially prompted by our wish to protest the armed takeover by the Soviets in 1940 of the three Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. Sadly, these countries remain under illegal Soviet domination to this day and are subjected to systematic efforts to erode the native language and national consciousness. Yet, the native population continues to maintain a fierce sense of identity and resists the Soviet colonizing influences. Within the past 6 years, for instance, there have been two major Lithuanian uprisings in that country's two largest cities, uprisings which were quelled by Soviet troops.

The determination of the native Lithuanian people to be free and independent remains vigorous even after years of alien occupation. It is supported by underground publications and the political and cultural activities of exile populations in free countries. Most importantly, it is supported by the commitment of the American people not to acquiesce to illegal Soviet domination of other countries. To demonstrate that commitment, and to commemorate once more Captive Nations Week, any of us in Congress have cosponsored House Concurrent Resolution 177, which calls for U.S. efforts to work for freedom in the Baltic States under United Nations auspices. It further reiterates the sense of Congress that it should remain U.S. policy not to recognize in any way the illegal annexation of these countries by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker, Captive Nations Week reminds us of how precious our own freedom is, and of our responsibility to preserve the rights of other peoples to be free. Benjamin Franklin proudly said, "Where freedom is, there is my country." But Thomas Paine's reply reminds us that it is vigilance that preserves freedom: "Where freedom is not, there is my country."●

BALANCE(S) OF POWER, BOOK IIB (i)—THE UNITED STATES AND THE MARITIME ALLIANCE

HON. JOHN BRECKINRIDGE

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, in the previous selection in the strategic balance series, Colin Grey warned that because of the heartland position of the Soviet Union, their strategic parity with the United States becomes tantamount to strategic advantage. We must then turn to examine the U.S. geopolitical strengths and weaknesses to fully understand the options which must be selected and the necessary defenses which must be accepted to maintain our own security.

The "United States and the Maritime Alliance: Defending the Rimlands," is another chapter from "Geopolitics in the Nuclear Age" by Colin Grey. As the title suggests, potential strategic gain to the United States may derive from naval exploitation of our geopolitical position. It is in this context that challenging Soviet naval developments must be viewed with particular alarm, Mr. Grey's article follows:

THE UNITED STATES AND THE MARITIME ALLIANCE: DEFENDING THE RIMLANDS

Her [the United States'] main political objective, both in peace and in war, must therefore be to prevent the unification of the Old World centers of power in a coalition hostile to her own interests.[65]

INSULARITY: GEOPOLITICAL PERSPECTIVES

Depending upon the cartographic projection selected, the Americans can be shown to be surrounded by Eurasia-Africa, to surround Eurasia-Africa, or to be an offshore island. Different map projections imply different geostrategic opportunities and vulnerabilities. For example, a global map centered on St. Louis shows the United States either in a favorable central position, able to project power on what appear to be interior air/ocean lines onto the littorals of Eurasia; or, scarcely less plausibly, the central location of the North American land mass on the map suggests that the United States is surrounded by hostile, or potentially hostile, land areas in the east and the west of the Eurasian World-Island. With the completion of the Panama Canal in 1914, the United States became truly an island of continental proportion, capable of projecting power toward the Eurasian Rimlands to the east and west with an ease that could not be matched by Heartland capacity (for several decades).

The compelling logic of geopolitics has indicated to any American capable of reading a map and drawing fairly elementary policy lessons from recent history that Heartland and Rimlands on the World-Island must never be organized by a single political will. Nonetheless, the shape of post-1945 American policy was dictated far more by events than by geopolitically-educated policy design. The United States anticipated a full-scale military withdrawal from Europe within two years following the surrender of the Third Reich. American forces remained in Europe, first by virtue of occupation rights and duties, and later as a consequence of explicit alliance undertakings, because World War II effected the destruction of the balance of power in Eurasia. For nearly a century (1870-1945), the problem in world (that is, Europe-centered) politics had been the difficulty in accommodating a unified and overly powerful and ambitious German state within a European balance of power system. That problem was not resolved until 1945.[66]

Following World War II, it became clear, by 1947-48, that the problem of Germany had been resolved (perhaps temporarily) only at the cost of the elevation of a state which, in its turn, threatened to destroy any aspirations for a functioning balance-of-power system that would be restricted to Eurasia. Despite the enormous damage that it suffered in the "Great Patriotic War," the Soviet Union (apparently, at least) disposed of a "projectible power" potenital that could not be countered by strictly Eurasian-Rimland resources. In the late 1940s, China was a great power by courtesy rather than power-produced entitlement; (West) Germany could barely feed itself, let alone function in its time-honored role as a bulwark against the Slavs; while Britain and France, nominal victors in World War II, were reduced to penury. In short, in the period (1946-47) when George Kennan was writing his Mackinderesque recommendation of a firm containment policy, the only question of substance that remained to be debated was over just what kind of containing power really was required. . . .

The pro-Soviet coup in Prague in the Spring of 1948 made clear that the presence of Soviet military power in Central Europe was to be a permanent feature of the political landscape. Without fully appreciating what events had thrust upon it, the United States found itself saddled with the defensive Rimland-protective tasks that previously had been borne by the Germans and the Japanese. Leaving aside their more expansive foreign policy ambitions, the Germans and the Japanese had served to check the hegemonial ambitions of the Heartland power. In the 20th century, those peoples had threatened the balance of power in Eurasia by their attempts to conquer the Heartland; but the necessary character of their defensive, checking, roles was inadequately appreciated by many Americans. After 1945, piece by piece, and rarely—if ever—publicly acknowledged in power-political terms, the United States assumed the power-balancing responsibilities of the British Empire,[67] Germany, and Japan.

The events of 1950-51 were most instructive in geopolitical terms. In 1950, the United States assumed the lead in defending South Korea ("a dagger pointing at the heart of Japan"—and also, let it be noted, a natural bridgehead for an eventual contest for control of Northeast Asia); America's China policy, in its strong commitment to the idea of the legitimacy of Chiang Kai-shek's government-in-exile on Taiwan, amounted to a declaration to the effect that the United States considered developments on the Chinese mainland to constitute "unfinished business"; and the United States reversed its policy toward Indochina in favor of the French. These actions in, and policy decisions concerning, the Asian Rimland were linked by a strong thread of internal logic. Specifically, the United States opposed the domination of the Asian Rimland by the Heartland power. It is now customary to deride that logic; with much good reason, it is argued that North Korea, the Chinese People's Republic, and North Vietnam are not compliant clients of the Soviet Union. In other words, the United States foolishly discerned unitary political will where actually there was a diversity of national ambitions.

Over the long run, however, the supposedly naive presumption of the monolithic nature of communism may fare a great deal better than its apparently more sophisticated challengers. If America's capacity for collective action continues to decline, the ability of the CPR to pursue a foreign policy course independent of, let alone in direct and virulent opposition to, Moscow could shrink markedly. As noted earlier in this study, many contemporary strategic-analytical luminaries in the West have virtually no background in history, even very recent history. The geographical location of Indochina renders its harbors and airfields an asset of great importance—particularly for a power totally (otherwise) deficient in forward bases that bear upon the South China Sea and the Southwest Pacific. Vietnam is very much in the Soviet debt. It is not at all implausible to foresee a time when Soviet ships and aircraft will find Vietnames facilities as useful as did the Japanese. (Skeptics are invited to research the use made of Vietnamese territory and harbors by the Japanese Empire, and to reflect upon the Soviet problems of power projection in the Pacific.)

In 1951, responding to the falsely-identified "diversion" in Korea, the NATO allies effectively began to give their political alliance a quasi-unified military backbone. American leadership of NATO was symbolized by the appointment of an American general, Dwight D. Eisenhower, to be the first Supreme Allied Commander, Europe (SACEUR). Although "the Soviet threat" (at least as regards any propensity for taking military action) was vastly exaggerated in the early 1950s, and although the United States—under both Democratic and Republican Administrations—did indulge in unduly indiscriminate alliance-creation, the basic idea driving American foreign policy was entirely sound. Without denying that the United States has aided regimes whose only virtue was that they were overtly and noisily anti-Communist, and that the concept of the integrity of the "Rimland Dike" was, for a long period accepted in an unduly simplistic and total definition, this author would signal a short-list of virtues that permeated what today frequently is called, pejoratively, the "Cold War consensus." The author is not much given to ideological expression, as he has explained elsewhere.[68] He believes that international politics, at root, can be a very rough and nasty business. (Both God-fearing democrats and atheistic totalitarians have been known to drop napalm on innocent or indifferent villagers.) It is appropriate to restate, vary succinctly, the core beliefs of that American Cold War consensus that today is held in such widespread disdain. It was (and is still by some) believed that:

1. The United States is the only power which can balance pressure from the Heartland.

2. Some Rimland allies might be politically odious, but it is a certainty that any Socialist-Communist successor regimes would be no better, and would probably be worse. (In the early 1970s, South Vietnam and Cambodia failed to live up to the ideals of Jeffersonian democracy; their American critics have been less than vociferous on the subject of the fundamentally illiberal regimes that now rule those unfortunate countries. This is yet another case of prejudice triumphant.)

Footnotes at end of article.

3. In the medium term, Western defeat in one locale will weaken resistance elsewhere. The socalled "domino theory," provided it is not interpreted in too mechanistic a fashion, amounts to little more than common sense. The essential accuracy of domino-theory hypotheses was illustrated, sadly, by the easy way in which many of its more strident critics shifted from talking about the war in Vietnam to discussing the war in Indochina in the period 1970–74.

The United States, as a continental-size island bounded on three sides by oceans (the Arctic, Pacific, and Atlantic), could not exist as a functioning, unruly democracy were the Rimlands of Eurasia-Africa to be organized into a Soviet security system. Physical survival might be ensured, but the geopolitical isolation of fortress status would promote a fortress discipline and illiberal fortress practices. The principal American political objective in world affairs—today as in 1944, when the words introducing this chapter were written—must be the containment of Soviet (Heartland) power well short of its achievement of hegemony over the Eurasian-African World-Island and the adjacent seas. . . .

THE AMERICAN STYLE

It was suggested earlier that American political culture was ill-suited to cope with the long-term task of containing the Heartland power. Geopolitical factors require that the American people defend the Rimlands, and relatively free access to the Rimlands, in their own vital interest; yet those same factors inhibit the quality and scale of American performance of that task. Considered in relation to its ease of penetration by Soviet and American power, most of the Eurasian-African Rimlands are, in theory, protected by the fact that oceanic distance and ocean highways connect rather than divide. In terms of transportation economics, greater distance has little meaning. Save with respect to peninsular Europe (no small exception!), the world's oceans should still be thought of as the interior lines of communication of a maritime alliance that has its heart in a North America that can project power east, west, and north—in many directions—with comparative advantage over the Heartland power of the Soviet Union.

Unfortunately, this neo-Mahanian perspective, analytically respectable though it is,[69] suffers from several critical weaknesses. First, distance is not solely a matter of transportation economics; it has a very strong psychological dimension. In 1938, Neville Chamberlain could dismiss Czechoslovakia as "a faraway country." The British Prime Minister spoke truly for most of his countrymen; in terms of psychological distance, Czechoslovakia was infinitely, mysteriously "Central European"—vaguely romantic, and totally foreign and unknown. Few British politicians in 1938 recalled, or more likely had ever known, that Britain's greatest geopolitical theorist, Sir Halford Mackinder, had insisted in his 1919 book that a strong tier of East European states was required if the 700-mile land gateway to the Heartland was to be protected from German ambition.[70] ("Who rules East Europe commands the Heartland.") If the defense of Rimland states is, in essence, a matter of comparative advantage in transportation economics, the United States should have secured victory in Vietnam in very short order. The "loss of strength gradient" hypothesis, that power varies inversely with distance, is sheer nonsense in the context of the communications/transport technology of the second half of the 20th century. But human perceptions lend relevance to that (technically) flawed hypothesis. Barring special ties of an ethnic-religious, or even semi-sentimental historical connection variety, it is not misleading to claim that concern, interest, and knowledge do vary roughly inversely with distance. Our minds carry psychological maps, not ton-mile cost-analysis maps. The ability to project power and the will to project power are not at all synonymous—at least with respect to American insular society in the 1970s.

The proposition that the maritime alliance has an inherent advantage over the Soviet Union in power projection into the Eurasian-African Rimlands ignores the fact that the Heartland has "gone to sea" in a very serious way over the past two decades. Soviet sea and naval air power could not, at present, deny the United States access to the World-Island, but such a burdensome task need not be contemplated. The Soviet Union has no need to secure "command of the sea" in order to bring the World-Island effectively under its control. All that it must accomplish is seriously to hinder trans-Atlantic resupply and reinforcement (or to threaten credibly to do so), or to effect substantial attrition of the supertankers that must navigate half way around the world promontory to meet the absolute energy needs of Western Europe or Japan. The Soviet Navy may, and should, be blown out of the water, its forward facilities on African and South Asian littorals also demolished; but time would not be on the side of the maritime alliance. By compelling the maritime alliance to fight hard for unhindered access to Eurasia, the Soviet Navy would be buying time for Soviet conquest of critical portions of the Rimlands (should Blitzkrieg campaigning overrun its timetable). In the world of the 1980s and 1990s, eventual total naval victory for the United States would be of little value if in the meantime, the peninsular European bridgehead were lost.

It is often claimed that physical geography is a neutral factor (or set of factors) in its relation to the inclinations of a society. Oceans will beckon some countries to utilize them as highways for profit and power, and will be seen by other countries as wide moats providing security from contaminating foreign influences. The physical circumstances of the island-continent of North America has helped produce, in its people, a seemingly perpetual dialectic between the urge to withdraw into the illusory safety of a Fortress America, and the impulse to exercise that capacity for transoceanic power projection which a central position between the eastern and western littorals of Eurasia (on some cartographic projections) affords, and which the relative power differential between the United States and the Eurasian Rimlands both permits and requires (if it is not to be engulfed in the security system of the Heartland power).

The insular circumstances of America geography, and the oceanic distances which separate North America from Asia and Europe, continue to have major foreign and defense policy consequences—at the level of perception of enduring interests rather than capability for effective local action. North Vietnamese leaders assessed, correctly, that their stake in the future of South Vietnam was far more substantial than was that of the United States. Americans came, and they would go—the North Vietnamese and their Southern sympathizers would always be there, by virtue of physical and cultural geography. Similarly, Europeans of all nationalities are aware of the geopolitical fact that the Soviet Union is a European power, while the United States is a power in Europe; this is a critical distinction. No NATO-European, however friendly his feeling toward the United States, or trusting his response to contemporary American expressions of enduring alliance fidelity, can afford to ignore the historically well-justified presentiment that the American forward military presence in and about Europe is only a phase in American policy (a long phase, admittedly, but still a phase). NATO-Europeans have to take account of the very probable fact that one day a Mansfield-type amendment will succeed, and that it will precipitate a slide of withdrawal that no President will be capable of arresting (even should he so desire). Transoceanic distance may have lost much of its meaning in terms of the economics of transportation and the speed of electronic communication, but the record of American nuclear strategy belies such economic-geographic common sense.

The geopolitical theories of Mackinder and Spykman, translated for the late 1970s, insist that America's security frontiers are on the Elbe and the 38th parallel in Korea (for prominent examples). Since this is the case, why has the credibility of the American nuclear commitment been seen by the United States and allied defense communities as a critical problem? Credibility problems do not pertain to defense of the American homeland, or—in suggestive illustration—seriously to defense of Canada and Mexico. American commitments to the defense of, say, West Germany, are viewed by very many people as being sufficiently "unnatural" in terms of psychological geography that extraordinary effort and ingenuity need to be expended to ensure credible strategic "linkage" between the forward area and the American homeland.

Insular geopolitics do not, in and of themselves, direct societies down one as opposed to other possible path in internal development or external relations. As noted above, a geopolitical perspective upon international relations requires the commentator to be very attentive indeed to cultural geography. Great Britain, Japan, and the United States have been/are all "island empires" offshore the dual-continent World-Island of Eurasia-Africa, but the differences between them are at least as significant and interesting as the similarities that are traceable to offshore location.

It is possible, though somewhat perilous, to identify the principal characteristics of a distinctive American "style" in foreign affairs. Moreover, as noted with respect to Russia/the Soviet Union, such a style is really the product of domestic experience (though that domestic experience is molded by impinging "foreign" events, just as domestic forces also project outward). This author has long believed that international politics (or relations, for the more inclusive concept), as an aspiring academic discipline, lacked scholarly integrity. International politics are conducted by the human products of distinctive political cultures, and very often in a manner which reflects the rules, practices, and habits learned in domestic political settings. A distinctive American style in the conduct of foreign and defense policy has been manifest, with particular poignancy, in the context of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT).

Many Americans today are unwilling to accept that the Soviet Union is committed to a permanency of political struggle with the maritime alliance led by the United States; and is determined to achieve as substantial a measure of strategic superiority as it is permitted. The SALT exercise, as a central strand in the 1970s-styled peaceful coexistence policy, contributes usefully to the psychological disarmament of the West, and encourages manifestations of that apolitical, engineering approach to strategic problems which detracts from American arms competitive performance.[71] The dominant element in the American government seems unwilling, or possibly culturally unable, to take Soviet strategic and arms control (mis) behavior at its face value. Probably because it is a "satisfied" country, deeply wedded to the notion of stability and international order (as a projection of domestic order), and because power accumulation (in readiness for the next crisis and clash of arms) is an idea alien to a society that sees "peace" as the norm. American comprehension of Soviet motives and practices is tenuous at best.

Many American officials and politicians have persuaded themselves that their country and the Soviet Union are committed to a nonviolent search for a modus vivendi in the world. The SALT enterprise, in this very popular view, is a mechanism intended by both sides to constrain the growth (and perhaps the possible character) of rival strategic-nuclear arsenals. Unfortunately, such a world view, with its focus upon stability and order, is very different from everything that we understand concerning the Soviet world view. To Soviet officials, strategic parity is but a passing phase on the road to strategic superiority. In geopolitical perspective, the American defense community has yet to come to term with the likely consequences of parity, let alone inferiority. Strategic parity means that the United States has no margin of strategic nuclear strength which could be invoked on behalf of endangered friends and allies in Eurasia. One has to presume, on grounds of prudence, that the Soviet Union is devoting (at least) 13 to 15 percent of its GNP to defense for serious political reasons. With an increasingly impressive navy, and with the maintenance of a ground force and tactical air and missile capability that threaten the rapid overrunning of peninsular Europe, the geopolitical implications of the massive Soviet strategic forces build-up become all too clear. That build-up (which even functional apologists for Soviet military power have come to acknowledge as a reality) should secure for the Soviet Union a wide margin of freedom of action against the Eurasian-African Rimlands. Should the United States respond with limited strategic options (LSOs) to calls for help by desperate allies, the Soviet Union could, in the 1980s, reply with a devestating countermilitary central riposte that would leave the United States with no sensible strategic options.

A geopolitical perspective upon East-West relations serves to remind Americans that their armed forces have different tasks from those assigned to the armed forces of the Soviet Union. A SALT agreement that plausibly might be defended as a triumph for "the parity principle" should—on very basic geopolitical grounds—be vulnerable to the charge that it licensed roughly equal forces for the support of grossly unequal foreign policy missions. Studies of the Soviet-American or Soviet-NATO naval balance are no less prone to misassessment of the real strength of each side, because the geopolitical asymmetries between the maritime alliance and the Heartland power have not been adequately appreciated. As a consequence of interpretation of its bloody historical experience, the Soviet Union approaches the many questions that bear upon war in what has to be described as a more serious way than does the United States. Both NATO strategy and American strategic nuclear doctrine promise to mesh to the Western disadvantage with what may be inferred, and what is stated by Soviet officials, concerning Soviet approaches to theater conflict and to central war. The United States and its European-Rimland allies are (possibly sensibly) obsessed with the mechanism for providing prewar and intrawar deterrence; a sharp distinction is drawn between deterrence and "war-fighting." In contrast to American practice in Vietnam, the Soviet Union believes that wars should be fought to be won; Soviet "style" was manifest in the interventions in Hungary and Czechoslovakia in 1956 and 1968. Military power on an overwhelming scale was deployed for very rapid results, though for limited purposes.

While the United States, in the best insular strategic style, would be seeking to preserve thresholds and dampen escalation possibilities, the Soviet Union, in the best continental strategic style, would probably be applying massive military force for the end of theater victory. American and Soviet "styles" promise the following character of interaction in conflict. Whereas the United States would be more concerned with limiting military action than securing any outcome definable as victory, the Soviet Union would be more concerned with securing victory than it would with the limitation of military action. The inherent merits in the two distinctive orientations are not at issue here. What is cause for serious concern, if not alarm, is the thought that comparatively few Western officials seem adequately to understand these basic stylistic differences.

In and of themselves, the facts of physical geography in their relation to the political organization of the world are objectively of great importance. But as this chapter in particular has sought to argue, probably of even greater importance are the perceptions of individuals of the political meaning of physical geography, the habits of thought and action that flow from such culturally-bequeathed perceptions, and the policy "lessons" learned (or mislearned) by each society from the assessment and reassessment of its history. The concept of "national style" is clear in outline, yet lends itself to challenge when detail is offered respecting particular nations. Indeed, the difficulty of analyzing style in a rigorous fashion is matched by the importance of attempting such a task.

TERENCE A. TODMAN, AMBASSADOR TO SPAIN

HON. RON DE LUGO

OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share with my colleagues the remarks made by Ambassador Terence A. Todman on the occasion of his swearing-in as our new Ambassador to Spain.

The Ambassador, a native son of the Virgin Islands, has been serving as the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs for the past 18 months. During this time he has been in the forefront of the administration's efforts to better our relations with our South American neighbors.

As always, the remarks of Ambassador Todman reflect his thorough professionalism, his dedication to his country and his sensitivity to the peoples of the world. We, the Virgin Islanders, are justly proud of his significant contribution to diplomacy and wish him again the success that has come to characterize his brilliant career.

I am pleased to insert into the RECORD his remarks as printed in the Virgin Islands Daily News, July 6, 1978:

TODMAN'S SWEARING-IN REMARKS

(By Assistant Secretary Terence A. Todman)

Mr. Secretary, I am deeply grateful to you for being here today and especially for your most generous and gracious remarks.

I know and fully share the admiration, the respect and the goodwill which the president and you have for the Spanish people, and for their efforts to consolidate their democratic system and set their course in international affairs in cooperation with the West. I am also aware of the great importance which the President and you attach to our relations with Spain during this critical period. Thus I am truly honored to enjoy the trust and confidence you have shown in selecting me as Ambassador to Spain. I welcome the assignment and will do everything within my power to strengthen the bonds of friendship and cooperation between our two countries.

The importance and challenges of the Madrid assignment are among the principal reasons I requested it and why, as a professional I am so pleased and honored to have been selected.

This assignment to a major European country also offers an opportunity I simply could not forego, that is, to help the president and you take one more small step toward breaking down the barriers of discrimination and opening up a new area to move our country a little closer to our goal of equal opportunity. I believe we all have a duty to contribute whenever and wherever we can to progress of greater equality in our country.

One more reason for the attraction of this assignment, in all honesty, is the personal pleasure of being able to spend some time in Spain, a country so well known for its beauty, its devotion and contribution to the arts and literature, the history which is everywhere evident and, above all, the warmth and graciousness of its people. Frankly, I don't know anyone who would turn down an opportunity to live and work in Madrid.

Thus, it is with great anticipation that I look forward to my assignment to Spain and to contributing in every way possible to the advancement of the mutual interest of our two countries in what I expect will be very pleasant circumstances as well.

Mr. Secretary, as happy as I am about the Madrid assignment, I must admit that it was not easy for me to decide to leave Latin American Affairs. The broad and direct impact of this area on our lives made the assignment as assistant secretary most challenging and satisfying. The size and resources of the Latin American and Caribbean countries, the dynamism intelligence and resourcefulness of their large and growing populations, and the determination of their leaders to play a greater role in affairs that affect them, ensure that their importance to us will continue to increase. It has been particularly gratifying to serve a president and secretary of state who are so deeply sensitive to these trends, so personally interested in the area and so courageous in mapping out a realistic course for our evolving relations.

The job was all the more enjoyable because of the opportunity it afforded me to deal with people who have so much in common with us, who show the warmest feelings of friendship and consideration for us and who ask only that those feelings be reciprocated and that their dignity and sovereignty be respected to permit close cooperation in our mutual interests. The people of Latin America share the goals to which President Carter has pledged his administration. I have no doubt that, within the limits imposed by their own histories and particular situations, they want to cooperate with us to find solutions to all the critical problems of our times, including human rights as well as economic, social and political development.

Despite these advantages the task was not always easy as we addressed the challenges to improve communication and to help promote human rights and democracy throughout the hemisphere, without interfering in other societies or trying to remark them according to our special preferences. Matters were not helped by the misinformation and confusion shown by those who, in pursuit of special objectives, misused their positions and leaked distorted information to a few selected journalists eager to report sensationalized stories of conflict while ignoring anything on the other side. In the circumstances, I am proud that we have succeeded in setting a firm and positive course to improve the human condition, strengthen democracy, and increase understanding among our countries.

One regret I have in leaving now comes from knowing that at many of the official and social gatherings in which I have participated, mostly due to my official position, there will often be no visual reminder that ours is a multi-racial society committed to the goal of equal opportunity for all its citizens. This is particularly sad when one considers the many talented individuals from the minority communities and women who are willing and able to make badly needed contributions now as we deal with third world problems and with diffuse sources of power in our interdependent world. I can only hope that my colleagues in the Foreign Service and all others concerned will do whatever they can to help, rather than hinder, the realization of the equal opportunity objectives to which the president and you, Mr. Secretary, are so deeply committed. I am convinced that unless we improve our own record in the State Department and domestically, we will continue to find serious impediments to the achievement of our foreign policy objectives.

I could not end these remarks without saying a word of appreciation to all those who contributed so much to the success, the enjoyment and the stimulation of the ARA assignment.

The Latin American leaders, both in and out of government, have extended extraordinary courtesies as well as understanding and cooperation to me and my staff as we worked with them to advance the cause of human dignity and democracy. I am most grateful to them.

Most of all, I thank the president and you, Mr. Secretary, for your great interest and your strong and consistent support. I am certain that with your continued help, my distinguished successor, Ambassador Vaky, will be able to keep us on course and to sustain the new spirit of cooperation we have created.

I wish to take this occasion to publicly thank my wife, Doris, who with relatively little complaint gave me up almost entirely to the demands of the assistant secretaryship for the last 18 months and who is now being uprooted from her professional role with the important activities of Africare and transplanted to an unpaid though critical semi-government status. Fortunately, this time it will be in Madrid.

I give special thanks to my colleagues in the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs, whose dedication, professionalism and balanced approach insures that the broad interests and goals of the United States as defined by the president and you, Mr. Secretary will continue to be served as well.

In the same vein, I wish to thank all those throughout the department and in other agencies who have so generously shared their time and their knowledge to help me prepare for the challenge and opportunities of the assignment to Madrid.

Finally, my thanks go to all of you present who in one way or another have supported and assisted me so fully not only in my past job but in all of my other assignments. Your understanding and support has enabled me to stay on a sound and positive course in the past and will surely sustain me in the future.

I shall miss being with you here in Washington but I look forward to the pleasure of seeing you in Madrid.

Thank you very much.●

LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL OPPOSES FOREIGN AID CUTS

HON. MATTHEW F. McHUGH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, the foreign assistance appropriations bill will soon come before the House for consideration. As every Member is aware by now, numerous amendments will be offered to reduce funding and to restrict how our assistance may be used in a variety of ways.

I am opposed to these amendments, Mr. Speaker, and I have been encouraged by the fact that so many thoughtful and responsible newspapers across the Nation have indicated their opposition to them as well. For example, the Louisville Courier-Journal in a recent editorial suggested that efforts to cut the bill still further are reckless in view of the manner in which these funds promote our national interest. The Courier-Journal also pointed out that the total funds recommended in this bill are only approximately half of the budget of the State of California.

For the benefit of those Members who may not have seen this editorial, I am including it in the RECORD at this point:

AID CUTS IMPERIL U.S. INTERESTS

It is inevitable, in the politically unsettling wake of Proposition 13, that Congress will make some cuts in President Carter's request for foreign aid this coming year. But nothing could be more short-sighted than the meat-ax reception that many House members have planned when the bill arrives for a vote this week.

Part of the problem, even if this were not the year of California's tax rebellion and of mid-term elections, is that Rwanda and Malaysia are in nobody's congressional district. But the President's $8.4 billion request already has been cut to $7.3 billion by the House Appropriations Committee, and that could be only the beginning.

Even the chairman of the sponsoring subcommittee, Maryland's Representative Clarence Long, backs a further 8 percent slice of $584 million—all of it from the funds for international financial institutions. He argues that his selective pruning is the only way to head off an across-the-board slash of the same amount that would gut some indispensible programs.

NOT A QUESTION OF CHARITY

Mr. Long may be correct in reading the general mood of Congress. Partly because there are so many new members these days, that body seems increasingly unmindful of the fact that foreign aid—for all the loose talk about global charity—is first and foremost in our own national interest. But his own prescription, which is to make further cuts in the U.S. contribution to the World Bank and its affiliated agencies is reckless.

Like much of Congress, the public seems to have lost sight of why our economic aid to poor nations is a crucial investment—both for our own economic well-being and for global peace. The world becomes less dangerous when needy countries become more self-sufficient.

The cost, meantime, is not all that steep. The $7.3 billion to which this year's appropriation has been cut, and which is acceptable to President Carter as an "absolute minimum," is less than 1.5 percent of the federal budget. It's half the size of California's new, slimmed-down budget for the coming year. About one-third of it supplies military assistance and budget support for countries considered essential to U.S. security.

The economic aid also is less than one-fourth of one percent of the nation's Gross National Product (compared to 2.8 percent of our GNP after World War II). Eleven of the world's 17 industrial democracies do proportionately more.

But the argument doesn't have to come down to questions of conscience or what we've done in the past. Our economy and our security are inextricably linked with the economic growth and political stability of the world's 100 less-developed nations. From them we import most of the raw materials on which key domestic industries depend—85 percent of the tin, 85 percent of the bauxite, more than 40 percent of the oil. And we are looking to the developing nations as additional markets for our products.

Already, it is estimated, one of every four American farm jobs and one of eight manufacturing jobs depend on the sale of U.S. goods abroad. In 1976, the non-oil producing developing countries purchased 24 percent of our exports and resulted in over one million jobs in the U.S. Our farm exports to the developing countries now total $7.4 billion yearly.

It's those underdeveloped nations that also face the gravest problems of political stability, as they try to cope with such problems as soaring populations that in many cases continue to outrun gains in national income. Hungry people are an attractive audience for Soviet troublemakers, domestic tyrants and others who seek to foment global instability

In recent years, the industrialized countries have been channeling more of the aid through multilateral development banks. This has the dual effect of sharply increasing the money available and insulating the aid from the political motives of any one country.

The banks use the contributions from member states as backing for bond sales. Thus $10 of aid funds are generated for each $1 contributed. The aid then goes into development loans designed to assure that the needy will directly benefit or that the products they stimulate will find ready buyers, usually within the developing country itself.

CURBS ON DISTRIBUTION SOUGHT

It is these lending institutions, as noted which are coming under the heaviest congressional fire this year. The critics zero in on such points as high salaries and large staffs of these institutions as proof of their irresponsibility. What also galls them is the fact that Congress cannot control the international institutions' distribution of loans. Thus, the House Appropriations Committee cut to $2.6 billion the $3.5 billion asked by President Carter for the World Bank and the smaller regional development banks. Congressman Long wants to trim this another $584 million.

Both our leading partners and the poor nations are rightfully dismayed at the prospect. The U.S. failure to make payments promised earlier is already crippling development plans. This year's proposals to cut more funds and include restrictions contrary to the banks' charter would compound the disgrace. If the banks cannot assist countries such as Angola and Mozambique just because those governments claim to be Marxist, we give them no option but to turn to Communist sources. And the recurrent tendency to oppose loans which might result in future competition with U.S. products not only ignores the banks sound fiscal policies but is embarrassingly greedy.

In short, foreign aid is far more than a humanitarian gesture. It is a cost-effective way to benefit our own economy and increase national security. If President Carter would take the facts forcefully to the American people there should be no question about the fate of this far-sighted program. If we falter, the cost will be paid first by the world's poor. The ultimate price could well be the world's security.●

U.S. CONFERENCE OF MAYORS ENDORSES AIRPORT AND AIRCRAFT NOISE REDUCTION ACT

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, there probably is no group of elected officials in the United States more conscious of the serious environmental problems associated with airport and aircraft noise than the Nation's mayors. This is understandable for the impacts upon people and property values and the costs and potential costs upon local governments and therefore local taxpayers from lawsuits are horrendous.

These problems are not new. Proposals for a rational approach toward solving them have been before us at least since the report of the Doolittle Commission appointed by President Truman. Each year that we procrastinate increases the ultimate cost to the taxpayer.

After 2 years of the most exhaustive study ever undertaken on the problems of airport and aircraft noise our Public Works and Transportation Committee has produced a bill which provides rational solutions. We provide that the costs be charged to the user; even though we propose to do so without any increase in current taxes.

Our largest cities have much at stake in this bill; however they are not alone. Our nonmetropolitan cities increasingly are coming to believe that instead of "communities building airports" that "airports build communities." Perhaps we are witnessing the arrival of that stage in our economic and technological development when aviation will have the same profound effect on development patterns that other modes of transportation have had in the past. The emergence of the corporate jet, the growth of general aviation, and the astronomical development of commuter airline traffic seem to be in concert with the new demographic trends reported by the Bureau of the Census.

Title II of this bill, which provides additional discretionary funds for airport development from the aviation trust fund and extends the more favorable funding ratio for the smaller airports, therefore is of obvious interest to the nonmetropolitan cities. Some of these same cities also need the voluntary airport planning process encouraged by title I and the long-range protection this will provide from the type of development we have allowed around older airports with such disastrous environmental and human cost.

I am pleased that the Conference of Mayors has taken such a realistic and strong stand on this issue and therefore wish to enter the letter I have received from Mr. John Gunther, executive director of that organization.

U.S. CONFERENCE OF MAYORS,
Washington, D.C., July 20, 1978.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE:

The U.S. Conference of Mayors urges your support for favorable Rules Committee action concerning H.R. 8729, the Airport and Aircraft Noise Financing Act and its Ways and Means companion H.R. 11986, the Noisy Aircraft Revenue Act. We believe these measures promise a good start towards alleviating the serious noise pollution problems surrounding our airports, which impair urban health and development.

The 46th Annual Conference of Mayors, held in Atlanta during June, adopted a comprehensive resolution stating the policy of the Conference with respect to airport and aircraft noise, which we have enclosed for your review. This resolution, a matter of strong personal concern to scores of Mayors, noted that noise pollution adversely affects airports, the airline industry, area residents, and land use planning in cities. The resolution endorsed the pending legislation, with specific reference to Title I, planning and implementation grants, and Title III, which provides that two percent of the existing eight percent excise tax on airline passenger tickets be reserved for the purpose of retrofitting plane engines for noise reduction purposes.

Time is growing short for an effective airport and aircraft noise abatement program to be crafted by the 95th Congress. In recognition of this we hope the Rules Committee will move promptly to report H.R. 8729 and H.R. 11986 to the floor of the House.

Sincerely,

JOHN J. GUNTHER,
Executive Director.

AIRPORT AND AIRCRAFT NOISE REDUCTION ACT

Whereas, aircraft noise is a most serious problem facing the aviation industry today; and

Whereas, because of aircraft noise, certain airport developments possibly are being affected adversely, airport operations are being constrained and the communities that own and operate public airports are being judged legally liable for millions of dollars of damages in airport noise suits; and

Whereas, in an effort to protect themselves from the rising costs of noise damage lawsuits, communities that own or operate airports have begun to purchase those land areas which are generating these suits, utilizing valuable local and federal resources; and

Whereas, land purchasing is the most expensive solution to noise reduction and does nothing actually to reduce aircraft noise; and

Whereas, existing Federal Aviation Administration Regulations have imposed an excessive requirement on the airline industry by requiring that all existing nonconforming aircraft comply with FAR Requirement No. 35 (noise) by 1985; and

Whereas, the airlines are being seriously financially affected by the cost of bringing the existing non-conforming fleet into compliance with FAR No. 36 by 1985; and

Whereas, after a thorough and exhaustive analysis of aircraft noise, the Federal Aviation Administration has found that a particular retrofit technology, known as Sound Absorbent Material, or SAM retrofit for short, is the most cost effective technology available to bring non-complying aircraft models into compliance with FAR No. 36; and

Whereas, the application of SAM retrofit technology to existing aircraft will result in a substantial reduction in aircraft and airport noise; and

Whereas, sufficient monies currently are being collected through the existing 8% excise tax on airline passengers to fund both airport development projects and the SAM retrofit program; and

Whereas, congressional failure to appropriate fully Airport Trust Fund monies is affecting adversely airport development projects throughout the nation; and

Whereas, the 96th Congress currently is considering an Act entitled the Airport and Aircraft Noise Reduction Act; and

Whereas, Title I of this Act authorizes the U.S. Secretary of Transportation to make grants to operators of airports and to units of local government in the area surrounding such airports for the purpose of planning and developing noise compatibility programs; and

Whereas, Title III of this Act provides that 2% of the existing 8% excise tax on airline passengers be reserved for the purpose of allowing the airlines to bring their non-conforming fleet into compliance with FAR No. 36 (noise) by 1985; and

Whereas, if this legislation were adopted, it would reduce substantially aircraft noise currently impacting our cities with a concomitant decrease in noise damage lawsuits.

THE 60TH BIRTHDAY OF SOUTH AFRICAN FREEDOM FIGHTER, NELSON MANDELA

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, July 18 was the 60th birthday of South African freedom fighter, Nelson Mandela. The United Nations Special Committee Against Apartheid has called upon the world community to pay tribute to the contributions of this leader to the liberation struggle in South Africa, and to join with the special committee in demanding his release, as well as the immediate release of all political prisoners under the minority regime's control.

Mr. Mandela has been active in the national liberation movement in South Africa since 1944 when he joined the African National Congress and its youth league. As deputy national president of the ANC in 1952, he organized the Campaign of Defiance of Unjust Laws. The imprisonment of over 8,000 volunteers in the campaign led the UN General Assembly to its first consideration of the problem of apartheid in South Africa. In 1961, Mr. Mandela was an organizer of the All-in-Africa Convention which sought to convene representatives of the peoples of South Africa to write a democratic constitution. Forced underground, he led the 1961 nationwide strike to protest the establishment of the so-called Republic of South Africa. Mr. Mandela was arrested in August 1962 and was the principal accused in the infamous "Rivonia Trial," in which he and seven other codefendants (Walter Sisiu, Ahmed Kathrada, Govan Mbeki, Dnnis Goldberg, Raymond Mhlaba, Elias Motsoaledi, and Andrew Mlangeni) were sentenced to life imprisonment. During the court proceedings the United Nations General Assembly condemned the political trials in Resolution 1881, passed October 11, 1963, a day subsequently proclaimed by the General Assembly as a Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners.

Ambassador Leslie O. Harriman, chairman of the Special Committee Against Apartheid and Nigeria's representative at the United Nations, has suggested several actions which organizations and individuals may undertake to support the growing human rights struggle taking place in South Africa: The demand for the immediate release of Nelson Mandela and all South African political prisoners; dissemination of posters and other materials about their unjust imorisonment; contributions to the U.N. trust fund for South Africa; and assistance to the oppressed South African majority.

Mr. John F. Burns of the New York Times has written an excellent and moving account of Mr. Mandela's life in South Africa's Robben Island prison. I hope my colleagues will read this article about the struggle to win the release of political prisoners in South Africa and for freedom and justice for the South African majority. The article on Nelson Mandela follows:

KEY BLACK LEADER TURNS 60 ON SOUTH AFRICA PRISON ISLE

(By John F. Burns)

CAPE TOWN, July 18.—Nelson Mandela, the man who would most probably head a black government in South Africa, spent his 60th birthday today on an island in the mouth of Table Bay, within sight of the great sea route that brought the first white men to the southernmost tip of Africa nearly five centuries ago.

Mr. Mandela was not on vacation. For the 16th year he spent his birthday inside the gray stone walls of Robben Island, a prison fortress seven miles offshore, where the white rulers of South Africa have confined more than 350 men convicted of subversion in working for the establishment of majority rule.

Under government rules that make Robben Island as inaccessible as Devil's Island of colonial France, there was no news of how the tall, lightly bearded Mr. Mandela spent his day. Even his wife, Nomzamo Winnie Mandela, herself under restriction in a town in the Orange Free State more than 600 miles away, was denied permission to make a special visit.

It was a day of fasting and prayer for the 43-year-old Mrs. Mandela, interrupted by frequent visits from the mailman, who bicycled up the dusty road to her home with satchels full of telegrams, cards and letters from presidents, prime ministers and other well-wishers all over the world. One, from the United Nations Special Committee on Apartheid, saluted the men on Robben Island as "the authentic leaders of the oppressed people" of South Africa.

LEADER WITHOUT AN EQUAL

Among those leaders, Mr. Mandela is without peer. Born into the royal family of the Transkei, the homeland of South Africa's Xhosa-speaking people, he forsook the possibility of tribal leadership for the rocky road of black nationalism. In 1964, when he was already in jail for activities on behalf of the banned African National Congress, he was sentenced to life imprisonment for conspiracy to overthrow the Government by force.

Today, in the Afrikaner farming town of Brandfort, where blacks at one white-owned grocery still buy their provisions through a hatch in a side wall, Mrs. Mandela spoke of her husband's life in prison.

"Don't believe those stories about a tottering old man you read in some of the pro-Government newspapers," Mrs. Mandela said, smiling and clasping her hands in delight as she sat in the front seat of a visitor's car. "He's as upright and proud as the day he was arrested. Oh, he's just divine!"

From his former fellow inmates, political impressions emerged. "Nelson is exactly the same man who was sentenced on 12 June 1964," said one man who was released after a lengthy term. "He holds precisely the same views, and they are as dear to him now as they were then. What's more, he has had the grim satisfaction of seeing all his predictions fulfilled."

"NO EASY ROAD TO FREEDOM"

Mr. Mandela offered his political testament, which has become a banned document, at his trial in 1964. A distinguished lawyer, he conducted his own defense. In an address to the court that has become known by one of his phrases—"no easy road to freedom"—he forecast increasing violence unless the Government granted equality to blacks.

He explained at length then his decision to go underground and to lead Spear of the Nation, a sabotage arm of the African National Congress, which had previously been committed to peaceful petitioning.

"We have warned repeatedly that the Government, by resorting continually to violence, will breed in this country counter-violence among the people, until, if there is no dawning of sanity on the path of the Government, ultimately the dispute between the Government and my people will finish up by being settled in violence and by force," he said.

Hand-copied passages from the speeches were a common feature of the birthday letters and cards that reached Mrs. Mandela today, many of them from young people in Soweto, the sprawling ghetto outside Johannesburg. For them, Mr. Mandela's forecast has been realized. Since the police opened fire on black rioters two years ago, killing several hundred nationwide, increasing numbers of young blacks have been leaving South Africa for terrorist training abroad, many of them under the wing of the African National Congress.

CONTACTS WITH OUTSIDE WORLD

When Justice Minister James T. Kruger grants permission, Mrs. Mandela flies to Cape Town and boards a police ferry for the 45-minute journey to the island. There, separated by a wall of armor-plated glass and connected only by telephone, she and her husband are allowed to converse for 30 minutes with four white guards listening.

"The whole thing is so humiliating." ●

LET'S KEEP OUR TRANSPORTATION SUBSIDIES IN PERSPECTIVE

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 24, 1978

● Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, we in Congress gnash our teeth every time we have to vote on Federal subsidies for public needs, knowing as we do the impact the overall Federal budget has on the economy and on the private needs of American taxpayers.

But we often fail to compare levels of subsidy to various related matters, and without such comparisons our decisions may well suffer.

George Hamilton Forman, an attorney in Buffalo, N.Y., recently testified at a hearing held by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the preliminary study of rail passenger services in the United States done by the Department of Transportation, and in that testimony Mr. Hamilton cogently compared various subsidy levels to different modes of transportation.

I think his analysis warrants the careful attention of all Americans and particularly that of our colleagues in Congress, Mr. Speaker, so I am hereby submitting it for printing in the RECORD:

STATEMENT BY GEORGE HAMILTON FORMAN

First by way of introduction, I have used railroad passenger service extensively over a period of 30 years for pleasure and vacation travel and in later years for business travel as well. Since the introduction of Amtrak on May 1, 1971 I have made numerous trips on Empire Service and on the Lake Shore to New York City and have extensively used the New York-Florida service. Several trips have been made on the Montrealer, Chicago-Detroit-Chicago-St. Louis as well as the Inter-American. The above list is in no way exhaustive or complete as to my rail travel experience, but is mentioned to show that I have extensively traveled on Amtrak passenger service on a system wide basis.

I have read a transcript entitled a "Preliminary Report to Congress and the Public—A Reexamination of the Amtrak Route Structure" prepared by the United States Department of Transportation, May 1978. DOT proposes to reduce the Amtrak system by 8100 miles, eliminating extensive service to the West replacing it with a "City of Everywhere" train on one route. The Inter-American and Chicago—Florida service as well as several other trains are also to be dropped. According to the DOT study if the new recommended system were adopted in 1980 the projected operating subsidy would be $547 million as opposed to $665 million for the present system, a supposed savings of $122 million. (See page ES–3 of DOT study.)

I have some further misgivings concerning the creditability of this DOT study and the improper crediting of passenger miles vs. train miles statistics to various trains. An example would be the crediting of the Montrealer with a figure of 99 PM/TM when the more realistic figure should be 215 PM/TM. (See exhibit 1, Mr. Joseph V. MacDonald's comments to Mr. Ullman published in Rail Travel News, Vol. 8 No. 9, first issue of June 1978, page 15.)

Credibility for this DOT study is further eroded by a statement of Brock Adams in the opening pages in which Adams expresses concern over what effect the size of the Amtrak system and subsidy has on the intercity bus industry, which Adams refers to as a private sector competitor. Let's get the record straight. DOT budget 1977–78 is as follows:

DOT BUDGET 1977–78

(Millions of dollars)

|---|---|
| Ground: | |
| Highway construction and safety | $6,251 |
| Mass transit | 2,146 |
| Amtrak | 576 |
| Other railroad | 1,085 |
| Regulation | 61 |
| | 10,119 |
| Air: | |
| Airways and airports | 2,417 |
| Air carrier subsidies | 77 |
| Research and technology | 349 |
| | 2,843 |
| Water: | |
| Coast Guard | 1,203 |
| Shipping | 682 |
| | 1,885 |
| Other | 83 |
| DOT total | 14,930 |

It has been estimated that if the United States were to remove its subsidies to the airlines, a round trip ticket to the East Coast would cost over $1,000 and very quickly the airplane would be threatened as a means of travel. Similarly if these subsidies were removed from the bus industry that means of travel would be sorely pressed to continue in business.

"The current subsidy of the U.S. air traffic control system is $1.8 billion annually, and this represents only a small fraction of public subsidies of airlines. Former Transportation Secretary William Coleman estimated that air travelers pay only ⅓ the cost of their transportation. Amtrak passengers, by comparison, pay almost 40%. The subsidy of U.S. highways by non-highway revenue sources since 1920 totals well over $150 billion, and this does not take into account the social and environmental damages, or the $46 billion we spend annually to import petroleum from the O.P.E.C. nations." (Page 3 from Statement by Adriana Gianturco, Director California Department of Transportation regarding Proposed Cuts in Amtrak Service in California, May 11, 1978.)

In 1971 when Amtrak went into effect over ⅔ of existing passenger train miles were discontinued. One would think here is a golden opportunity for the intercity bus lines to pick up this patronage. On the contrary not only did the bus lines not generate any new business from these train discontinuances but in the 7 years since, their total passenger miles carried have steadily and persistently fallen off. (See DOT report page 7–21, Table 7–6.)

DOT has a built in bias in favor of highways and airlines and against railroad passenger service. This has been amply expressed by William Coleman, former DOT Secretary and now by Brock Adams. For a nation in which the President has stated an energy crisis is imminent and a sound energy policy must be placed in effect, the DOT has contrary to common sense proposed billions for highway and airport projects and a program of cuts for Amtrak, which if realized will capsize this nation's passenger train network.

Is it too much to ask that this nation have a balanced transportation network? Certainly the traveling public should have a choice as to travel on the highways or use of common carrier buses, airlines and railroad passenger service. In fact, various means of transportation can supplement each other. For example, buses providing short distance feeder lines to passenger trains for communities not on rail lines, public parks or tours, etc.

The real competitor is the automobile and DOT's effort should be to build up energy efficient train service as an alternative.

In spite of the growth of private transportation, "Over its entire network, Amtrak has revised the long-term downward trend in intercity rail passenger traffic and has managed to increase passenger trips, train miles and passenger miles." (DOT Report, pages 2–4.)

This has been done in spite of poor equipment and tracks, slow schedules, frequently late trains and the fact on some routes only one train a day each way provides the schedule necessitating "middle of the night" service in some communities. For example, if I want to go to Chicago or Cleveland I must be at Buffalo Terminal prior to the 3:45 A.M. departure of The Lake Shore. Clearly important long distance routes such as this should be served by a minimum of 3 trains each way scheduled throughout the day. Contrary to the DOT study if such were done the economic loss to Amtrak would not increase by 3 times for the route but would significantly drop because increased scheduling has the affect of more than doubling or tripling patronage, because now the trains are more convenient and attract more riders. High fixed charges, terminal expenses, etc. become less per train run and very importantly more feeder revenue is generated for the rest of the system.

This increase in service should not be limited to the Lake Shore Corridor but should be equally applied to route of the National Limited, Broadway Limited, and Chicago-New Orleans services, etc. Western long distance services should have at least 2 trains each way per day per route and especially during the summer season. Winter service should see an increase in Chicago-Florida and New York-Florida service—Not the service cuts proposed for these routes. Tour train concepts should be developed. Passenger service to our parks out West during the summer, ski trips for winter both in West and East would be useful under this approach.

Amtrak has not adequately developed the Florida service. Trains from Chicago-St. Louis-Detroit-Cleveland-Cincinnati and Atlanta should converge on Florida as well as an expanded New York-Florida service.

Mail should again be carried on passenger trains; if this were done additional revenue of over $100 million a year could be generated with but slight additional expenses. On the bottom line this could generate net profit for Amtrak.

An imaginative advertising program and fare system encouraging travel at off peak times should be pursued. Large fare increases tend only to drive people away and are counter productive. Also the removal of dining service and sleeper accommodations have a similar negative affect. If some Amtrak trains carry commuters on part of their route, this should be encouraged and not driven away as the DOT report suggest.

Clearly the Public wants railroad passenger service and has shown that it wants a full system and will support such a system. DOT's "full service" scenario "E" is a start in the right direction and the spending of ¾ of a billion dollars to support and start such service is a bargain compared to the subsidies of other modes.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE HAMILTON FORMAN,
Attorney.

[From the Rail Travel News, June, 1978]

(The following is the text of Mr. MacDonald's last comments to Mr. Ullman on the preservation of the "Montrealer":)

I don't intend to comment on the whole preliminary report, since this will be discussed by Congress and the public before anything final is decided.

Of course, I am gratified that the Montrealer and the Lake Shore Limited are both included in the proposed system. These are both strong trains in terms of service rendered to the public.

However, one thing disturbs me about the presentation of figures relating to the Montrealer's productivity. In terms of passenger miles per train mile, the average as shown on Table 5–2, for all long distance trains is 137, while the Montrealer is shown as only 99, with a footnote reading, "Excludes intra-NEC passenger-miles and revenue but includes NEC train miles".

This is the most gerrymandered footnote I have seen since my college statistics courses. The correct figure is 215.

In Appendix C, "Operating Cost Estimating Methodology", by which all the figures in this report were purportedly developed, the formula arriving at the 215 is spelled out. The formula is wildly gerrymandered in the various tables. The formula reads:

"It should be noted that the non-Corridor costs included all the expenses of long-distance trains operating in both NEC and non-Corridor service if the train had a restricted boarding policy. For those trains offering an unrestrictive boarding policy, only the portion of costs incurred in non-Corridor service were charged to non-Corridor operations —the basic assumption being that the NEC would replace the train with substitute service to fill the time slot."

The first category is exemplified by the New York to Florida trains, which do not handle passengers who are not traveling south of Washington, D.C Very properly all passengers, passenger miles and train miles all the way from New York to Florida are assigned to these trains, even though they travel 226 miles on the NEC.

The Montrealer exemplified the second category, in that it handles NEC passengers on an unreserved basis, runs several additional coaches and snack-bar coach between Washington and Penn Station, New York, and the train is prominently listed in the NEC timetables.

Following the formula in Appendix C, the passenger miles (excluding intra-NEC passenger miles) would be as shown in all the tables (5–1, 5–2, D–10 and D–11), namely 48.62 million, which is based on the 309-mile segment extending beyond the NEC from Springfield to Montreal. However, completely contrary to the formula, the train miles shown in the tables include the 361 miles of NEC track as shown as 0.489 million, which cover the 361 miles of NEC track as well as the 309 non-NEC miles. Thus the train's performance is grossly distorted to a ridiculously low 99 PM/TM, whereas following the formula in Appendix C would yield the realistic 215 PM/TM. This distortion occurs in all the tables in the report, each with a sanctimonious footnote.

My fear is that when the subject of whose train is finally to remain in and whose is to be dropped is argued out, opponents of the Montrealer may trumpet the gerrymandered figure of 99 PM/TM as evidence that the Montrealer is a weak train. I want this information in the hands of those who will be defending the MONTREALER and ask that you see that it be placed diplomatically in their hand.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of the Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of all meetings when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in meetings as they occur.

As an interim procedure until the computerization of this information becomes operational the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committees scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, July 25, 1978, may be found in Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Tuesday, July 25, 1978

(Legislative day of Wednesday, May 17, 1978)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by Hon. PAUL G. HATFIELD, a Senator from the State of Montana.

PRAYER

The Reverend Dr. Thomas A. Stone, associate pastor, National Presbyterian Church, 4101 Nebraska Avenue NW., Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Great God and Father of us all: As we pledge allegiance to our flag we pledge allegiance to Thee. In this room we strive to base the laws of our land on Thy laws. Here we want expressed Thy will for citizens' responsibilities, rights, and liberties. We want to be, and to be known as, a people and a nation with a government loyal to Thee.

We place every day many of our overriding problems on the shoulders, minds, and hearts of the Senators who assemble here. Sustain them for such tasks and direct us to uphold them.

Even beyond the borders of our Nation give us to fulfill Thy call in order that our country, insofar as it can, may do for the needs of the nations of the world what we as Thy people would do for individual neighbors who are hungry, sick, and enslaved. Make certain we see those deeds among "the least."

O God, use us as Thy people and use these Senators as the makers of Thy Law for this Nation for today. Keep close to every one of them. For this we pray. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. EASTLAND).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D.C., July 25, 1978.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable PAUL G. HATFIELD, a Senator from the State of Montana, to perform the duties of the Chair.

JAMES O. EASTLAND,

Mr. PAUL G. HATFIELD thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF LEADERSHIP

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TIME-LIMITATION AGREEMENT—H.R. 12927

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at such time as Calendar Order No. 949, H.R. 12927, the military construction appropriation bill, is called up and made the pending business before the Senate, there be a time agreement thereon as follows: 1 hour on the bill, to be equally divided between Mr. HUDDLESTON and Mr. STEVENS; 30 minutes on any amendment; 20 minutes on any debatable motion, appeal, or point of order, if such is made to the Senate, and that the agreement insofar as the provisions and control of time are concerned be in the usual form.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the agreement follows:

Ordered, That when the Senate proceeds to the consideration of H.R. 12927 (Order No. 949), an act making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1979, and for other purposes, debate on any amendment shall be limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the mover of such and the manager of the bill, and debate on any debatable motion, appeal, or point of order which is submitted or on which the Chair entertains debate shall be limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the mover of such and the manager of the bill: Provided, That in the event the manager of the bill is in favor of any such amendment or motion, the time in opposition thereto shall be controlled by the minority leader or his designee.

Ordered further, That on the question of final passage of the bill, debate shall be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Huddleston) and the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Stevens): Provided, That the Senators, or either of them, may, from the time under their control on the passage of the said bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any amendment, debatable motion, appeal, or point of order.

THE SENATE WORKLOAD

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I think it would be helpful to the Senate to know that I have scheduled a Saturday session for this week. Whether or not we have a Saturday session, indeed, will depend upon the progress that is made during the remainder of the week on the workload that confronts the Senate.

Yesterday, the Senate was delayed for 1 hour in proceeding to the bill, the Older Americans Act, that was scheduled for action beginning at 12 o'clock noon. Several rollcall votes occurred during the day yesterday on innocuous matters, on matters that were unopposed, and could have passed with a voice vote.

The Senate was kept in session later than it otherwise would have been. Apparently the filibuster on the natural gas conference report has already begun, a week or 10 days before it was intended to bring it up.

If this is going to be the regimen that the Senate has forced on it, it simply means we will have to have Saturday sessions. We will have to have longer daily sessions, and some of the high priority legislation that is close to the hearts of all Senators, individually or collectively, may end up not being acted upon this year at all.

PRIORITY LEGISLATION

We have over a dozen appropriation bills yet remaining, 11 of which are the regular appropriation bills; we have the second concurrent budget resolution; we have a tax measure that is important for the continued economic growth of this country, and important to the stimulation of consumer confidence and business investment.

We hope to have hospital cost containment legislation of some kind to aid in the war against inflation. We have numerous conference reports. There are very important pieces of legislation, such as the District of Columbia representation constitutional amendment, the electoral college reform constitutional amendment, and, if the other body passes the ERA legislation, we will have that.

FIFTY DAYS UNTIL OCTOBER 7

A number of Senators will want one or more of these measures called up, and we have only 50 days—50 days—after today, not counting Saturdays or the Labor Day legislative holiday—50 days until October 7.

I have repeatedly said that the only reason I make reference to October 7 is simply because it comes 1 month before November 7. November 7 is election day in this country. I do not want to come back after the Congress adjourns for the election. It may be that the Congress would have to remain in session until October 14, which would leave only 3 weeks, and that is not the best situation for those Members who are running for reelection. I do not happen to be running this year, but for those who are running for reelection, that creates problems for them.

I hope that Senators will see the position that the leadership is being put in, the kind of straitjacket the leadership is being put into, by this epidemic of filibusters that apparently is coming on with the dog days of summer and early autumn.

I would hope that the people of this country realize that the natural gas legislation has been before the Senate for 14 months—14 months—and we have had enough filibustering on the subject. We have had one of the most bitter, bloodletting filibusters that has ever been witnessed on the Senate floor over this very bill.

Now, I think the people ought to know that other important legislation will be backed up if we are going to have delays forced upon the leadership by the kind of tactics we saw yesterday.

I hope all Senators will see this. I hope Senators will understand that if they have to come in on Saturdays and have to stay late evenings and have to come back after the election, that that is the price that is going to have to be paid for this kind of inordinate, unreasonable tactic that we saw practiced on the Senate yesterday.

Any Senator can use the rules; but so can the leadership. I feel that the leadership has a responsibility to act on the energy legislation, to get a vote up or down on it, to act on other high priority legislation before we adjourn this Senate sine die at the close of this Congress.

I merely say these things because I hope to be fair, I hope to be equitable with all Senators, and I hope that what I am saying is received in the spirit in which I offer it. It is a friendly, cautionary note, but it is a friendly, cautionary note that has the proper degree of firmness behind it, and the realism that we just cannot have this kind of delay and expect to complete our work, expect to be out early on Fridays, expect to be out on Saturdays, expect to adjourn sine die on October 7.

As far as I am concerned, October 7 is just a date which I would like to meet. But first we have to do our duty. Let it not be thought that any filibuster on this measure is going to be a one-cloture-vote filibuster, because this measure is just too important to the American people. It is important to the other countries of the world. The other countries of the world are going to hold this country responsible if America cannot reduce its dependence on oil imports. The natural gas bill is a very important factor in reducing oil imports.

So I say this not in any threatening manner, not harshly or in haste, but I realize what my duty is. I realize what we are up against. I realize the kind of workload the Senate has in front of it. I just want all Senators to know what the problem is and what we are all faced with, and I want the American people, as well, to know what we are up against.

The American people expect the Senate to act—with due deliberation, of course, but to act on energy legislation. I do not believe they are in a mood to tolerate continued lengthy filibustering on a piece of legislation that has been before the Senate 14 months and on which the House and the Senate have spent months and months and months in an effort to reach an agreement.

That is all I have to say at this time.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I must say that I listened with great care to the remarks of the distinguished majority leader, not only because of the content and his assessment and analysis of the legislative situation with which we are now faced, but also because of my responsibility to the Members on this side to try to give them as much advance warning as possible on things such as late sessions or Saturday sessions, or even the possibility that this session will extend beyond October 7, on which many people have made plans.

I have listened with great care to the majority leader, and I want to state some of my impressions, so that the majority leader can correct me if those impressions are incorrect.

PROBABILITY OF SATURDAY SESSION

I gather from his statements and the general burden of his remarks that we are on notice that there may be a Saturday session this week. While that is now scheduled, it is not certain, and it depends on the degree of progress we make on the legislative schedule for the remainder of this week.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The Senator is correct. I do not want a Saturday session, but the Senator is precise.

Mr. BAKER. What I am trying to do is to assess the prospects of the probability of it, because as I said earlier, my responsibility to my members is to help them try to make plans for this weekend.

Based on what the distinguished majority leader has told me and the inferences I draw from it, I think I have no choice except to notify our members that they should plan for a Saturday session.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. All Senators should plan for a Saturday session. I hope we will not have one. However, the progress we made yesterday was not very conducive to our completing our work without having a Saturday session. We may do very well the remainder of the week, and I would say it is 50–50 right now as to whether we will have a Saturday session. If we have more delays such as we saw yesterday, I see no way out other than a Saturday session.

Some Saturday sessions are absolutely useless and futile. We do not accomplish anything, except make a spectacle of ourselves.

If I may continue a little further, Saturday sessions are one thing; but when the crunch really comes, it all boils down to whether or not the Senate has completed its work by October 7. If it has not, we will have to come back after the election. As of now, that can be avoided if filibusters can be brought to an end and the Senate can complete its work on energy and other priority legislation.

Mr. BAKER. Will the majority leader give me as much notice as possible if, indeed, he finally concludes that we will have a Saturday session or that we are not going to have a Saturday session? Based on what I have said now, I am going to advise our Members to plan on a Saturday session. However, if they cancel plans now for Saturday and we do not have the session, it is almost as bad as if we have it. Could the majority leader let me know as far in advance as possible that he does or does not intend to have a Saturday session?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes, I will; and I will let the Senate know. I certainly will let the minority leader know, because he has a great responsibility not only to the Senators on his side of the aisle, but also, he bears joint responsibility with the Democratic leadership for getting the work done.

I would be embarrassed to say that we definitely will have a Saturday session and then not have it. I do not want to say that we definitely will have one unless there is a need for it. I do not want the spectacle of the Senate coming in and doing nothing, just to have a Saturday session or to have a few votes.

So I will be working with the minority leader in this regard. If we have a Saturday session, I want it to be a useful one, a productive one. Otherwise, it only hurts the Senate and impinges upon the arrangements of Senators. I do not want that. I already have secured consent to come in on Saturday morning, and whether or not we come in will depend on the progress we make beforehand.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the majority leader.

I should like to address myself to the substantive part of the majority leader's remarks.

ENERGY LEGISLATION

I think the Congress of the United States should have an energy package this year. I thought that last year, and I thought the year before that the Congress of the United States should have passed the energy package President Ford submitted, upon which no action was taken. I think we are now paying the price for an incoherent absence of an energy policy in the United States.

I had grave reservations about the program submitted by the administration in the first instance. I believe the administration's energy package was fatally flawed and that the deficiencies in that program have contributed to the burden of Congress in trying to rewrite an energy package.

The conferees now apparently have made great progress. I have not yet seen the conference report on the natural gas conference. I have not seen the work product of those conferees, and I will reserve judgment on whether I support that conference report until I can read and study it.

However, I want to be on record as saying that there should be an energy package. I may not vote for cloture if, indeed, a cloture motion is filed early on, because I want to see this very important matter discussed thoroughly; I want to see all the aspects ventilated carefully. But at some point, Congress should address itself to the question of what is the energy policy for the Government of the United States. We have not done it. We should do it. I hope the work product that the natural gas conferees are delivering to us will accomplish that purpose.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

NATURAL GAS CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. It was my intention, and may still be my mode of operation, once the natural gas conference report is called up, to allow 2 days of debate before offering a cloture motion, which would mean that the Senate would debate the natural gas conference report for 4 days before it even votes the first time on cloture. Four days is a long time, when we have already been on this bill for 14 months and we have argued up the hill and down the hill; and we have fought and shed political blood. I think we should reach a decision on the matter.

All of us have voted. All of us have made known our positions one way or the other. Everybody knows where each of us stands on this issue. I do not know why we have to continue this internecine warfare indefinitely.

It was my intention to wait 2 days. If we have the kind of tactics we had yesterday, then the filibuster already has started, and I will not be bound by any statement or promise I have made heretofore that I will wait 2 days to offer a cloture motion. We may not get cloture any sooner. But if that is going to be the modus operandi around here for the next few days, I may have to change my viewpoint and offer a cloture motion the very first day when the conference report is called up. We may not get cloture sooner, but will have more cloture votes than otherwise.

I want to be fair, equitable, and just. I want to give ample time for debate on the conference report, because Senators have a right to know what is in it, and only the conferees know. The rest of us do not know. The minority leader and I are not conferees. Senators have a right to study that conference report for 2 or 3 days before a cloture motion is entered.

But by the same token, the leadership is entitled to a little consideration and reasonable flexibility also, in its endeavors to carry out its duty here and move the legislation that has to be disposed of.

I hope I will not feel compelled to offer a cloture motion on the very first day the conference report is called up. I would like to wait a couple of days, a reasonable length of time, and then let Senators have the choice of voting for or against cloture.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I asked the Senator to yield for two reasons.

In the first place, I support the distinguished leaders. I think the majority leader is absolutely correct, 100 percent right, in saying that the Senate has to act. I say that although I strongly oppose gas deregulation and have done so consistently and will vote against it. I am strongly opposed to the crude oil equalization tax. Both, in my judgment, are very inflationary.

The Senator is absolutely correct in saying that we have debated this matter over and over and over again. A day or two, or perhaps three, to consider the conference report may make sense. But I will vote for cloture, and I will do that with reluctance, because I am opposed to the bill.

But I think the majority leader is doing exactly what he should do, what he must do, what he has a responsibility to do in pleading with the Senate to act promptly on this.

It is time that we got it out of the way, and I support the Senator wholeheartedly.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator.

I respect those who oppose the conference report. I have no feeling about that at all. Vote the conference report down. That is one thing. It would just show that Congress does not intend to act on this question this year. But the idea of just prolonging the debate, holding other important legislation up, delaying Congress in doing its work, discommoding every Senator here, every Member of the House of Representatives is unreasonable and I hope that Senators rebel in their thoughts against this kind of prolongation of a debate that has been going on for 25 years concerning an issue on which every one of us has already established his position. When the conference report comes up, let us vote up or down and have it one way or the other.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I shall use 1 more minute. I wish to make sure my position is clear on the concluding remarks on this subject.

I think there should be an energy package, including a natural gas bill. I have not yet seen this natural gas bill. The report has not been published. In any event, I think it is so important that it deserves careful consideration by the Senate.

I will reserve judgment on whether I support the package, the conference report, as it is finally reported, or oppose it. But in any event, in order to guarantee that all of us have a chance to state our views, it is my intention to vote against cloture the first time.

I thank the Chair.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR—S. 3075

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my staff members, Steve Ward, Janet Breslin, and Laura Katz, be accorded the privilege of the floor during debate on the International Security Assistance Act.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN) is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

SEMANTIC INFILTRATION

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, shortly now the Senate will have occasion to examine American policy in southern Africa and to consider proposals to end American participation in economic sanctions against Rhodesia.

This is not a matter about which I could claim any special competence. My views have been, I believe, those of most Americans and my knowledge no greater. I have accepted without reserve the efforts of past administrations to impose and to maintain the sanctions ordered by the United Nations Security Council. As United States Permanent Representative to the United Nations I had some part in that effort.

Similarly, I have admired the efforts of the present administration to provide the good offices of the United States in bringing about majority rule in Rhodesia. I have, however, been troubled by what appears to me to be the undisciplined use of language with which American spokesmen and principal officers of the Government have addressed themselves to this problem.

The question of intention is not, to my mind, primary at this point. I rise, not to disagree with policy, but to ask whether the Secretary of State, cannot pursue our efforts in a more orderly and disciplined mode, which I feel he must do if he hopes to succeed.

In particular, Mr. President, I am talking about the phenomenon which Dr. Fred Charles Ikle—formerly professor of political science at MIT, later and most recently Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency—has described as "semantic infiltration."

Some years ago, in a paper on American difficulties in negotiating with Communist countries, he pointed to the process whereby we come to adopt the language of our adversaries in describing political reality. He gave to this process the intriguing term "semantic infiltration."

I quote a passage from the paper he wrote on the matter. He said:

> Paradoxically, despite the fact that the State Department and other government agencies bestow so much care on the vast verbal output of Communist governments, we have been careless in adopting the language of our opponents and their definitions of conflict issues in many cases where this was clearly to our disadvantage. Or perhaps this is not so paradoxical. It might be precisely because our officials spend so much time on the opponent's rhetoric that they eventually use his words—first in quotation marks, later without.

Mr. President, this was a paper prepared by Dr. Fred Charles Ikle and called "American Shortcomings in Negotiating With Communist Powers." It was published originally by Rand.

I ask unanimous consent to have this paper printed at the end of my remarks.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. MOYNIHAN. These are concepts which are at the heart of today's major political conflicts. It is central to the controversy that attends relationships between the new government in Rhodesia and the rest of the world. For years now, the most brutal totalitarian regimes in the world have called themselves "people's democracies" or "democratic republics."

The term "people's democracies," according to Djilas, was coined by Stalin himself and given as part of the title of the new publication that attended the formation of the Cominform in 1947. Stalin wanted us constantly repeating the fact that the Cominform journal for "A People's Democracy" said such and such. Similarly, organizations in various parts of the world which seek to emulate and institute that manner of regime have taken to calling themselves "liberation movements."

Now here is the problem.

For some time, the Secretary of State, who is a distinguished and capable American statesman, in referring to the parties to the dispute in Rhodesia, has spoken of "the Patriotic Front," on the one hand, and "the Salisbury group," on the other. I am quoting from notes of a public presentation in which he spoke about "the Patriotic Front and the Salisbury group."

Now, "the Patriotic Front" is made up of forces supplied by and backed by the totalitarian powers, the Soviet Union and China. One from the east and one from the west; one based on Mozambique, and one based in Zambia.

The "Patriotic Front" represents the armed component of totalitarianism, a philosophy which they openly espouse. They are elements of Soviet-Chinese power in that part of the world.

Who would not wish to be with "the Patriotic Front"? What man whose heart is not stirred by the prospect of joining the Patriots? Who, by contrast, would wish to be with "the Salisbury group"? It sounds like a mining concession put together by investment bankers in London.

Do not suppose there are not consequences. Years ago Disraeli, in one of the novels, remarked that "Few ideas are correct ones, and none can ascertain which they are. But it is with words we govern men."

On July 17, in a State Department briefing, the spokesman for the Department of State made the following statement:

> There cannot be a peaceful settlement unless the liberation forces and the Salisbury parties are satisfied. What we are seeking is an agreement by all parties to fair elections under neutral transition arrangements. Should the patriotic front make a demand which is inconsistent with fair elections, we would oppose it just as we would reject demands by the Salisbury parties which would deny fair elections.

Here the Department of State spokesman is referring to the armed guerrillas representing the—whether they represent I will not say, but certainly they are armed by the Soviet Union, certainly they espouse a totalitarian doctrine. The Department of State spokesman said we want "fair elections under neutral transition arrangements."

Mr. President, the use of those terms, the choice of those words, it is fatal to the object of neutrality. I repeat, the choice of such words is fatal to the object of neutrality. When you have described one side as the liberation forces and the other side as a group in the capital, you have summoned all the imagery of political legitimacy of the 20th century and put it on the one side and denied it to another. That is not only fatal to neutrality but, I suggest, it is fatal to clear thinking about this phenomenon.

Mr. President, this is not a trivial matter. For some years, I have been arguing that the West's political culture is endangered by the fact the vocabulary and the symbols of political progress are being expropriated by the opponents of our values. Democracy, as we understand it, is under assault from totalitarians masquerading as democrats—just as democratic socialism is under assault from totalitarians masquerading as socialists in Eastern Europe. Nonetheless, we persist in dignifying these enemies of freedom with the terminology of freedom—such that we persistently misdescribe the political forces arrayed against us.

It is thus important that we convey the impression that we understand the difference between national liberation on the one hand, and the progressive brutalization of politics which is being carried on by the Soviets in the name of national liberation. And, so far as southern Africa is concerned, the administration's policy has become controversial because many feel that it is simply losing sight of these distinctions.

I observe, for example, that this Washington Post refers to the government in the capital, as the "biracial" government in Salisbury. Just think how much more attractive it is just to say "the biracial government" as against the uniracial government. This is my point. Partisan words are not neutral.

I shall have more to say on this question as the debate unfolds. For now, I would add but one thought. The self-determination of peoples as a principle for international settlements—the issue in Rhodesia—is surely an American notion, made prominent by Woodrow Wilson. The very idea of representative government as an issue of statecraft is almost exclusively the result of sustained American policy for over half a century. The charter of the United Nations, which holds that a liberal society is a necessary qualification for states to participate in international life, is overwhelmingly the result not merely of Anglo-American theorizing, but of American political power in the world at large.

We need not be ashamed to express our proprietary interest in the notions of self-determination and representative government. And it is essential to our own well-being in the world that other nations not be permitted to distort these concepts into a shape which would exclude our own democracy from the proper definition.

Mr. President, I would close simply by suggesting, if I could use a term of nautical imagery, that at the very least the Department's acceptance of this language is unseamanlike. It is prejudicial to good order and to semantic discipline. It reveals a carelessness that verges on negligence or, alternatively, it reveals a private agenda that needs to be further explored in public.

I hope the Secretary of State will accept my remarks as a friendly comment on a matter which ought to be one of uniform good practice in the conduct of American foreign policy.

I thank the Chair for this opportunity to address the Senate.

EXHIBIT 1

AMERICAN SHORTCOMINGS IN NEGOTIATING WITH COMMUNIST POWERS

(By Fred Charles Ikle)

(NOTE.—The views expressed in this paper are those of the author. They should not be interpreted as reflecting the views of the RAND Corporation.)

The ability of the United States to negotiate with Communist governments is of great importance, even though new agreements are likely to be few and far between. Negotiations will shape the scope and content of strategic arms limitations (if any explicit agreements materialize), they will influence the implementation of existing arms control treaties (such as the nuclear test ban and the non-proliferation treaty), and they will determine our long-term relationships with China and the Soviet Union as well as the possibility of an agreed settlement to end the fighting in Indochina.

The opportunities for American diplomacy are circumscribed to a large extent by the depth of conflict and the restricted common interest between the United States and the principal Communist powers, as well as by the manner in which Communist governments tend to conduct their diplomacy. Yet, some leeway is left for American diplomacy to manage negotiations more or less skillfully, even though the objectives and tactics of our opponents create enormous difficulties. Or to put it differently, the external constraints—inhibiting as they are—do not preclude that some changes in the American approach could bring better results.

The manner in which we negotiate with Communist powers is conditioned by many factors, such as the training and style of American officials, the way in which our government is organized (permitting many agencies to operate like independent fiefs), and the influence of our news media (with their narrow focus on today's events and high tolerance for inaccuracy). None of these internal factors can easily be changed at will, but some improvement might result from a better understanding of how they influence and constrain our conduct of negotiations.

EXCESSIVE ATTENTION TO EPHEMERAL RHETORIC

The resources of the United States Government are limited, in terms of intellectual energy and attention that senior officials can bring to bear on a subject, in terms of man-hours the bureaucracy can devote to an issue, and of course in terms of budget dollars. Hence, any suggestion that our government should do more of some particular activity ought to be coupled with the realization that another activity will have to be reduced. At least this is true at a time when there are strong pressures to curb the size of the federal budget and the number of government employees. Accordingly, it may be more constructive first to suggest possible savings before recommending new efforts. Savings in this context mean primarily time and energy expended by government officials.

A type of activity that could stand trimming in our conduct of negotiations is the effort devoted to the interpretation or analysis of the opponent's spoken and written word. As a target of our attention, the opponent's verbal output should be contrasted with underlying forces that motivate his government (as well as the forces that do motivate, or ought to motivate our own government). These more basic forces include the domestic interaction and competition between officials and their agencies, military estimates and calculations that influence top decisionmakers, and economic pressures and incentives. By contrast, the written and spoken word in negotiations with Communist countries consists largely of repetitious rhetoric.

It is perhaps necessary that our delegations at diplomatic conferences cable all this verbiage back to the State Department, and that the State Department, in turn, send copies of it to other government agencies. It seems less necessary, however, for dozens of people within the United States Government to pore over these words and to exchange memoranda back and forth as to what this or that sentence might mean and whether or not some subtle change in the opponent's position might be read between the lines of hour-long speeches.

Two factors might explain why the State Department and other agencies bestow so much tender care and scrutiny on all the written and spoken words that Communist countries tend to inject into negotiations. First, there is a widespread notion that Communist governments announce important changes in their negotiating position through subtle modifications in rhetoric or through slight nuances in the wording of their proposals. It is not clear why this notion has gained such currency. A study would show that changes in Soviet negotiating positions, particularly important ones, were announced to us almost always loudly and clearly and usually in quite short statements, while the undulations in wording and daily rhethoric were misleading as often—or perhaps more often—than serving as harbingers of new Communist positions.

For instance, in the Korean war, when the Communists were ready to begin armistice negotiations, Soviet Ambassador Jacob Malik clearly and simply said so in the United Nations, and there were no precursors to his announcement to be discovered between the lines of Soviet or North Korean propaganda statements. Indeed, prior to the Communist proposal for armistice talks, all the rhetoric and verbiage from China and North Korea pointed in the opposite direction: the North Koreans and Chinese kept demanding the total withdrawal of U.N. forces from all of Korea and the ouster of the South Korean Government. Our officials could learn nothing relevant to the armistice talks by reading Kim Il Sung's demands for "the complete liberation of all territory of our motherland" and the "complete destruction of the American aggressors and the remainder of the Syngman Rhee puppet forces."

It is true that Malik's initial armistice proposal left unclear whether other Communist demands (such as on Formosa and China's seat in the United Nations) were still linked to it. But this ambiguity was not resolved through some subtle exegesis of Communist rhetoric, but only through additional, rather clear-cut statements from the Communist side.

Again, after two years of these armistice talks at Panmunjom when the Communist side in the Korean war was finally ready to end the fighting, they said so unmistakably; whereas most of their prior rhetoric added little to our information about the Communist position. Similarly, when the Soviet Government was willing to finalize and sign the Austrian State Treaty, it communicated this change in its position to the Western powers and to the world, swiftly and clearly.

A second reason why such disproportionate attention is being paid to words and rhetoric may be the specialization of the State Department—the agency within our government that normally plays the key role in negotiations. What is the "commodity" that the State Department can dispose of? When this question was recently raised by a high ranking Albanian on a state visit in Washington, he was told: "Several government departments contribute to our foreign policy. Treasury and Commerce are concerned with the exchange of monies and goods with foreign countries, the Government Accounting Office sees to it that these monies and goods aren't pilfered (at least not by U.S. officials), Agriculture tries to dispose of surplus foods, and Defense is in charge of the deployment and operations of our military forces abroad." And the State Department? "State is in charge of the exchange of words with foreign governments."

It would, of course, be inaccurate to say all that is left for the State Department is the government-to-government traffic in words. The planning of foreign policy is predominantly (though not exclusively) the concern of the State Department. It is a fact, however, that the enormous volume of cables to and from the State Department deals largely with the verbal output of other governments, on-the-record and off-the-record remarks in conferences, and reports on foreign news media. Moreover, a large fraction of internal State Department memoranda are likewise devoted to the verbal output, particularly in negotiations with Communist countries.

One would like to see the results of a time-study as to how the State Department's staff allocates its working hours. What percentage is focussed on words as such? (E.g., on such questions as: Does the recent Soviet proposal show some flexibility? Did the Polish Foreign Minister by saying "cannot" instead of "will not", indicate that our proposal was unacceptable? Is last week's editorial in People's Daily milder in tone? By contrast, what percentage of working time is devoted to incentives and more basic forces (which may or may not be reflected in these words)? For instance: military pressures (have the troops on the Sino-Soviet border increased?); internal motivations and conflicts within the opponent's bureaucracy (is the Polish Army facing a budget cut and putting pressure on the Foreign Ministry?); and economic incentives (is China stepping up its purchases from Western Europe?).

An important qualification must be added here. The point about exaggerated attention to the rhetoric does not apply to negotiations between Communist governments nor to discussions within Communist governments. For these domains it does pay to look for slight changes in language and to search out the hidden meaning of Aesopian expressions. Furthermore, the fact that paying attention to words shows rapidly diminishing returns does not mean that one can afford entirely to ignore what Soviet or other Communist diplomats have to say. It goes without saying that our diplomats must listen carefully to their interlocutors and report the essence back to the State Department. Also, a few specialists within the United States Government might usefully search for signals and clues in the many words that keep pouring in during prolonged negotiations. But these tasks should not become the preoccupation of many people, and above all, they should not be mistaken as the essence in the management of negotiations.

PETTIFOGGERY

Related to the excessive attention to ephemeral rhetoric is the tendency to get lost in tactical detail. The way in which negotiations with Communist powers are managed within the American Government permits small tactical moves to develop a life of their own. If this drift goes on unchecked, small tactics will displace the very objective of the agreement that is under negotiation. A great many capable officials are then forced—or will force themselves—to labor intensively on these details like pettifogging lawyers.

An episode in the test ban conference illustrates how the concentration on tactical detail can divert the United States Government from the main purpose of negotiations. The test ban talks lasted about five years, over four of which were taken up by the question of an international inspection system for detecting underground tests (the Soviets wanted underground tests to be prohibited along with atmospheric ones). The characteristics and organization of this inspection system remained the stumbling block to agreement. While the Soviets had initially consented to accept a verification system based on scientific requirements, they objected to almost any form of neutral or United States inspection within their borders. In face of this resistance, the American negotiating tactics became more and more involved, with one tactical scheme chasing another until the American negotiators kept meeting each other at the back door, instead of confronting the Soviet opponent.

The story is an intricate one with many steps: (1) the United States took the position that an inspection system based on "scientific" requirements ought to be agreed on, in the hope that the Soviet Government would somehow be forced to accept what our scientists could prove to be scientifically correct. (How could Moscow be so uncouth as to disagree with scientific truth?) (2) Hence, the test ban negotiations were started with the Experts Talks, a conference that was to settle, in the spirit of an academic seminar between Eastern and Western scientists, what sort of an inspection system was "needed". (3) After these Experts Talks had produced an agreement on an inspection system, if only in sketchy outline, the U.S. Government discovered to its dismay that more recent technical data necessitated a revision of this system. (4) The Soviets, trying to minimize any inspection, refused to go along with this revision. (5) In the hope of convincing the Soviets, the American negotiators proposed a joint Russian-American research program to get at the bottom of this alleged dispute. (Did the American negotiators really expect to change the Soviet position through research findings, or were they trying to gain a better rhetorical argument?) (6) At last, after prolonged haggling, the Soviets agreed to some undefined "joint" research program. (7) But now, in the American opinion, this research program necessitated tests with actual nuclear weapons, to discover what kind of seismic signals they would generate. (8) At the same time, however, the United States still felt committed to continue the voluntary moratorium on nuclear weapons tests which had been in effect almost since the negotiations began. (9) Given its adherence to this moratorium, the U.S. Government therefore decided that it should obtain Soviet consent to the use of nuclear devices in the seismic research program, lest it be accused of breaking the moratorium. (It may be recalled that Khrushchev defiantly broke this moratorium a year later anyhow.) (10) At this juncture, the U.S. negotiators thought they might obtain such Soviet consent if they could only demonstrate to Soviet technicians that the weapons to be used were actually old ones. (11) Yet, showing to Soviet officials the weapons to be used for seismic tests would have violated the Atomic Energy Act, as long as the design of these weapons constituted classified information. (12) The solution to all this? The design of these nuclear devices was to be declassified.

In July 1960, the Committee of Principals, the high ranking American group in charge of the test ban negotiations, actually labored on the twelfth link of this chain.[1] Soon thereafter the Soviet Government lost all interest in this "joint" seismic research program and hence, the elaborate American scheme never came to fruition. This was probably fortunate, for the declassification of nuclear weapons—even if only long enough to be shown to Soviet representatives—might have reduced inhibitions against nuclear proliferation to other countries (while the results of the research program would scarcely have changed the Soviet position on inspection). Yet, to strengthen these inhibitions was precisely one of the principal purposes of the test ban treaty. Having established the principle of declassifying primitive weapons designs, other countries in other situation or international bodies might have exerted pressures to turn this principle into a more general practice. The power of such pressures is amply shown by the efforts to broaden the so-called peaceful uses of atomic energy and to promote the Plowshare program (the use of nuclear explosives for excavations).

In an earlier episode in the test ban negotiations, the United States Government likewise pursued subsidiary tactical aspects, at the expense of the more fundamental objective of curbing nuclear proliferation. And in this instance the consequences were far more serious. In 1958, when the test ban negotiations started, the United Kingdom was the only country, apart from the Soviet Union and the United States, that had tested nuclear weapons. At that time, the U.S. Government felt it was important that the United Kingdom participate in the test ban talks. Perhaps this conclusion was reached as if it was a matter of course, without scrutinizing the underlying assumptions. At any rate, the British Government took full advantage of this American desire to have them included by arguing they could not agree to stop testing unless they received American assistance for their weapons development so that they would not be left behind in nuclear technology. Secretary Dulles seemed to accept this argument and urged Congress, for this reason, to revise the Atomic Energy Act so as to permit nuclear weapons assistance to the United Kingdom.[2]

Thus it came to pass that the first contribution of the test ban negotiations was to enhance nuclear proliferation. This amendment in the Atomic Energy Act, favoring the British weapons development, became a spur to other countries, in particular France, to move ahead with their weapons development, while exacerbating our strained relations with De Gaulle. Ironically, once the Macmillan government in London had obtained this deal, it began to act as broker between the United States and the Soviet Union, quite often pressing the United States to offer concessions on the inspection issue.

More recently, the negotiations on the Non-Proliferation Treaty led to similar detours in favor of secondary tactical objectives. The United States favored some form of international inspection of peaceful atomic energy programs. But many of the countries without nuclear weapons, yet interested in atomic energy programs, argued such inspection would be discriminatory since it would not apply to countries like the Soviet Union or the United States. The United States Government then chose to counter this argument by offering to let its own non-military facilities be inspected. If the less developed, or other non-nuclear countries hold the United States to this offer, it may turn out that the International Atomic Energy Agency will use up a large portion of its inspection capability and budget for a pro forma inspection of American power and research reactors. From the point of view of discouraging proliferation, such inspection obviously would make no sense at all. The United States, as a nuclear weapons state, is allowed under the Non-Proliferation Treaty to have nuclear weapons facilities; hence it has no incentives whatsoever clandestinely to divert weapons materials from its power reactors to its weapons program.

SUCCUMBING TO SEMANTIC INFILTRATION

[Paradoxically, despite the fact that the State Department and other government agencies bestow so much care on the vast verbal output of Communist governments, we have been careless in adopting the language of our opponents and their definitions of conflict issues in many cases where this was clearly to our disadvantage. Or perhaps this is not so paradoxical. It might be precisely because our officials spend so much time on the opponent's rhetoric that they eventually use his words—first in quotation marks, later without.]

Communists have always cultivated the use of slogans, both for domestic purposes and for the purpose of what might be called a "semantic infiltration" of Western countries. That is to say, they try to make us use their labels of conflict issues, so that their definition of right and wrong will eventually prevail. One of Milovan Djilas' revelations about Stalin illustrates this point. In 1947, when the Soviet Union created the Cominform (a new organization to coordinate Communist Parties) Stalin himself thought up the name for its official publication: For a Lasting Peace—For a People's Democracy. Stalin's idea was that the Western press would have to repeat this slogan each time it quoted something from this journal.[3] Although Stalin had the right idea, his expectation in this case was disappointed, probably simply because the name was too long.

While our senior officials and our news media did not repeat "For a Lasting Peace—For a People's Democracy" whenever they discussed some Cominform statement, they now frequently use the label "wars of liberation" when referring to internal wars and campaigns of terrorism aimed against non-Communist governments (never for internal wars against Communist governments, mind you!). Since the early 1960's several Presidents, Secretaries of State, and other United States officials have used this expression. To be sure, always within quotation marks, but the news media tend to dispense with that encumbrance. What is remarkable is not this occasional usage, but that nobody seems to ponder about it.

The issue here is not the merits or mistakes of the current American war effort in Vietnam. Except in the eyes of a minute fringe in American society, the reasons against this war are not that the United States is fighting against liberation. The reasons have to do with the costs of the war, particularly the social repercussions at home, the deaths and destruction inflicted on noncombatants, or the shortcomings of the South Vietnamese Government. Those who oppose the current American involvement in Vietnam on these grounds—at least within the spectrum of opinion reflected in Congress—should find the label "war of liberation" as offensive as those who favor our current Vietnam policy. Indeed, the fact that American officials began to use this label in the early 1960's—with reference not just to Indochina but also to other internal wars or wars of terrorism—may have been indicative of the muddled thinking that found its way into our earlier planning of Vietnam policy. By simply adopting the opponent's term and sticking it into quotation marks, our officials might have avoided thinking through as to what kind of war they were actually getting into and how we should cope with it.

Let us look at another and perhaps even more insidious example of "semantic infiltration." Some ten years ago the State Department inexplicably decided to permit the use of the term "Socialist Countries" to refer to the East European countries under the control of Moscow. Gradually, this expression began to filter into government language and the news media. The official and non-official use of this expression has several deleterious effects:

(1) It is insulting to our Socialist friends in Austria, West Germany, England, Sweden, and elsewhere.

(2) It can be exploited by far-rightist opponents of our Socialist friends, to argue that Socialism and Soviet-controlled Communism are all the same, and to undercut efforts, such as by the more libertarian-minded Italian and French leftists, to rally Socialist forces against neo-Stalinist Communism.

(3) It helps the neo-Stalinists to pretend that their conflict with the United States and other Western countries is all about the choice between Socialism and Capitalism. This makes it harder for libertarian forces in Eastern Europe and within the Soviet Union to work towards a more open and freer political order without giving the appearance of wanting to restore "Capitalism" (by which the young generation in Eastern Europe and Russia usually envisage something out of Charles Dickens).

(4) Worst of all, it seems to sanction the Brezhnev Doctrine, implying that these countries under Moscow's imperial control are all distinguished by the one fact of being Socialist states and that any change in their status could mean only a "return to Capitalism." Where does this leave Yugoslavia, for instance? In the official U.S. Government vocabulary, is Yugoslavia one of the "Socialist Countries"? Hence, does the United States Government signal to Moscow that it would tolerate a 1968-style invasion by Soviet divisions? Or is Yugoslavia not "Socialist"?

Other forms of "semantic infiltration" could be cited, such as President Eisenhower's unfortunate slip of agreeing with Khrushchev that West Berlin's situation was "abnormal." This was later properly corrected by the Eisenhower Administration, by making it clear that what was abnormal about West Berlin was not its free parliamentary institutions and its open links with the West, but the fact that the political order in the area surrounding it was such that these arrangements should be considered threatening.

TREATING SOVIET EVALUATIONS AS IMMUTABLE

Our government, by spending less time pursuing small technicalities and analyzing the flow of words, might be able to devote more energy to the essential aspects of negotiation. On many issues, a strong effort is required to modify the opponent's position so as to reach an acceptable agreement. This must be done not so much through clever tactical tricks, but through a sustained policy of inducements and pressures.

Nearly all agreements between the United States and the Soviet Union were preceded by long negotiations: The Austrian State Treaty was under negotiation for ten years, the nuclear test ban for five to eight years depending on how one counts the beginning, the civil aviation agreement and the consular convention were the subject of intermittent negotiation for ten years, and a simple matter like the hot-line took more than a year to settle if one counts the time from the first U.S. proposal. (The technical talks implementing the hot-line, once the Soviets had agreed in principle, were smooth and swift.) Similarly, the negotiations with North Korea and Communist China to end the Korean war lasted for nearly two years.

During these protracted periods of bargaining, the positions on both sides changed—in many cases quite substantially. After all, one of the most essential aspects of negotiation is the lack of a firm scale for measuring gains and losses. The dividing line between a gain and a loss is not given by Nature, but is the result of partly explicit and partly intuitive evaluations within government bureaucracies. And these evaluations are themselves influenced by the bargaining process. (Changes of evaluations within a government should not be confused with the granting of a concession, although for the opponent they might have the same effect: If a government grants a concession, it decides to reduce its initial position in order to render it more acceptable to the opponent; but if a government undergoes a re-evaluation of alternative outcomes in a negotiation, it changes its views as to what arrangements are good or bad and how the pluses and minuses ought to be weighted in order to draw the balance.)

This fundamental feature of negotiation has never been adequately recognized by our government. All too frequently, the positions of Communist powers are viewed as immutable. During the formulation of the United States negotiating position within the State Department and in interagency groups in Washington, it happens often that a possible American proposal or a Western demand is voted down as being "unacceptable" to the Communist side. But by classifying certain proposals as "unacceptable" to the opponent, our negotiators and policy-planners in fact make them so. Since the positions of Communist governments, much as our own, tend to change only gradually under the influence of negotiation, our abstaining from "unacceptable" demands denies us a possibility of modifying a Communist position.

The Austrian State Treaty is a good example. Here, the United States and its Western allies remained clearly committed to a free Austria and kept pressing the Soviet Union with "unacceptable" proposals. Finally, in 1955, the Russians realized that it would also be to their advantage to end the partition and occupation of Austria. Similarly, a partial test ban (i.e. excluding underground tests) seemed unacceptable to the Soviet Government throughout most of the test ban negotiations. Therefore, our negotiators advanced the proposal for a partial ban only from time to time and almost with a feeling of hesitation. But after the Cuban missile crisis, when the inspection arrangements for underground tests still were deadlocked in disagreements, Khrushchev realized that a test ban confined to atmospheric and outer space tests would have advantages from the Soviet viewpoint as well. Thus, one of the principal postwar disarmament agreements was realized on the basis of what part of American officialdom classified as a proposal "unacceptable" to the Soviet Government.

During Stalin's Berlin blockade in 1948–49, the Western powers tried for many months to repurchase their rights of access (that they had obtained in 1945) by offering a new concession. The Western powers volunteered to compromise on the currency (the new West German mark) that they had planned to use in their sectors of Berlin From the outset, they assumed that Stalin had to be bought off to make him lift the blockade. Even after the airlift had been proven most successful and West Berlin's morale brilliantly withstood Soviet pressures, the Western powers still could not agree to inform Stalin that they would retain full control over the currency in their sectors of Berlin. Western negotiators argued that this would be "unacceptable" to the Soviet Government. A couple of months later, Stalin accepted the "unacceptable" and the Berlin blockade thus came to an end. If, on the other hand, the Western powers had not been saved from their own mistake and had bought off Stalin by giving the Soviets some control over West Berlin's currency, this very compromise would probably have led to new conflicts in no time. How could West Berlin's independence have survived Soviet control over its currency?

Additional instances could be found of Communist governments changing their position only after prolonged negotiation. Yet, these cases might be more numerous had the U.S. Government pursued some good causes with greater perseverance and conviction. We will never know what agreements could have been obtained had we tried harder. The point here is not that we should brusquely confront the Soviet and other Communist governments with all kinds of far-reaching demands. What is needed is that on essential issues we pursue a sustained policy of inducements and pressures to gradually change their position, even if this seems quite unpromising initially.

MISJUDGING CHANGES IN OUR OWN VALUES

Our own evaluations also change under the impact of prolonged negotiation. In many cases, these revisions did not simply lead to Communist gains but actually turned out to be in the American interest, too.

During the prolonged negotiations on the Austrian State Treaty, the United States Government was reluctant to have Austria committed to a permanently neutral status. Yet, today this outcome seems to accord fully with American and NATO interests. Likewise, in the 1950's, the U.S. Government was initially reluctant to develop cultural exchanges and to let trade with Communist countries expand. Today, most American officials would view non-strategic trade and genuinely bilateral cultural exchanges as being to our advantage. Similarly, limitations on nuclear weapons, such as the test ban and nuclear free zones, became only gradually acceptable within the U.S. Government. Today, these limitations are largely viewed with favor, or at least not found to be harmful, in the Defense as well as in the State Department.

It is essential, however, to distinguish two types of shifts in our own evaluations. On the one hand, there are those reevaluations where we have come to see an issue in a different light so that we can accommodate some of the Communist demands without impairing our national interests or those of our allies. On the other hand, American (and more generally Western) evaluations can erode in such a way that Communist powers make long-term gains while we delude ourselves that nothing has changed. And some of these Communist gains in the past have been particularly undesirable in that they brought unhappiness to many people through an expansion of Stalinist repression or in that they increased the dangers of war. (Naturally, these two types of changing evaluations represent a range where various outcomes may fall in between.)

Since this distinction is so important, it seems worthwhile to analyze a few cases from hindsight so as to appraise whether they represent a useful reevaluation of U.S. objectives that facilitated agreement with a Communist power, or whether they represent an erosion of our evaluations that concealed a genuine deterioration in our position. The examples of the test ban and the Austrian State Treaty serve to elucidate the former.

In the mid-1950's, senior U.S. officials believed that arms control agreements restricting nuclear weapons, such as the test ban, would reduce the deterrent inherent in American nuclear superiority, perhaps by hobbling the future development of American nuclear weapons technology while permitting the Soviet Union to move ahead, perhaps by leading to political pressures against American nuclear weapons overseas. Today, these fears do not appear to have been well-founded.

The recent gains in Soviet strategic capability—judging from Congressional testimony—must be primarily attributed to strong Soviet efforts in expanding their delivery capability, not to restrictions on the American development of nuclear weapons technology that could be attributed to the test ban.[4] As to political pressures against American nuclear weapons, the fears of some American officials in the 1950's also have not been borne out. Public concern about nuclear weapons is lessened today, unjustified as this seems. Indeed, some of this public tolerance or apathy (however one looks at it) may be precisely the result of the test ban. That is to say, if it had been Khrushchev's aim in the late 1950's to reduce the effectiveness of the American nuclear deterrent—against attacks on American allies, for instance—his promoting the test ban would have been counter-productive. What American officials feared in the late 1950's was that public pressures against nuclear weapons could restrict the effectiveness of the American deterrent, at least to the extent that it was based on (or thought to be based on) an overseas deployment of nuclear weapons. But as far as can be judged today, had Khrushchev's insistence not led to the nuclear test ban, such limitations on nuclear weapons might have become more, rather than less, widespread.

Another reevaluation of a negotiating position occurred within the U.S. Government regarding the above-mentioned issue of Austria's neutrality. One has to consider the historical background against which the American position on Austria had to evolve. The early 1950's, we must remember, were under the shadow of the Communist takeover of Czechoslovakia in 1948 and the North Korean attack on South Korea in 1950.

Czechoslovakia had never been "signed over" to Soviet control by the Western allies

[4] It has been argued that the Soviet Union might have gained an advantage by suddenly breaking, with its big test series in 1961, the three-year-old moratorium on nuclear tests (including underground). But this is quite another matter. Under the current test ban treaty, a sudden resumption of atmospheric tests should not give the Soviet Union a major lead, provided the Atomic Energy Commission maintains its research and development program in accordance with the promises given to the Senate when the test ban treaty came up for ratification. The 1961 experience, though, is sobering in connection with the suggestion for a moratorium on MIRV tests.

at the end of World War II, neither at Yalta, nor in Churchill's famous-infamous percentage deal, nor at Potsdam. Czechoslovakia, as seen from Washington and London, was meant to remain "neutral" between the Soviet Union and the Western powers, or, as it was put in those days by the Czech President Benes, it was to become a "bridge between East and West." American forces had liberated part of Czechoslovakia from Nazi occupation—much like in Austria—and for two years a parliamentary and relatively independent government ruled in Prague, wit the Communists in a minority.

Then, on top of the Communist takeover of Czechoslovakia came Korea. Both Soviet and American troops had been withdrawn from Korea, yet the full scale aggression occurred only one year after the last American forces had left the country. Small wonder, therefore, that American officials were reluctant to deny Austria the possibility of protection through an alliance with the West. Anyone could see that, once the Western forces were withdrawn, Austria would be as encircled by Communist territory as Czechoslovakia was in 1948.

Yet, with the benefit of hindsight it can be said that our acceptance of Austria's neutrality was a risk well worth taking. The critical difference between Czechoslovakia and Austria lies precisely in the manner in which the Western powers permitted their evaluations to shift. In Czechoslovakia, the Western powers tolerated a continuing reduction in their influence during 1946 and 1947 and did nothing to discourage the Soviet Union from preparing a takeover. In Austria, the Western powers insisted from the outset that they wanted to have troops in Vienna as long as the occupation lasted, and in their diplomacy continually kept the expectation alive that Austria should become fully independent. When this effort was at last crowned with success in 1955, the United States did not write off Austria as Czechoslovakia was written off by the West after American and Soviet forces had liberated that country in 1945.

Thus we can see that on some issues (such as restrictions on nuclear weapons and Austria's neutrality) the reevaluations that took place within the United States Government turned out to be in the national interests. On other issues, however, our shifting evaluations have camouflaged serious deteriorations in the relationship between the United States and Communist powers.

One such issue is the transition from colonialism to the Brezhnev Doctrine. Since World War II, the Western colonial powers have divested themselves of their colonies at a rapid pace. In the 1950's and 1960's, this divestiture was often a painful process, with the United States frequently getting caught in the sequel through its alliances, as well as for other reasons. At the same time, the Soviet Union posed as the champion of anticolonialism with considerable success.

In the 1950's, American policymakers were looking forward to the day when most Western colonies would be independent, expecting that the pressures against the Soviet version of colonialism would then mount, both internally and externally. Ten to fifteen years later, the colonies of Western powers have indeed shrunk to a few remnants; but Soviet colonialism and imperialism, while subject to internal stresses, has escaped sustained external criticism, let alone more serious pressures from without.

The Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia made it clear to most nations, at least temporarily, where the world's last big empire was being ruled from. But very quickly thereafter, American diplomacy fell back into its defensive stance. Something happened to the evaluation of colonialism and imperialism within the United States Government. The calibration by some of our own officials of past and present trends shifted, so that what our allies relinquished (partly with American prodding) is not being credited to the West, while what the Soviets captured or recaptured by using overwhelming force is being assigned to them as if it was theirs through Natural Right.

Thus, after we encouraged France to give independence to Tunisia, Morocco, Algeria, and her other African colonies, after we supported the British in granting full independence to their colonies in Africa (some of which became ruled by Marxist governments), and after we did not intervene in Libya despite the coup that led to a proleftist government, we still feel embarrassed that one of our allies, Portugal, is holding on to her African colonies. This is as if the Soviet Union, having permitted Poland, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Rumania, and Bulgaria all to choose their own road to independent forms of Socialism or Capitalism, still felt embarassed because it continued to exercise control over Outer Mongolia. (For this comparison it is worth recalling that while the Russians expelled Nazi Germany from Poland, Rumania, and parts of Czechoslovakia, the British forces expelled Fascist Italy from Libya, which until then had been an Italian colony.)

The agonizing prolongation of the war in Indochina and mistakes of our past policy on Vietnam, of course, contribute to such reevaluations on the part of American officials that blur and distort the historical record. The fact that the United States Government, or at least a major part of American officialdom, lost sight of the transition from Western colonialism to the new imperialism of the Brezhnev Doctrine naturally tends to produce similar misperceptions among public opinion in the United States and abroad—only more so and with a far greater neglect of historical facts.

More specifically, this distortion and false reevaluation of past and present trends often takes the following form: Some American officials, deeply (and justifiably) concerned about the problems in Vietnam, tend to equate American foreign policy in what they call "our sphere of interest," on the one hand, with Soviet (or Chinese) foreign policy in areas that they allocate to the Soviet (or Chinese) "sphere of interest," on the other. The rules by which these spheres are to be carved up are somewhat unclear: geographic contiguity seems to impress people (nonetheless Iran and Turkey are usually not—or not yet—allocated to the Soviet sphere). All of Indochina is clearly assigned to the North Vietnamese Chinese, or Soviet sphere of interest, or all three. According to these Americans, it seems most natural, and in some sense "just," that the Soviet Union should help North Vietnam in fighting the American effort to support South Vietnam against North Vietnamese encroachments and attacks: Not because an ally of one-half of a country is always justified in helping his side to take over the other half—for that would mean that the United States would be justified in helping South Vietnam to take over North Vietnam or in helping West Germany in trying to take over East Germany.

Valid reasons against the American effort to support the South Vietnamese government might be that it is so terribly costly to us, destructive, and uncertain of success. But for those Americans who want to blur the differences between Soviet and American foreign policy, these weighty reasons are not enough. They argue, we should never have become involved in South Vietnam "because it is not in our sphere of interest." They draw a parallel between Khrushchev's attempt to put missiles into Cuba and the American effort to support South Vietnam, concluding that as Khrushchev was forced to pull his missiles out of "our sphere," so we should pull our forces out of "their sphere." They argue that Latin America is "our part" of the world, exactly in the same way that Eastern Europe is Russia's part of the world or Indochina is the North Vietnamese part of the world.

Given that this view has gained considerable currency in the United States, it may be useful to make plain what it would in fact mean if Latin America were in the United States' part of the world in the same way that Eastern Europe is in the Soviet part of the world, and if the outcome of the Cuban missile crisis was applied—with "spheres of interest" reversed—to South Vietnam.

Leonid Brezhnev, in a speech on November 12, 1968, regarding the Soviet role in Czechoslovakia, explained the rules for Soviet foreign policy as follows:

". . . when the internal and external forces hostile to socialism seek to revert the development of any socialist country toward the restoration of the capitalist order, when a threat to the cause of socialism in that country, a threat to the security of the socialist community as a whole, emerges, this is no longer only a problem of the people of that country but also a common problem, concern for all socialist states."

A translation of this official guideline for Soviet foreign policy into what would be a mirror image of the rules for American policy in "our part of the world," reads as follows:

". . . when the internal and external forces hostile to Capitalism (or parliamentary government) seek to divert the development of any non-Communist country toward the installation of the Communist order, when a threat to the cause of Capitalism (or parliamentary government) in that country, a threat to the security of the non-Communist community as a whole, emerges, this is no longer only a problem of the people of that country but also a common problem, concern for all non-Communist states."

Applied to Cuba, this would mean, not the widely praised outcome of the missile crisis, but the widely attacked Bay of Pigs policy carried out with a vengeance. And applied to South Vietnam, where "internal and external forces hostile to Capitalism seek to divert the development of a non-Communist country toward the restoration (or in this case, rather "installation") of the Communist order" this rule would, of course, support American intervention.

A Pravda article (September 26, 1968) shortly after the invasion of Czechoslovakia argued:

. . . the antisocialist forces in Czechoslovakia, through their talk about the right of nations to self-determination, in essence were camouflaging the demands for so-called neutrality and for the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic's withdrawal from the socialist community.

Translated into the spheres of interest language and applied to Cuba, this would read:

. . . the Communist forces in Cuba, through their talk about the right of nations to self-determination, in essence were camouflaging the demands for so-called neutrality and for Cuba's withdrawal from the non-Communist community.

The Pravda article then explains the correct policy to be taken in this case:

The fraternal Communist parties of the Socialist countries took measures over a long period with the maximum restraint and patience in order to help the Czechoslovak people to suppress the offensive of anti-Socialist forces in Czechoslovakia by political means. And it was only after they had exhausted all these measures that they began the entry of the armed forces.

Again applied to Cuba, this would mean after the United States had "exhausted all these measures" that it "began the entry of the armed forces."

However, some Americans should be old enough to recall that this was not the outcome agreed to between Khrushchev and President Kennedy in settling the Cuban missile crisis. On the contrary, President Kennedy, in replying to Khrushchev's famous letter of October 26, 1962, offered "to give assurances against an invasion of Cuba," adding "I am confident that other nations of the Western Hemisphere would be prepared to do likewise."

In the spheres of interest imagery of some American spokesmen, a transposition of the Cuban missile crisis and its settlement onto Vietnam would look as follows: The United States puts nuclear missiles into South Vietnam. An acute crisis ensues between the United States and the Soviet Union and China. The crisis is settled by the American President withdrawing the nuclear missiles from South Vietnam in exchange for which the Soviet Union and China agree "to give assurances against an invasion of South Vietnam," adding the implied promise of curbing their allies from invading South Vietnam by stating that they are "confident that other nations of Southeast Asia would be prepared to do likewise."

Fudging these fundamental differences will not help international reconciliation in the long run, it will merely reduce the pressures toward greater independence among Communist countries and make Soviet imperialism seem legitimate and accepted.[5] Many American officials ably expound the urgency of discovering and cultivating common interests in negotiations with Communist powers and of healing the fissures of conflict. This is all to the good. Yet, successful long-term bargaining requires not only flexibility but also perseverance, not only conciliation but also counteroffensives, not only understanding for the opponent's fears but also understanding of his bad sides. American negotiators are great conciliators in working with allies (far better than Communist negotiators), but they sometimes lack perseverance in pursuing their cause against a hostile environment. The world is not so kind to us that we are likely to succeed where we lack the will to win. The difference between American behavior in "our sphere of interest" and the Brezhnev Doctrine must not be lost.

[5] Some American officials shrink back from confronting the Soviet Government with its imperialist record for fear that this would be "provocative." Indeed, Soviet spokesmen react vehemently against Western efforts to set the record on colonialism straight. Some years ago, I argued that Western diplomats, in defending themselves against Soviet charges of colonialism, did not frequently enough elaborate on the Soviet manifestations of imperialism and colonialism (How Nations Negotiate [New York: Harper & Row, 1964], pp. 240–241). A Soviet writer who appears to be associated with the Moscow Institute for International Relations (which is affiliated with the Soviet Foreign Ministry) became quite excited about my two pages. He argued that it was "unimportant to me, that the raising of these questions has a clearly provocative character and does not in any extent correspond to the actual situation either in Soviet Central Asian Republics or in Socialist Countries in Eastern Europe" (R. A. Tuzmukhamedov, Otvet Klevetnikam . . . [A Reply to Slanderers: The Self-Determination of the People's of Central Asia and International Law], Moscow, 1969, p. 14). I had written these pages before official Soviet justifications of the 1968 invasion of Czechoslovakia made the fact of Soviet imperialism so loud and clear. It is precisely because of their factual content that "the raising of these questions" touches a raw nerve among those who have to defend Soviet foreign policy.

WHAT CAN BE DONE?

Improvements in the operations of the United States Government cannot be realized unless they are designed to take account of the incentives and constraints that govern the interaction among the government's branches and agencies as well as among the officials within them. This is true in the national security area as much as in domestic policy areas. Thus, to change the conduct of negotiations with Communist countries one would have to modify such factors as the bargaining process between the State and Defense Departments, career considerations of Foregin Service Officers, and the impact of news media on foreign policy planning.

Even a seemingly simple change, such as reduction or refocussing of the State Department's cable traffic (for instance, to shift away from the emphasis on the opponent's rhetoric) cannot be instituted easily. That is to say, if the Secretary of State desired such a change, he could not simply request it one morning and expect it to last without modifying a number of other practices. Foreign Service Officers expect to get rated, in part, on the basis of their reporting, and might fear that silence would not be rewarded even if there is nothing important to report.

During the formulation of a negotiating position, a certain amount of bargaining among departments and agencies is common within our government; (except during fast-moving crises, such as the Cuban missile crisis, when the bureaucracy may be largely left out of the decision process). The exigencies of this internal bargaining sharply limit the tactics that our negotiators can use externally. As seen from the State Department, they constitute a strong reason against making certain demands that might remain unacceptable to the opponent, or against confronting the opponent with counter-demands that are to be dropped in exchange for the dropping of his demands. It is feared that once such demands had been raised by our negotiators, other government agencies would insist that the demands be maintained even after they no longer serve their purpose. That is to say, to avoid being hemmed in by vetoes from other government agencies, our negotiators sometimes feel they must eschew a bargaining strategy that might pay off against a foreign government.

A promising approach to improve our management of negotiations is to raise the level of discourse in which interagency coordination is being conducted. On the one hand, our officials should no longer feel free to object to an American negotiating position simply by arguing that it would be "unacceptable" to the opponent. And little weight should be given to someone's forecast as to what a Communist opponent would demand or accept, if this forecast is based solely on an exegesis of the opponent's rhetoric without an analysis of his military, economic and political strength.

On the other hand, nobody should get away with the argument that we have to hold on to some bargaining position simply because we have taken that position some years ago. Nor should the State Department or the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency have to put up with the argument from the military side of our government, that we must not negotiate about the discontinuance of some military activity simply because that activity is "vital." If there is any meaning to the importance of such activities, there has to be a price at which it is worthwhile for the United States to give them up. In our policy-making process, the concept "vital" without a price tag should be ruled out of order as sheer metaphysics.

Furthermore, in the policy-making process within our government we must maintain clarity about the ground rules of international conduct, and distinguish desirable from actual constraints on the opponent's behavior. Just because we might think in terms of spheres of interest, for instance, does not mean that our Communist opponents will have to act accordingly.

Our news media are, of course, an important source of domestic opinion that our negotiators have to consider. But sometimes our senior officials subconsciously slip into the tendency to bargain with our news media instead of with the opponent. For instance, if our news media have been arguing that a certain concession by us (such as the cessation of the bombing of North Vietnam) would bring an agreement, our policy-makers should not feel cheated if this does not turn out to be true. Even if the news media sometimes act as if they were the opponent's spokesman, we should not blame the opponent for ignoring the script of our news media.

SPECIAL ORDER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

SENATE RESOLUTION 525—SUBMISSION OF A RESOLUTION OF DISAPPROVAL OF THE DEFERRAL OF CONSTRUCTION OF THE GARRISON DIVERSION IRRIGATION PROJECT IN NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. YOUNG (for himself and Mr. BURDICK) submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on the Budget, and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, jointly, pursuant to order of January 30, 1975:

S. RES. 525

Resolved, That the Senate disapproves the proposed deferral of budget authority (deferral numbered D78–63) for the Garrison Diversion Unit, Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program, Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, as set forth in the message of May 12, 1978 which was transmitted to the Congress by the President under section 1013 of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I submit for myself and my colleague, Senator BURDICK, a resolution to disapprove the proposed deferral of $17.7 million appropriated to the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of Interior last year to continue the construction of the Garrison Diverison Irrigation Project in North Dakota.

If the administration's proposed deferral of the funds previously appropriated for this project is allowed to stand, it would mean that there would be no construction funds available and that work on this project would come to a complete halt. This is a project which North Dakotans started to work on before I was born and have been working toward since statehood. The project was first authorized as a part of the Pick-Sloan plan for flood control and irrigation in the Flood Control Act of 1944 at 1 million acres. It was reauthorized in 1965, providing for 250,000 acres for irrigation and water for many cities.

To date, the Federal Government has spent in excess of $170 million on the Garrison diversion project. If this project were discontinued, as proposed by the Interior Department, it would cost, according to their own estimates, another $93 million to restore the environment to its condition prior to construction of the project. In addition, the State of North Dakota, with the 500,000 acres of land it gave up for the project plus the millions of dollars it has spent directly, has an investment almost equal to the Federal Government.

If the Interior Department should succeed in having these funds deferred as they requested, there would be no more construction funds and they would thus obtain their objective of killing this project entirely. This is an indirect and despicable means of destroying a project they seem to have disliked, even though it has been approved by seven Presidents of the United States since my time. Construction has now been underway for about 10 years. The appropriate and reasonable and understandable means for the Department of Interior to end this project would be to either ask the Congress to deauthorize it, or if they wanted a modified project to ask for a reauthorization.

Mr. President, it is the intention of the sponsors of this resolution, which is supported by the State of North Dakota, that if this resolution is approved, thus leaving the $17.7 million available for the construction of this authorized diversion project, this money could be spent on that part of the project where the return flows were only to the Missouri River and tributaries basin. Thus, this would be in complete compliance with the recommendations of the International Joint Commission which studied this project for nearly 2 years. The IJC was established years ago to resolve water boundary differences between Canada and the United States.

I yield to my distinguished colleague from North Dakota.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK).

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, the record should be clear as to the meaning of the resolution. If the Senate should disapprove the proposed deferral, there should be no question that the Senate intends that the funds made available by the approval of this resolution shall be used for construction of the Garrison Diversion Unit features which would return water only to the Missouri River and Tributaries Basin.

In other words, the funds made available will be used only for those parts of the project which do not affect Canadian waters—but the funds should be used.

It is possible, of course, to complete many of the works necessary for this project without harm to Canada. Secretary Andrus stated unequivocally at the hearings held by the Public Works Appropriations Subcommittee that portions of the Garrison Diversion project could be built without creating conflict with Canada.

When Secretary Andrus appeared before the Committee on March 1, 1978, I stated, "I want the record to be straight here. There are portions of the project that still can be consistent with Canada's views." Secretary Andrus answered, "That is correct."

I yield to my colleague from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

Under the previous order, the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN) is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, this is without prejudice to the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS)?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

COMMENDATION OF PRESIDENT CARTER

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. President, in recent days President Carter has experienced some obvious bad breaks. All of us in politics know how easily that can happen. Sometimes our own misjudgments contribute to the creating of bad breaks. Sometimes we are hampered by events over which we have little control.

In any event, as the first President of the post-Watergate, post-Vietnam era, President Carter has been subjected to an unusually rigid standard.

As the president of the Americans for Democratic Action from the spring of 1976 until June 17, 1978, it has been my special responsibility to hold whomever was President to a high and difficult standard of performance. The policies and strategies of the Carter administration have provided legitimate opportunities for what I trust has been tough-minded, constructive criticism. Nevertheless, having recently completed my service as the president of ADA, I think this is an appropriate time to take note that thus far, President Carter has avoided any catastrophic mistakes. During his first year and a half in office, there has been no Vietnam, no Bay of Pigs, no Watergate, and no American is engaged in battle anywhere in the world.

Furthermore, despite enormous political pressures to the contrary, President Carter stood up on the issue of international justice for Panama, he canceled an enormously expensive and unnecessary B–1 bomber, he has pursued an even-handed policy in the highly volatile Arab-Israeli dispute, he has stoutly pursued the course of self-determination and majority rule for Africa, he has opened the way for limited diplomatic representation between Washington and Havana and for Vietnam's participation in the United Nations, he has organized a careful reduction of American ground forces in South Korea, he has pressed for an agreement on strategic arms even while protesting Soviet behavior he found in violation of human and national rights, and now he is calling on us to remove a largely symbolic but self-defeating embargo against Turkey—an embargo which is clearly exacerbating relations involving Greece, Turkey, and Cyprus.

As a sometime critic of the Carter administration—I hope a criticism born of concern for the Nation—I nonetheless have supported the President on these initiatives he has taken to preserve international peace and to protect America's standing in the world. This, of course, is not to say that I approve every aspect of the Carter foreign policy, to say nothing of domestic concerns.

I am aware that words of commendation seldom are considered as newsworthy as are words of criticism. But these few words will at least be printed in the RECORD and will perhaps come to the attention of the President at what we all know is a difficult time for him and for the Nation.

I might add for whatever solace it may bring to the President and his associates that the great historians, Charles and Mary Beard, once observed:

> Sometimes it gets the darkest just before the stars come out.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

WORLD ECONOMIC CRISIS—DISCUSSIONS WITH BONN SUMMIT PARTICIPANTS

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I have requested this time to report on a visit which I made to the President of France just about 2 weeks ago, roughly a week before the Bonn Economic Summit. I have waited until today to report to the Senate on that visit, which I took in my capacity as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, in order to evaluate the results of the summit and especially the lessons that might be drawn from these results.

The international economic problems which compelled the attention of the seven heads of government at the Economic Summit held in Bonn on July 16 and 17 have been of major concern to me for more than a year. My feeling that the gravity of the dangers close at hand if concerted corrective action was not taken by the industrialized nations of the Western trading system—which includes Japan and other nations generally in the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) appreciably participating in this system—prompted me to formulate proposals which I believe can help materially to avoid the abyss of a new recession or even a depression.

In recent months I was able to discuss the problems and present my recommendations to President Carter, as well as to Chancellor Schmidt, Prime Minister Callaghan and Prime Minister Fukuda on their recent visits to the United States. Because of his brief stay and crowded schedule, President Giscard d'Estaing of France was unable to meet me when he was in the United States to address the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament. However, President Giscard subsequently confirmed to meet with me in Paris to discuss these questions. Accordingly, under the auspices of the Foreign Relations Committee, I traveled to Paris during the period of July 9 and 10 for the purpose of meeting the President of France to discuss matters requiring attention at the Economic Summit.

While in Paris, I also took occasion to have discussions with the U.S. Ambassador to France, Arthur Hartman, and with the U.S. Ambassador to the OECD, Herbert Salzman, as well as with leading journalists.

My purpose today is to report to the Senate on my meeting with President Giscard d'Estaing, and to present to the Senate my views of the results of the Bonn economic summit.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed a memorandum on the outcome of the Bonn economic summit, its final communique and the text of a proposal for a Growth Development Fund.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. My meeting with President Giscard d'Estaing took place in the Elysee Palace on Monday morning, July 10, 1978. I have known President Giscard personally for 20 years and have discussed political and economic ideas with him on occasion during all that time. Our meeting on July 10 was the first we had had since the important French parliamentary elections of last May.

In my judgment, those elections had great significance, not only for France but for all the democracies of the West. In the months leading up to the elections, it had been predicted widely in the press that they would be won by the Socialist-Communist coalition of the left and that President Giscard's position might be rendered untenable as a result.

But the French Parliamentary elections resulted in a surprise victory for substantial proportions in terms of seats in the Parliament. President Giscard d'Estaing's position was substantially strengthened by the outcome of the election, and particularly so by the fact that the biggest single gainers in terms of parliamentary representation were the "Giscardist" parties or the victorious government coalition. The neo-Gaullist party under the leadership of the mayor of Paris, Jacques Chirac, remains however the largest bloc within the government coalition. Following the election, the French Government, through Prime Minister Barre, has acted to "free-up" the French economy and to stimulate private investment which had remained stagnant during the months preceding the elections when the dark cloud of prospective broadscale nationalization advocated by the Socialist-Communist coalition loomed on the political horizon.

ECONOMIC CRISIS

My convérsation with President Giscard centered mainly on the international economic situation and the economic summit which took place in Bonn a week after our conversation. I outlined to the President my suggestions for a growth development fund which was to be financed by funds from the OPEC surpluses, the Japanese and German balance-of-payments surpluses, as well as contributions from the United States, France, Great Britain, and other OECD nations.

The purpose of the growth development fund would be to work with those less developed countries (LDC's) which wished to work with the fund for the purpose of accelerating multilateral foreign public and private investment to promote rational agricultural and industrial development and trade. This would lead to the expansion of markets that would be beneficial to all sides to stimulate and stabilize the world economy for at least the remainder of the 20th century.

The fund would leave the "UNCTAD idea" without challenge to it as a trade association, while permitting those nations which wished to move ahead free of the ideological stalemate which prevented the June 1976 Conference on International Economic Cooperation (CIEC) from coming to an agreement on a true "New World Economic Order" which was both nondiscriminatory and effective.

The door to participation in the growth development fund would be open to the U.S.S.R., the Peoples Republic of China, and the East European members of the COMECON to join in, as it was in 1948–49 respecting the Marshall Plan. This time hopefully some of the Communist nations might take up the option to participate. Fuller but still preliminary details of the proposed growth development fund were spelled out in a memorandum which I left with the heads I had talked with and a copy of that memorandum is appended to this report.

I discussed also, other aspects of the international economic scene with the President of France. I stressed the importance of France's influence in bringing about a successful conclusion of the multilateral trade negotiations (MIN) now in progress, and which are so vital to the continued expansion of world trade. Failure of the MIN negotiations could have the effect not only of deepening any vestige of the last world economic recession precipitated by the 1973–74 quadrupling of world oil prices—still lingering on in stagnation and inflation—but of triggering a dangerous new trend toward protectionism in world trade which could itself lead to a deeper recession than the last one, as well as to disruption of NATO and other such security alliances.

The perception in Europe of "recklessness" in the United States respecting the consumption of petroleum came up in the course of our discussions. In explaining U.S. policy in regard to reduction or stabilization of oil imports, I pointed out the deep attachment of the American people to the "family car" as an important element of personal freedom and mobility, and the American people's skepticism as to an energy crisis in view of the apparent glut of oil on the world market. I pointed out that President Carter also has the option of imposing import quotas and could conceivably use this option in view of continued congressional inaction on the administration's key element—price—of the administration's package of energy legislation and congressional opposition to the use of the oil import fee.

President Giscard reflected the view that the role now being played in foreign affairs by the Senate is not easily comprehended or appreciated in Europe. I described the Senate's present attitude generally as being "sectional" in the absence of an adequate perception so far of the world economic crisis. This has led to a certain emphasis on economic "self-interest", as manifested in the struggle between Senators from oil and gas States and those from States without such resources over national policy which spills over into international policy. I considered the Senate well able to take a broader view as its thinking comes abreast of the world's true economic danger.

Much of our discussion related to the need for cooperation and lateral support among the leaders and nations of the Western trading system, in view of our increasing interdependence and the ominous implications of the economic problems which could injure us all. I gathered from President Giscard d'Estaing in this regard, in particular, relations between France and the Federal Republic of Germany have been reestablished on a new basis and that he and Chancellor Schmidt had inaugurated a "new era" in French-German relations, which will develop to the benefit of all Western Europe and the wider Western trading system.

In concluding our discussion respecting the international economic situation, I thanked President Giscard d'Estaing for his views and expressed the belief that those ideas could find a reflection in the discussion and outcome of the impeding Bonn summit.

In our discussion regarding Africa, I feel that President Giscard d'Estaing viewed France's policy as being designed principally to protect democratic opportunities and free institutions in the former French colonies of Africa and not to interfere in indigenous national choices of government leaders or forms of government. A particular example of this policy was France's approval of the approach embodied in the Anglo-American plan respecting Rhodesia.

MIDDLE EAST

With respect to the Middle East, I urged that France take a new hand in Mideast peace. In this regard, I emphasized France's opportunity with Israel as coming precisely because of the previous pro-Arab tilt in France's policy since 1967 and the historic friendship between France and Israel based on France's centuries old tradition respecting the persecuted peoples of the world. I concluded that Europe questioned whether President Carter's aspiration for a comprehensive Mideast settlement could be realized at this time—though I felt he certainly would like it—that Europe looked rather for further agreement respecting the Sinai, with a statement of principles covering the West Bank and Gaza as an essential element at this time.

APPENDIX A: MEMORANDUM ON THE BONN ECONOMIC SUMMIT—1978

The Economic Summit was held in Bonn, West Germany on July 16 and 17, 1978. Prime Minister Trudeau of Canada, Chancellor Schmidt of the Federal Republic of Germany, President Giscard d'Estaing of France, Prime Minister Andreotti of Italy, Prime Minister Fukuda of Japan, Prime Minister Callaghan of the United Kingdom and President Carter of the United States participated in the discussions. In addition, Roy Jenkins, the President of the European Commission, attended the discussion of matters within the competence of the European Community.

The Economic Summit sought to reaffirm the resolve of the heads of state to a comprehensive and coordinated strategy covering economic growth, employment and inflation in the industrialized countries, international monetary policy, energy, and trade.

There was an agreement at the Summit on the need to create more jobs and fight inflation and to strengthen international trade, while reducing payments imbalances and achieving greater stability in the exchange markets. The participants acknowledged that they were dealing with long-term problems that would only yield to sustain efforts. As the final declaration stated, "The strategy is a coherent whole, whose parts are interdependent," to which each of the countries could make a contribution and, in turn, could benefit.

The final declaration of the Bonn Summit, which can be found in the Appendix B is an all encompassing document which seeks to provide guidance for the management of the world economy for the coming year.

While the primary focus of the Summit was on matters pertaining directly to the economic health of the industrialized countries, the heads of state also focused on issues tht were of particular interest to the developing countries, the so-called North-South issues.

The following objectives were agreed to by the participants with regard to development issues:

(1) An intensification of national development assistance programs in the energy field and the development of a coordinated effort to bring into use renewable energy technologies to help the developing countries.

(2) A suggestion that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (The World Bank) should explore ways in which its activities in the energy field can be made increasingly responsive to the needs of the developing countries and examine whether new approaches, particularly to financing hydro-carbon exploration, would be useful.

(3) A willingness to work even more closely with the developing countries in the Multilateral Trade Negotiations and a pledge to seek to ensure "a sound and balanced result," which would adequately take into account the needs of the developing countries.

(4) A willingness to increase cooperation in the field of foreign private investment flows between them and the developing countries and to intensify work on further agreements in the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD).

(5) A call for joint action between the developed and developing countries on the basis of a shared responsibility for the economic performance of the international system. In the trade area, the heads of state recognized the "requirement" to provide better access for the products of the developing countries to the markets of the developed countries. At the same time, they called upon the more advanced developing countries to open their markets to the exports of the industrialized countries.

(6) A pledge to provide financial assistance and other resources for the development of the developing countries. The heads of state indicated their support for providing soft loan funds of the World Bank and of three regional development banks to the poor developing countries while pledging their government's support to the replenishment of the International Development Association on a scale that would permit its lending to rise annually in real terms.

(7) With regard to the more advanced developing countries the heads of state of the industrialized countries renewed their pledge to support the replenishment of the multilateral development banks' resources and agreed to encourage governmental and private cofinancing of development projects with these banks.

(8) A call to the developing countries to cooperate with them in creating a good investment climate and adequate protection of foreign investment in order to let private foreign investment play its effective role in generating economic growth and in stimulating the transfer of technology.

(9) A reaffirmation of their commitment to continue actively the negotiations on the Common Fund, to conclude individual commodity agreements and to complete studies of various ways of stabilizing the export earnings of the developing countries.

Only Japan announced a concrete action with respect to increasing its level of aid, with a pledge "to double (its) official development assistance in three years". The step taken by the Government of Japan should be welcomed by the international community as a positive response aimed at not only turning its continuing large balance of payments surplus around but also at generating economic growth in the developing countries.

Furthermore, the failure of the COMECON countries (Soviet alliance in Eastern Europe) to take their proper part in providing financial assistance to the developing countries was noted by the Summit participants. It is imperative that the Eastern bloc countries be urged not only by the industrialized countries to undertake their responsibilities in this regard but by many of the developing countries, which so often demonstrate their political affinity with the COMECON countries.

The reaffirmation and support for continued foreign assistance to and cooperation with the development countries made at the Bonn Summit are important. Nonetheless, they can only be viewed as a tentative first step in dealing with the issues and problems facing the industrialized countries in their relations with the developing countries. Almost all of these actions, with the exception of the request to the World Bank to examine ways in which its activities in and with the developing countries can help in the energy field, focused on pledges by the individual countries unilaterally to meet certain economic targets. Very little in the form of international, cooperation other than coordination of policy was agreed upon. It would have been highly preferable had the Bonn Summit participants agreed to concerted action on the economic issues before the Summit as they had in undertaking a concerted multilateral program in the non-economic area of international terrorism.

On Wednesday, July 19, President Carter (aided by Henry Owen who had staffed the preliminary work for the Bonn Summit on the part of the U.S.) debriefed a bi-partisan group of Senators and Representatives on the results of the Summit. Based on my analysis of the President's statement, I believe that a far-reaching exchange of views on development issues took place at the Summit, notwithstanding that the Summit's primary focus seemed to have been on the development of coordinated economic action to deal with the internal problems dividing the industrialized countries. It is my understanding that the next Economic Summit, which will take place "at an appropriate time next year" (probably in Japan), will focus on the issue of economic growth and specifically on the relations between the industrialized countries and the developing world respecting accelerated economic developments and markets. During the intervening year the representatives of the participating countries will be reviewing the pledges made at the Bonn Summit in preparation for the next Summit, and the industrialized countries will have to take stock of the role that the industrialized world already has played in accelerating the development of the developing world and in what to do further. This is especially required as one analyzes the total capital flows—public foreign aid as well as private investment—from the North to the South and the transfer of technology and their adequacy to develop broader markets.

While the Growth Development Fund proposal which I have submitted was not officially before the Bonn Summit, it provided, I believe an impetus to the discussions at that Summit by the heads of state and could serve as a take-off point for further discussion in preparation for the next Summit. In this context, the Bonn Summit must be viewed as a first phase, which will be linked inextricably to next year's Summit by a close scrutiny of the decisions taken in Bonn, an in-depth evaluation of the development programs for the transfer of resources that are underway in all fora and very detailed preparatory work for the crucial decisions that must still be taken. The next Summit may come in time to head off a worsening of the world economic situation but the risks are increased by the year's delay.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Because the North-South issue is so vital, with views especially divergent between the industrialized and developing countries, it is critical that President Carter and the Bonn Economic Summit heads of state make clear at the earliest time that the focus of next year's Summit will be on development. This will permit adequate preparations, especially in the area of commitments of financial resources, and close consultation with the developing countries. A procedure should be developed currently to bring the representatives of appropriate developing countries into the preparatory process, and perhaps even, into the final deliberations.

2. I believe the Growth Development Fund proposal can serve as a basis for discussions. The chief constraint to such a fund that I deduced from my talks with the five heads of state was financial: a grave concern that their national budgets were already too strained. Consequently, I recommend that initial attention should be placed on the financial aspects of such an arrangement for productive investment in the developing countries. Particular attention should be paid to (a) suitable participation by the OPEC and industrialized countries in current account surplus; and (b) guarantees of investment, encouragement of private investment and joint ventures.

3. I recommend that future discussion about and justifications for foreign aid, whether bilateral or multilateral, must not be made alone in the context of the humanitarian duty and long-standing commitment of the donor countries to development. Rather we must closely link foreign aid and investment to energy, food and agri-business, markets, rationalization of world production and regional economic cooperation. If we are to beat back the attempts at erecting protectionist barriers to international trade both in the United States and in the other industrialized countries and in advanced developing countries, we must undertake a vigorous effort to demonstrate the benefits of increased economic growth in the developing countries to the industrialized countries, indeed the essentiality of such growth to the latter. Exports mean jobs as much as production for the domestic economy in the already industrialized countries.

4. I note particularly that the Heads of State instructed their "representatives to convene by the end of 1978 in order to review (the) declaration." This is a vital first step in maintaining the continuity between Economic Summits.

APPENDIX B

TEXT OF DECLARATION AT THE BONN SUMMIT

BONN, July 17.—Following is the text of a declaration issued today at the end of the two-day economic summit meeting. It is the official English version prepared and distributed by the West German Government.

The heads of state and Government of Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America met in Bonn on 16th and 17 July 1978. The European Community was represented by the president of the European Council and by the president of the European Commission for discussion of matters within the community's competence.

1. We agreed on a comprehensive strategy covering growth, employment and inflation, international monetary policy, energy, trade and other isues of particular interest to developing countries. We must create more jobs and fight inflation, strengthen international trading, reduce payments imbalances, and achieve greater stability in exchange markets. We are dealing with long-term problems, which will only yield to sustained efforts. This strategy is a coherent whole, whose parts are interdependent. To this strategy, each of our countries can contribute. From it, each can benefit.

GROWTH EMPLOYMENT AND INFLATION

2. We are concerned, above all, about worldwide unemployment because it has been at too high a level for many years, because it hits hardest at the most vulnerable sections of the population, because its economic cost is high and its human cost higher still. We will act, through measures to assure growth and develop needed skills, to increase employment. In doing this, we will build on the progress that has already been made in the fight against inflation and will seek new successes in that fight. But we need an improvement in growth where that can be achieved without rekindling inflation in order to reduce extremes of balance-of-payments surpluses and deficits. This will reduce destabilizing exchange rate movements.

Improved growth will help to reduce protectionist pressures. We need it also to encourage the flow of private investment, on which economic progress depends. We will seek to reduce impediments to private investment, both domestically and internationally. Better growth is needed to insure that the free world is able to develop to meet the expectations of the citizens and the aspirations of the developing countries.

3. A program of different actions by countries that face different conditions is needed to assure steady noninflationary growth. In countries whose balance-of-payments situation and inflation rate does not impose special restrictions, this requires a faster rise in domestic demand. In countries where rising prices and costs are creating strong pressures, this means taking new measures against inflation.

Canada reaffirmed its intention, within the limits permitted by the need to contain and reduce inflation, to achieve higher growth of employment and an increase in output of up to 5 percent.

As a contribution to avert the worldwide disturbances of economic equilibrium the German delegation has indicated that by the end of August it will propose to the legislative bodies additional and quantitatively substantial measures up to 1 percent of gross national product, designed to achieve a significant strengthening of demand and a higher rate of growth. The order of magnitude will take account of the absorptive capacity of the capital market and the need to avoid inflationary pressures.

The president of the French Republic has indicated that, while pursuing its policy of reduction of the rate of inflation, the French Government agrees, as a contribution to the common effort, to increase by an amount of about 0.5 percent of G.N.P. the deficit of the budget of the state for the year 1978.

The Italian Prime Minister has indicated that the Government undertakes to raise the rate of economic growth in 1979 by 1.5 percentage points with respect to 1978. It plans to achieve this goal by cutting public current expenditure while stimulating investment with the aim of increasing employment in a noninflationary context.

The Prime Minister of Japan has referred to the fact that his Government is striving for the attainment of the real growth target for fiscal year 1978, which is about 1.5 percentage points higher than the performance of the previous year, mainly through the expansion of domestic demand. He has further expressed his determination to achieve the said target by taking appropriate measures as necessary. In August or September he will determine whether additional measures are needed.

The United Kingdom, having achieved a major reduction in the rate of inflation and improvement in the balance of payments has recently given a fiscal stimulus equivalent to rather over 1 percent of G.N.P. The Government intends to continue the fight against inflation so as to improve still further the prospects for growth and employment.

The President of the United States stated that reducing inflation is essential to maintaining a healthy United States economic policy. He identified the major actions that have been taken and are being taken to counter inflation in the United States: tax cuts originally proposed for fiscal year 1979 have now been reduced by $10 billion. Government expenditure projects for 1978 and 1979 have been reduced. A very tight budget is being prepared for 1980. Steps are being taken to reduce the direct contribution by Government regulations or restrictions to rising costs and prices, and a voluntary program has been undertaken to achieve deceleration of wages and prices.

The meeting took note with satisfaction that the common approach of the European Community already agreed at Bremen would reinforce the effectiveness of this program.

ENERGY

4. In spite of some improvement, the present energy situation remains unsatisfactory. Much more needs to be done.

5. We are committed to reduce our dependence on imported oil.

6. We note that the European Community has already agreed at Bremen the following objectives for 1985: to reduce the community's dependence on imported energy to 50 percent, to limit net oil imports, and to reduce to 0.8 the ratio between the rate of increase in energy consumption and the rate of increase in gross domestic product.

7. Recognizing its particular repsonsibility in the energy field, the United States will reduce its dependence on imported oil. The United States will have in place by the end of the year a comprehensive policy framework within which this effort can be urgently carried forward. By year end, measures will be in effect that will result in oil import savings of approximately 2.5 million barrels per day by 1985. In order to achieve these goals, the United States will establish a strategic oil reserve of 1 billion barrels. It will increase coal production by two-thirds, it will maintain the ratio between growth in gross national product and growth in energy demand at or below 0.8 and its oil consumption will grow more slowly than energy consumption. The volume of oil imported in 1978 and 1979 should be less than that imported in 1977. In order to discourage excessive consumption of oil and to encourage the movement toward coal, the United States remains determined that the prices paid for oil in the United States shall be raised to the world level by the end of 1980.

8. We hope that the oil-exporting countries will continue to contribute to a stable world energy situation.

9. Looking to the longer term, our countries will review their national energy programs with a view to speeding them up. General energy targets can serve as useful measures of the progress achieved.

10. Private and public investment to produce energy and to use it more efficiently within the industrial world should be increased. This can contribute significantly to economic growth.

11. The further development of nuclear energy is indispensable, and the slippage in the execution of nuclear power programs must be reversed. To promote the peaceful use of nuclear energy and reduce the risk of nuclear proliferation, the nuclear-fuel cycle studies initiated at the London summit should be pursued. The President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada have expressed their firm intention to continue as reliable suppliers of nuclear fuel within the framework of effective safeguards. The President intends to use the full powers of his office to prevent any interruption of enriched uranium supply and to insure that existing agreements will be respected. The Prime Minister intends that there shall be no interruption of Canadian uranium supply on the basis of effective safeguards.

12. Coal should play an increasingly important role in the long term.

13. Joint or coordinated energy research and development should be carried out to hasten the development of new, including renewable, energy sources and the more efficient use of existing sources.

14. In energy development, the environment and human safety of the population must be safeguarded with greatest care.

15. To help developing countries, we will intensify our national development assistance programs in the energy field and we will develop a coordinated effort to bring into use renewable energy technologies and to elaborate the details within one year. We suggest that the O.E.C.D. will provide the medium for cooperation with other countries.

16. We stress the need for improvement and coordination of assistance for developing countries in the energy field. We suggest that the World Bank explore ways in which its activities in this field can be made increasingly responsive to the needs of the developing countries, and to examine whether new approaches, particularly to financing hydrocarbon exploration, would be useful.

TRADE

17. We reaffirm our determination to expand international trade, one of the driving forces for more sustained and balanced economic growth. Through our joint efforts we will maintain and strengthen the open international trading system. We appreciate and support the progress as set forth in the framework of understanding on the Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations made public in Geneva, July 13, 1978, even though within this framework of understanding some difficult and important issues remain unresolved.

The successful conclusion of these negotiations, the biggest yet held, would mean not just a major trade-liberalization program extending over the 1980's but the most important progress yet made in the GATT in relation to nontariff measures. Thus the GATT rules would be brought more closely into line with the requirements of the next decade—particularly in relation to safeguards—in ways which would avoid any weakening of the world trading system and be of benefit to all trading countries, developed and developing alike. A substantially higher degree of equity and discipline in the international trading system would be achieved by the creation of new mechanisms in many fields for consultation and dispute settlement. Uniform application of the GATT rules is vital and we shall move in that direction as soon as possible.

In all areas of the negotiations the summit countries look forward to working even more closely with the developing countries. We seek to insure for all participants a sound and balanced result, which adequately takes into account the needs of developing countries, for example, through special and differential treatment, and which brings about their greater participation in the benefits and obligations of the world trading system.

At last year's Downing Street summit we rejected a protectionist course for world trade. We agreed to give a new impetus to the Tokyo Round. Our negotiators have fulfilled that commitment. Today we charge them, in cooperation with the other participants, to resolve the outstanding issues and to conclude successfully the detailed negotiations by December 15, 1978.

18. We note with satisfaction the renewal of the pledge to maintain an open-market oriented economic system made by the O.E.C.D. Council of Ministers last month. Today's world economic problems cannot be solved by relapsing into open or concealed protectionism.

19. We welcome the statement or positive adjustment policy made by the O.E.C.D. ministers. There must be a readiness over time to accept and facilitate structural change. Measures to prevent such change perpetuate economic inefficiency, place the burden of structural change on trading partners and inhibit the integration of developing countries into the world economy. We are determined in our industrial, social, structural and regional policy initiatives to help sectors in difficulties, without interfering with international competition and trade flows.

20. We note the need for countries with large current account deficits to increase exports and for countries with large current account surpluses to facilitate increases in imports. In this context the United States is firmly committed to improve its export performance and is examining measures to this end. The Prime Minister of Japan has stated that he wishes to work for the increase of imports through the expansion of domestic demand and various efforts to facilitate imports. Furthermore, he has stated that in order to cope with the immediate situation of unusual surplus, the Government of Japan is taking a temporary and extraordinary step of calling for moderation in exports with the aim of keeping the total volume of Japan's exports for the fiscal year of 1978 at or below the level of fiscal 1977.

21. We underline our willingness to increase our cooperation in the field of foreign private investment flows among industrialized countries and between them and developing countries. We will intensify work for further agreements in the O.E.C.D. and elsewhere.

22. In the context of expanding world economic activity, we recognize the requirement for better access to our countries' markets for the products of the developing countries. At the same time we look to increasing readiness on the part of the more advanced developing countries to open their markets to imports.

23. Success in our efforts to strengthen our countries' economies will benefit the developing countries, and their economic progress will benefit us. This calls for joint action on the basis of shared responsibility.

24. In the years ahead the developing countries, particularly those most in need, can count on us for an increased flow of financial assistance and other resources for their development. The Prime Minister of Japan has stated that he will strive to double Japan's official development assistance in three years. We deeply regret the failure of the Comecon countries to take their due share in the financial assistance to developing countries and invite them once more to do so.

25. The poorer developing countries require increased concessional aid. We support the soft loan funds of the World Bank and the three regional development banks. We pledge our governments to support replenishment of the International Development Association on a scale that would permit its lending to rise annually in real terms.

26. As regards the more advanced developing countries, we renew our pledge to support replenishment of the multilateral development banks' resources, on the scale needed to meet the growing needs for loans on commercial terms. We will encourage governmental and private cofinancing of development projects with these banks.

The cooperation of the developing countries in creating a good investment climate and adequate protection for foreign investment is required if foreign private investment is to play its effective role in generating economic growth and in stimulating the transfer of technology.

We also refer to our efforts with respect to developing countries in the field of energy as outlined in paragraph 15 and 16.

27. We agreed to pursue actively the negotiations on a Common Fund to a successful conclusion and to continue our efforts to conclude individual commodity agreements and to complete studies of various ways of stabilizing export earnings.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY POLICY

28. The erratic fluctuations of the exchange markets in recent months have had a damaging effect on confidence, investment and growth throughout the world. Essentially, exchange rate stability can only be achieved by attacking the fundamental problems which have contributed to the present large balance-of-payments deficits and surpluses. Implementation of the policies described above in the framework of a concerted program will help to bring about a better pattern of world payments balances and lead to greater stability in international exchange markets. This stability will in turn improve confidence and the environment for sustained economic growth.

29. Although exchange rates need to respond to changes in underlying economic and financial conditions among nations, our monetary authorities will continue to intervene to the extent necessary to counter disorderly conditions in the exchange markets. They will maintain extensive consultation to enhance these efforts' effectiveness. We will support surveillance by the International Monetary Fund to promote effective functioning of the international monetary system.

30. The representatives of the European Community informed the meeting of the decision of the European Council at Bremen on 6–7 July to consider a scheme for a closer monetary cooperation. The meeting welcomed the report and noted that the community would keep the other participants informed.

CONCLUSION

31. It has been our combined purpose to attack the fundamental economic problems that our countries confront.

The measures on which we have agreed are mutually reinforcing. Their total effect should thus be more than the sum of their parts. We will now seek parliamentary and public support for these measures.

We cannot hope to achieve our purposes alone. We shall work closely together with other countries and within the appropriate international institutions; those among us whose countries are members of the European Community intend to make their efforts within this framework.

We have instructed our representatives to convene by the end of 1978 in order to review this declaration. We also intend to have a similar meeting among ourselves at an appropriate time next year.

APPENDIX C

PROPOSAL FOR CAPITAL FUND FOR PRODUCTIVE INVESTMENT IN THE DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Background: The present recycling of the OPEC financial surpluses has serious implications for the economic prosperity of the oil importing developing countries. While the recycling of these funds may have served the investment needs of the OPEC countries for the placement of their surpluses, the present system has failed to generate the macroeconomic policies in the oil importing developing countries needed to restore efficiently the equivalent purchasing power to these countries.

Objective: The oil importing developing countries require productive investment in order to cover their oil import deficits and to complement the aid and investment of the developed countries in stimulating the noninflationary growth and the expansion of broader markets for the goods and services which the international economy requires so urgently to deal with stagnation and inflation. Such targeted investments would stimulate economic growth in these countries and, most importantly, would expand demand for the exports of the industrialized countries. Such new markets would lead to higher levels of employment and domestic economic activity in the industrialized countries and would effectively counter the escalating demands of protectionist forces in the industrialized countries with respect to imports as well as investment abroad. This need for the stimulation of demand in the developing countries, in addition to sustaining non-inflationary growth levels in the industrialized countries, has been increasingly recognized by leading governmental as well as academic figures in many countries.

Funding and terms: To be effective and have leverage with recipient countries, such an LDC developmental fund should have large sums of money. The initial capitalization of the Fund (capital pool) should be on the order of $25 billion, with investments by the donors of $5 billion per year for an initial five-year period. Half of the funds ($2.5 billion per year) would be used for investment in the poorest countries that meet the criteria for IDA financing; with the other $2.5 billion being earmarked for the acceleration of the economies of the more advanced developing countries that are more credit-worthy, such as Mexico, Brazil, and some countries in Asia and Africa on a loan basis. The key point would be that the donor and the borrower countries operate under terms (including coordinated planning) which are capable of realizing the objectives of the Fund. Also, the Fund could give a priority to that element of development of the LDCs which represents energy exploration and alternative energy sources. In this way, the donor countries (see below) would receive a return on their capital from projects in these more advanced LDCs while the IDA countries could profit from the resultant triangular trade.

Source of Funds: The $25 billion pool of capital could be financed by the industrialized countries (bearing in mind also those in current account surplus, like Japan and the German Federal Republic) as well as the OPEC countries. If necessary, an arrangement could be worked out which would take into consideration the concerns of the donor countries regarding the sustained value of their funds invested in the Fund and the need for liquid assets in the event of unforeseen economic emergencies.

Structure: It may not be necessary to establish a new international institution for the disbursement of the funds from the Fund. The World Bank, which has had extensive experience in providing targeted developmental assistance, could, either alone or in combination with regional development banks, the IMF, and other institutions undertake as agents the detailed design and implementation of the Fund.—JACOB K. JAVITS, U.S.S.

SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time that was allotted to Mr. DURKIN under the order be transferred to the control of Mr. PROXMIRE.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ANCIENT RABBI'S WORDS COMPEL US TO RATIFY THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Madam President, the ancient Jewish Rabbi Hillel once said:

If I am not for myself, who will be for me? If I am only for myself, what am I? And if not now, when?

The Senate would be wise to heed Hillel's words, particularly when we consider U.S. foreign policy. Obviously, our foreign policy must reflect the best interests of this country and the American people; and concurrently, we must strive to formulate just and humane policies. The administration's and the Senate's emphasis on international human rights dramatically illustrates our commitment to our fellow human beings and our willingness to take concrete actions on their behalf.

But, Madam President, in one crucial aspect of our foreign policy we have not followed Hillel's sage advice. We have failed to ratify the United Nations Genocide Convention. What other action would so clearly further our own foreign policy goals and undeniably benefit all of humanity?

By defining and punishing genocide under international law, the Genocide Convention not only protects U.S. citizens from the specter of genocide, it also guarantees that a U.S. citizen's constitutional rights would be protected if he or she were prosecuted for the crime of genocide. More importantly, the ratification of the treaty would strengthen our human rights policy.

We righteously denounce many nations for their flagrant violations of human rights, yet we have failed to guarantee the most basic human right—the right to live—by signing the Genocide Treaty. This glaring contradiction in our foreign policy must be rectified. We must demonstrate to other nations that our support for basic human rights is more than mere rhetoric.

The Genocide Convention will not only be for the American people. The treaty extends beyond our borders and touches the lives of millions of people around the world. When the Senate ratifies the convention we will aid black people in South Africa, Indians in South America, and numerous political dissidents in Uganda, Cambodia, and Rhodesia.

Madam President, the Genocide Convention was unanimously passed by the United Nations in 1946, and 3 years later President Truman transmitted the treaty to the Senate. For almost 30 years we have discussed and debated the treaty while millions of people have been murdered. For ourselves, Madam President, and for the sanctity of life throughout the world, we must ratify the Genocide Convention. The time is now.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, without prejudice to that order, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a brief period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond 10 minutes, and that Senators may be allowed to speak up to 2 minutes therein.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(Routine morning business transacted and additional statements submitted are printed later in today's RECORD.)

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 98—RELATING TO ADJOURNMENT TO A DATE CERTAIN DURING THE REMAINDER OF THE 95TH CONGRESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. BAKER and myself I send a concurrent resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. CON. RES. 98

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That notwithstanding the provisions of sec. 132(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (2 U.S.C. 198), as amended by section 461 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 (Public Law 91-510; 84 Stat. 1193), the Senate and the House of Representatives shall not adjourn for a period in excess of three days, or adjourn sine die, until both Houses of Congress have adopted a concurrent resolution providing either for an adjournment (in excess of three days) to a day certain, or for adjournment sine die.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 98) was considered and agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR—S. 3075

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during consideration of S. 3075, the International Security Assistance Act, Albert Lakeland of my staff be granted privilege of the floor for all purposes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Kip Hawley of my staff be granted privilege of the floor during the Foreign Military Assistance Act and votes thereon.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that members of the staff of Senator ALLEN, Quentin Crommelin and Richard Gentry, be granted privilege of the floor during consideration and voting of S. 3075.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HUMPHREY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

INTERNATIONAL SECURITY ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1978

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Madam President, under the order that has been previously entered, I ask that the bill, S. 3075, Calendar Order No. 772, a bill to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Arms Export Control Act, and for other purposes, be laid before the Senate and that the clerk state the title of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3075) to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Arms Export Control Act, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Madam President, would the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I wonder if we might have a brief quorum so that Mr. CASE might be alerted to the fact this measure is up at this point, and I would ask unanimous consent that the quorum call not be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The following Senators requested, and by unanimous consent, the privilege of the floor was granted in behalf of the following staff members: Mr. SARBANES: Ann Proctor and Clifford Hackett; Mr. PELL: Geryld Christianson; Mr. CASE: Michael Kraft and Peter Leahy; Mr. SPARKMAN: Norvill Jones, Hans Binnendijk, Frank Ballance, Dick McCall, Gerald Decker, John Ritch, Pauline Baker, Roy Werner, Rudy Roesseau, Ira Nordlich, and Maureen Norton.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, it is my understanding that I have 2 hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, S. 3075, the International Security Assistance Act of 1978, provides authorization of appropriations of $2,886.4 million for seven international security assistance programs for fiscal year 1979. This authorization is a $306 million reduction from the fiscal year 1978 level.

This is one of three bills that together constitute authorizations for the fiscal year 1979 foreign assistance program. The other two bills are the International Development Assistance bill and the Peace Corps authorization bill. Security assistance is provided primarily to promote U.S. foreign policy and national security objectives, although a significant portion goes for development purposes. The fiscal year 1979 security assistance authorization represents 60 percent of the total authorizations for foreign assistance recommended by the Foreign Relations Committee. In summary, the bill contains the following:

Program authorization of $4,345.1 million for security assistance to more than 50 foreign countries with approximately $1.8 billion for Israel and $750 million for Egypt.

Authorization for $225 million in military and economic aid for Turkey, but no repeal of the Turkish arms embargo.

Authorization of $1,165 million for military transfers, foreign military sales credits, and ammunition stockpiling for the Republic of Korea.

Provisions which strengthen the Arms Export Control Act, including arms sales principles, support for multilateral restraint, fuller executive branch disclosure of arms sales plans, possible extension of the congressional arms sale review period, and greater State Department control over commercial exports with political-military implications.

Creation of an Economic Support Fund and an international peacekeeping program in place of the security supporting assistance program.

Provisions which strengthen human rights considerations in military training programs and which control overseas activities of the Drug Enforcement Agency.

In considering this bill, the Foreign Relations Committee held 5 days of hearings and two markup sessions. All were held in open session to give the public maximum access to the information available to the committee. Provisions of the bill also reflect committee deliberations during the past year on U.S. troop withdrawal from Korea, on the sale of AWACS aircraft to Iran, and on the sale of advanced aircraft to the Middle East.

ARMS EXPORT CONTROLS

During these deliberations, the committee had the opportunity to review the implementation of the President's arms transfer policy first proclaimed in May 1977. The thrust of that policy was consistent with the committee's desire to bring U.S. foreign military sales under some greater and more stringent control.

Unfortunately, however, the policy has not been implemented with the restraint that the committee had hoped would result. During the past year, the President has transmitted to Congress more than $20 billion in foreign military sales proposals. While compelling arguments can be made for many individual sales proposed by the President, one must conclude that, as a whole, the new policy has failed to bring about significant results.

With this in mind, the committee recommends nine provisions designed to strengthen controls over the exports of military equipment. They are:

First. Arms Sales Management Provisions (Section 9)—This section, initiated by Senator BIDEN, states that U.S. diplomatic and military personnel overseas should not encourage foreign countries to purchase U.S.-made military equipment unless properly authorized to do so.

Second. Arms Sales Principles (Section 15)—This section, initiated by Senator CLARK, contains 10 nonbinding arms sales principles designed to be used by both executive branch officials and the Congress as guidelines in making decisions on future arms sales. No such commonly agreed upon principles now exist. The principles are generally consistent with the President's policy but also draw on recent experience with controversial sales.

Third. Multilateral Arms Export Restraint (Section 16).—This section, initiated by Senator CLARK, recognizes that the United States alone cannot be successful in reducing the sale of arms to the developing world. It urges the President to continue his policy of seeking multilateral arms restraint and requires a detailed report on the success of these efforts by December 31, 1979. It puts other arms suppliers on notice that the United States cannot indefinitely follow a policy of arms export restraint without their cooperation.

Fourth. Annual Arms Sale Plan (Section 18).—This section, initiated by Senator JAVITS, requires the executive branch to develop an annual arms sale plan for developing countries and provide it to Congress as part of the Congressional Presentation Material. It would require the executive branch to plan arms sales at least 6 months earlier than it currently does and would allow Congress to provide statutory limitations in annual authorizing legislation for specific sales if it so desires.

Fifth. Military Surveys (Section 19).—This section, initiated by Senator PERCY, focuses on the origin of many arms sales—the military survey. It states that the recommendations of military survey teams do not represent a U.S. commitment to sell particular weapons. The provision would provide Congress with early information on possible arms transfers and would give Congress a greater opportunity to object to sales before commitments are made.

Sixth. Jurisdiction Over Police Equipment Exports (Section 22).—This section, initiated by Senator MCGOVERN, places crime control and detection equipment on the U.S. munitions list, which gives both Congress and the State Department greater control over the export of such items.

Seventh. Full Disclosure Reports (Section 23).—This section, initiated by Senator BIDEN, is designed to enhance the role of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in arms sale decisionmaking and to provide Congress with more detailed information on controversial arms sales.

Eighth. Extended Review Period (Section 24).—This section, initiated by Senator CLARK, provides Congress with an additional 30 calendar days to review foreign military sales if requested by two-thirds of the members of either authorizing committee. During consideration of the AWACS and F–15 sales proposals, it became clear to committee members that in controversial cases the current 30 calendar day review period does not always provide sufficient time.

Ninth. Commercial Sales (Section 25).—This section, initiated by Senator CASE, assures that the Department of State will review any export under Commerce Department jurisdiction if that export could have significant political-military implications on any region of the world.

SECURITY ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

S. 3075 authorizes program authority of $4,345 million for seven ongoing security assistance programs to more than 50 countries. The committee recommendations for each of these programs can be found in the committee report.

[1] Includes Lebanon supplemental.

[2] Includes Middle East special requirements fund and international peacekeeping.

About 70 percent of the program total is earmarked for the Middle East. The remainder is provided primarily to southern Europe, southern Africa, and South Korea. In addition a special $800 million arms transfer authority is provided to compensate for U.S. troop withdrawal from South Korea and a $5 million fiscal year 1978 supplemental appropriation is authorized for military sales credits to Lebanon.

The four areas of the world that receive most of the security assistance recommended by the committee are among the most volatile in the world. All face territorial or nationalistic disputes that threaten to erupt with important implications for world peace.

The United States has important interests in the peaceful resolution of each of these disputes. The Israeli-Arab territorial dispute involves both superpowers, oil, and an historic relationship between the United States and Israel. The Turkish-Greek dispute over Cyprus and the Aegean threatens the southern flank of NATO. American troops remain vulnerable on the divided Korean peninsula at a time when diplomatic efforts are stalled and North Korean forces are being rapidly modernized. Southern Africa is in transition from minority white to majority black rule, with the everpresent danger of racial war. Violent solution to any of these four problems would have profound implications for the United States.

In the past, the provision of security tended to help stabilize the political-military situation in that area of the world. Aid has strengthened Israel and helped deter her neighbors while providing economic support to Arab frontline states to increase their stake in continued peace. Economic assistance to southern African countries has provided refugee relief and enabled the United States to develop important diplomatic ties with the frontline states. Military and economic assistance to southern European countries has helped bring democracy to Spain and Portugal and strengthen the southeastern flank of NATO. Military assistance to South Korea has helped redress the military balance on the peninsula to deter an attack from the North.

Mr. President, the committee's recommendations for fiscal year 1979 programs to these four areas are generally consistent with the administration's recommendations, but important modifications were made that should be brought to the attention of my colleagues.

The most important modification is with regard to Turkey, while the committee accepted the administration's request for $175 million for foreign military sales credits and $50 million in economic aid to Turkey, it rejected the administration's request to repeal the partial arms embargo on Turkey. The committee made this decision after hearing testimony from Secretary of State Vance, Secretary of Defense Brown, and Acting Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Jones.

Several modifications relate to Middle East programs. A $25 million Middle East Regional Fund is established to encourage regional technical, economic, and scientific programs, including some programs in the West Bank and Gaza. I urge the Agency for International Development to work with the Congress in developing feasible regional cooperation projects. The committee further recommends that $65 million of the funds authorized for Egyptian economic assistance be used to encourage private enterprise in Egypt and that the entire economic assistance program for Israel be carried out on a cash transfer basis.

Other modifications relate to economic assistance to southern African countries. The committee recommends that $110 million be authorized for these programs rather than the $45 million requested by the administration. United States development-related assistance can have an important impact on this part of the world. In addition, the committee bill would repeal the prohibitions on assistance to Mozambique, Angola, Tanzania, and Zambia.

Finally, a modification suggested by Senator GLENN adds detailed reporting requirements to the Korean arms transfer authorization which will assist Congress in evaluating the continued feasibility of U.S. troop withdrawal from the peninsula.

ECONOMIC SUPPORT FUND AND INTERNATIONAL PEACEKEEPING

During the past several years, the nature and size of the security supporting assistance program has changed dramatically. In the early 1970's, 90 percent of the program was allocated to Indochina, while today 90 percent goes to the Middle East. During the past 3 years funds authorized under the program have tripled. Programs are increasingly becoming development oriented rather than simply balance of payments support. And finally, some peacekeeping operations have been funded by security supporting assistance.

The bill recommended by the committee makes several adjustments in the security supporting assistance program. First, the name of the program would be changed to the economic support fund to stress the economic and development potential of these programs. Policy decisions for the program would, however, remain with the Secretary of State and the national security nature of the programs is retained by keeping the provisions in the security assistance bill.

Second, funds are authorized and justified by region to provide a greater measure of accountability for individual programs.

And third, the bill prohibits the use of economic support funds for military and paramilitary purposes. Instead, a new international peacekeeping and base rights chapter is created which authorizes funds to be used for such purposes. This chapter also states that it is the sense of Congress that in general multiyear authorizations of foreign assistance should not be used to obtain agreements on base rights.

HUMAN RIGHTS

In considering the bill, the committee took a number of actions to further the cause of human rights. Provisions were added to the Foreign Assistance Act prohibiting military training assistance and assistance to law enforcement and intelligence agencies in countries which engage in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights. Military training was terminated for Nicaragua and Paraguay and FMS credits were cut for Paraguay, because of human rights violations in those countries. Military training programs in general would have as a new purpose increasing the human rights awareness of foreign students.

In taking these actions, the committee is mindful of the fact that much more work needs to be done to analyze the impact of using foreign aid sanctions to punish human rights violators. Accordingly the committee has commissioned the Congressional Research Service to undertake such a study.

INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL

During the past year it has come to the committee's attention that Drug Enforcement Administration officials still participate in the interrogation of U.S. citizens in foreign countries, often against the will of those U.S. citizens. Therefore, the committee recommends a provision which expands the earlier Mansfield amendment of 1976 and makes such interrogation illegal unless the U.S. citizen involved gives his consent.

It has also come to the committee's attention that international narcotics control funds have in the past been used to purchase weapons for foreign countries. The bill contains a provision prohibiting the use of international narcotics control funds for that purpose.

RESTRICTIONS ON EXECUTIVE BRANCH FLEXIBILITY

During its deliberations, the committee was mindful of the need to maintain a degree of flexibility in Presidential authority, especially in time of emergency. One result is the committee's recommendation for repeal of the economic assistance prohibitions affecting a number of southern African countries.

BUDGET RESOLUTION AND COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

The budget authority recommended for security assistance programs in this bill is generally consistent with the assumptions of the first concurrent budget resolution.

The Foreign Relations Committee recommends that the Senate approve the bill.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the geographic distribution of programs be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. CASE. Madam President, the International Security Assistance Act of 1978, which we are taking up in the Senate today, undoubtedly will be a vehicle for debating broad foreign policy issues as well as a means for authorizing funds for a very important part of our foreign aid program.

The bill (S. 3075) would authorize appropriations totaling $2.8 billion through seven international security assistance programs. This is a reduction of $306.7 million from the authorization for the current fiscal year, fiscal year 1978.

Senator SPARKMAN, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, already has presented a fine description of the bill itself. Thus I will not take the time of my colleagues by attempting to duplicate his presentation.

Certain aspects of the bill and the forthcoming debate, however, deserve some emphasis, because they relate to two regional trouble spots—the Middle East and southern Africa. Thus, I would like to take the liberty, in these opening remarks, to call attention to them.

The largest portions of assistance under the pending bill are allocated for the Middle East, scene of one of the world's most prolonged and difficult regional disputes. The security supporting assistance of this bill would authorize $750 million for Egypt, which also is to receive about $200 million in additional food assistance through the Public Law 480 program. The pending bill also would authorize security supporting assistance of $785 million for Israel, $93 million for Jordan, and $90 million for Syria. Under the foreign military sales program, Israel would receive $1 billion worth of credits and Jordan $85 million.

The needs and problems in these countries are great, and in an effort to help solve them, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee bill includes approaches which supplement the more standard AID channels.

Section 532(b)(4) requests the President to provide at least $465 million of the funds authorized for Egypt for the development and encouragement of private enterprise. This is a followup to the amendment last year by the late Senator Humphrey. The intent of the Humphrey amendment and this year's amendment is to help channel some of the assistance for Egypt into medium size and smaller scale projects which could be put into operation more quickly than the more traditional larger projects which often are slowed down by delays in planning and dealing with bureaucracy.

The committee report states:

It is the intent of the committee that AID shall consult closely with the Overseas Private Investment Corporation in developing and implementing these programs, and that the funds shall be used to encourage the Arab members of OPEC to join as active partners in Eygptian private enterprise development. Funds authorized under this subsection may be used for a variety of activities, including lending to the Egyptian private sector, providing necessary services, surveys, and programs to encourage and support private sector development, and contracting for such personnel as are required to carry out these activities.

Another initiative, which I cosponsored, is section 532(b)(5). As the committee report notes:

It earmarks $25 million of the funds authorized for the Middle East to be used to fund regional programs which stress development or scientific and technical cooperation between Israel and neighboring Arab countries, or programs which could be used for Arab-Israeli cooperation once normalization of relations occurs. This would permit the initiation of regional cooperative programs which would include both Israeli and Arab participation.

The basic purpose of this proposed regional development fund is to provide additional incentives to the peace process by encouraging cooperation in the economic, technical, scientific, agricultural, and other fields between the governments and peoples of the Middle East. The cooperation in developing, planning, and implementing projects could be useful in helping breakdown the distrust and other barriers which have inhibited more peaceful relations.

The phrase "normalization of relations" is used, because we do not want to delay such cooperation until formal peace agreements are signed. The term almost defines itself—it would be useful to begin work on projects as the governments bring themselves to deal with each other, even if it is on the technical and working level rather than on a full-scale diplomatic basis.

The projects are intended to have the participation of both Israelis and citizens of Arab countries. For example, the projects could be such endeavors as joint research efforts in which the laboratories utilized are in Israel or in the Arab countries—or both—and the nationals from the other side participate. Or they could be located on the West Bank and Gaza Strip, with the approval and cooperation of local residents, the Israel Government and whatever Arab country wishes to take part.

But the important thing is that the authorities and citizens of Israel and the Arab countries work together. The program is not intended to be a supplemental to the bilateral American aid for the countries and peoples of the region, rather it is to encourage their cooperation and working together. It may be that there are not enough projects ready to launch before the end of the fiscal year, but I think it would be useful and important to make the funds available to demonstrate, if even in a relatively modest way, some of the benefits which might come from peace and normal relations in the region.

RHODESIA

The matter of Rhodesia, which is involved in this legislation in a very important way, will come up perhaps today. When we deal with this matter, we will be dealing also with the general problem of southern Africa.

Senator HELMS has announced he plans to introduce his amendment to lift sanctions against the Rhodesian Government. Under his proposal, the sanctions would be lifted upon enactment of S. 3075, until January 1, 1979.

This approach, Mr. President, is premature. Although there is a transition government in place, there are questions as to how firmly it is on the road to majority rule. In addition, there is a danger that lifting the sanctions now will reinforce the perception—valid or not—that the United States is backing Ian Smith and this makes it more difficult for the frontline states to resist pressures to go along with the Cuban option of increased military activity which we are seeking to curtail.

A better alternative is the amendment I am proposing along with Senators JAVITS and MOYNIHAN.

The basic condition to the lifting of sanctions would be the formation of a new government following free elections in which persons of all population groups are allowed to participate.

This could take place even before the end of this year if the elections are moved up from the current proposed timetable under which the new government is to take office by December 31 of this year.

The key purpose of our amendment is to underscore our backing for the concept of a peaceful transition to majority rule through free elections open to all, and the recognition and protection of minority rights.

Thus the amendment is intended to provide encouragement for another round of negotiations, at a proposed all-parties conference to involve the transitional government and representatives of the so-called Patriotic Front.

It would require the Rhodesian Government to make a good faith commitment to take part in and negotiate in such a conference. If the conference does not take place, through no fault of the Rhodesian Government, sanctions still would be lifted if free elections are held, open to all population groups obscured by impartial internationally recognized observers.

Our amendment is intended to encourage all sides to resolve their differences and work them out through negotiations and elections through the political process rather than by force.

We believe the amendment provides incentives for this approach and is the responsible way to handle this most difficult area.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1491

(Purpose: To repeal the limited embargo on arms sales to Turkey)

Mr. SPARKMAN. Madame President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alabama (Mr. SPARKMAN) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1491:

On page 18, strike out lines 13 through 16 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 14. (a) Section 620(x) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 is repealed".

Mr. SPARKMAN. Madam President, for more than 3 years the United States has maintained an arms embargo on Turkey. During the past months, I have listened to arguments concerning Turkey made before the Committee on Foreign Relations by various witnesses, including the President's special envoy, Clark Clifford. After reviewing the evidence, I firmly believe that the embargo should be lifted.

I hold this view for two reasons. First, I believe that such action is in the best interest of the NATO alliance. And second, I believe it is the best opportunity that the United States has to help bring a solution to the Cyprus problem.

Let us first consider Turkey's role in NATO. Gen. Alexander Haig, the U.S. Army commander in chief, U.S. European Command, last month told the Senate that Turkey's full and active participation in NATO is "indispensable to our own security as well as the of Greece and other NATO allies." Turkey's geographic position commands the Soviet Union's main access to the Mediterranean Sea. Turkey has one of the largest land masses in Europe and is a gateway to the Middle East. It has one of Europe's largest standing armies and has been a strong American ally.

The embargo, however, threatens Turkey's ability to participate fully in NATO. Turkey's military equipment is nearly obsolete. If the Senate disregards this situation by maintaining the embargo, Turkey might leave NATO's integrated command and permanently close U.S. bases in Turkey. This would be a great defeat for both the United States and all of NATO. If the embargo is lifted, however, Turkey's ability to carry out its NATO obligations will be strengthened.

I am also convinced that lifting the arms embargo on Turkey may lead to progress on the Cyprus negotiations. For 3 years the embargo failed to bring a solution to the Cyprus problem. Since President Carter announced his policy to repeal the embargo, however, the Turkish side has shown its desire to renew the Cyprus talks by presenting a new negotiating position and making some important concessions concerning the city of Varosha.

Last week I received a letter from Ambassador Esenbel, the Turkish Ambassador to the United States. The Ambassador states in his letter that "the embargo has become a stumbling block to a Cyprus settlement." He also describes the Turkish negotiating position as having "inherent flexibility."

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the letter be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TURKISH EMBASSY,
Washington, D.C., July 18, 1978.

Hon. JOHN SPARKMAN,
Chairman, Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As Congress moves toward consideration of the 1979 Security Assistance Authorization, and with it lifting the embargo on security aid to Turkey, I wish to convey to you and your colleagues my appreciation for the careful consideration and deep concern that has been evident, especially in the past few weeks.

I cannot stress too strongly the importance of ending the embargo to the future of U.S.-Turkish relations, the positive effect this action will have on the common defense interests of our NATO alliance, and progress toward settlement on Cyprus.

You will kindly note that all initiatives regarding Cyprus have come from the Turkish side:

January 1977: Turkish Cypriot leader Denktash invited Archbishop Makarios to meet to discuss Cyprus; in February they reached their historic agreement on the framework for an acceptable agreement.

September 1977: Denktash reiterated to Secretary General Waldheim his desire to see the Nicosia Airport, located in the demilitarized zone under U.N. control, reopened.

October 1977: Turkish Foreign Minister Caglayangil proposed the reopening of Varosha sector of Famagusta so Greek Cypriots could re-establish homes and businesses.

March 1978: Ecevit and Karamanlis met in Montreux at the suggestion of the Turkish Prime Minister, agreeing to continue their dialogue at the technical level.

April 1978: The Turkish Cypriots offered their proposals for a settlement, as a means of providing concrete suggestions on which negotiations might proceed.

May 1978: Ecevit and Karamanlis renewed their discussions in Washington and Ecevit agreed to enter a non-aggression pact with Greece if that would ease tensions between the two NATO partners.

May and June 1978: Rauf Denktash indicated on several occasions a willingness to meet with his Greek Cypriot counterpart "anytime, anywhere" and with or without an agenda, in order to resume discussions.

Turkey has withdrawn 41 percent of her armed forces to date and will continue this policy as the security aspects of the Turkish Cypriot community improve. Two battalions were withdrawn July 10.

These are highlights of Turkish efforts to get Cyprus talks going again. The record is clear: All Turkish attempts to meet and talk, to demonstrate substantial flexibility in negotiations, and to give evidence of a sincere desire to conclude a just and moral settlement in Cyprus have been foiled because of the other side's unwillingness to progress toward settlement.

Regarding the Turkish Cypriot proposals—called concrete and substantial by the Secretary General of the U.N.—these were offered as a basis for resuming negotiations. In line with the Denktash-Makarios guidelines agreement of February 1977, the proposals comprise the following measures:

Territorial adjustments, of a magnitude to be negotiated, in several areas of the island. In addition, the Turkish Cypriots make no claim to any of the demilitarized buffer zone which constitutes 3 percent of the land area.

The opening of Varosha, the major revenue center of tourism, upon resumption of intercommunal talks, to as many as 35,000 Greek Cypriots for re-establishment of homes and businesses. And, the final political framework of Varosha is open to negotiation.

A draft constitution that does not envision partition of the island as the Greek side claims, but which entrusts to the federal government foreign affairs; external defense; banking, foreign exchange and monetary affairs; federal budget; customs, duties and tariffs; external communications; federal health services; tourism, and other joint-interest functions.

Withdrawal of Turkish forces from the island as bi-communal talks progress. With final agreement and settlement, all Turkish troops will be withdrawn except those which, by mutual agreement, will remain for the security of the island.

All of these constitute a negotiating position with inherent flexibility, as we have attempted to make clear on several occasions. Unfortunately, the Greek side not only declares them totally nonnegotiable, but refuses to meet with the Turkish Cypriot leadership even without an agenda.

Considering that in the past the Greek side has entered negotiations without a prior agenda being established, or proposals submitted, it is clear that the strategy now is to influence Congress to perpetuate the embargo by fostering the image of "non-progress" in Cyprus.

Thus, the embargo has become a stumbling block to a Cyprus settlement in addition to causing serious damage to U.S.-Turkish relations and the common defense interests of the West.

And Turkey genuinely desires to see all impediments to cordial relations and full cooperation between our two countries removed, so that with a strong and democratic Turkey we might once again be full partners in pursuit of common goals.

Sincerely,

MELIH ESENBEL,
Ambassador to the United States.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I, therefore, believe that the Senate should vote to remove this stumbling block to the negotiations and encourage the Turkish negotiations to demonstrate their flexibility on the Cyprus question.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Department of State dated June 28, 1978, from Douglas J. Bennet, Jr., together with the attachments, and an editorial from the Washington Post of yesterday, July 24, 1978.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D.C., June 28, 1978.

DEAR SENATOR: You will be voting soon after the July 4 recess on the International Security Assistance Bill (S. 2846) which includes the Administration's programs for Greece, Turkey and Cyprus. The central element in this program is a proposal to lift the arms embargo on Turkey.

The central questions are these: (a) will lifting the embargo improve prospects for a just, lasting settlement on Cyprus and (b) will perpetuating the embargo damage U.S. security interests?

We have put together some materials on both these questions which may be helpful to you in considering the embargo issue and in answering questions from your constituents during the recess.

Attached are brief papers on the following subjects:

Turkey: An important Partner in NATO.

U.S. military Facilities in Turkey.

The Cyprus Problem: New Hope for a Solution.

The Return of Greek Cypriot Refugees to Varosha.

We would welcome an opportunity to review with you personally the complex issues involved in the Eastern Mediterranean prior to this important vote. Please call me or my Deputy, Nelson Ledsky (632-4768), if we may arrange a further briefing or answer any questions you may have.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS J. BENNET, Jr.,
Assistant Secretary for Congressional Relations.

Enclosures: as stated.

TURKEY: AN IMPORTANT PARTNER IN NATO

Turkey contributes to NATO's strength through its strategic geographical location, its forces, and its Western orientation.

Turkey's geographical location is a key element in discouraging Warsaw Pact and Soviet aspirations toward the Mediterranean and Middle East. Major land, sea, and air routes from the Soviet and Bulgarian Black Sea areas to the Mediterranean lead across Turkey.

Turkey has the largest standing army in NATO—approximately 480,000. Along with the Greek Armed Forces, Turkey ties down approximately 26 Warsaw Pact divisions plus associated air and naval units in the Caucasus, Balkans, and Black Sea areas. Without having to contend with credible Greek and Turkish defenses, a significant portion of these Warsaw Pact forces could be reoriented toward other areas of NATO where significant money and manpower would be required to balance them.

Turkey provides important facilities for U.S. and NATO requirements for peacetime training, forward basing of tactical fighter aircraft, support of the Sixth fleet, and intelligence collection.

Unlike Greece which withdrew its forces from the NATO integrated military command structure in 1974, Turkey remains fully integrated within NATO.

A combination of severe economic problems and the U.S. arms embargo has resulted in a significant reduction in the capability of the Turkish Armed Forces. Most equipment in the Turkish armed forces is of U.S. origin and most is quite old. The effect of the U.S. arms embargo in 1975 and continuing restrictions has been to stop almost completely a modest modernization program within the Turkish armed forces and to prevent the Turks from maintaining aging equipment in working order. Cannibalization to keep some major weapon systems in operation has become widespread, particularly in the Turkish Air Force. Maintenance difficulties have become massive and crew training has suffered.

---

U.S. MILITARY FACILILTIES IN TURKEY

In reaction to the 1975 arms embargo, Turkey suspended U.S. operations at five of seven major installations in July 1975. Four were used for intelligence collection (Sinop, Karamursel, Belbasi, Diyarbikir) and the fifth is a long-range navigation station (Kargaburum).

The three-year suspension of U.S. operations in Turkey has degraded our capability to collect information on Soviet weapon systems technology, research, training and operations. Specifically:

Valuable data has been lost on Soviet space, missile, and military systems development and strategic nuclear activities, thereby reducing our level of confidence in our knowledge of these subjects.

Continued loss of information which can be collected from sites now in Turkey hampers our ability to develop countermeasures to Soviet weapon systems under development and could allow these systems to reach an advanced stage without our having a complete understanding of their potential threat.

Certain needed information can be collected only from Turkey. Therefore, all present losses could not be recovered simply by relocating the facilities elsewhere. In any event, relocation to recover partially the capability represented by U.S. intelligence installations in Turkey involves a significant amount of time and money.

The Government of Turkey has informed us that the lifting of the embargo would lead to the reopening of these installations. We intend to work out shortly an interim arrangement followed by negotiations for a permanent basis for operation of these facilities. If necessary, we will also explore with the Government of Turkey immediate reopening upon repeal of the embargo on an interim basis even if new arrangements have not yet fully been worked out.

Two major installations (Incirlik Air Base and Ankara Air Station) are in full operation in direct support of the NATO mission. They provide:

Forward basing of USAF tactical fighter aircraft in support of NATO defense plans. Accommodations are also maintained for wartime augmentation by reinforcement aircraft and NATO strategic reserve forces.

Peacetime training. Konya Range is one of the very few air-to-ground firing ranges east of Spain which is available and adequate for regular use by theater tactical air forces.

Terminal support for intertheater staging of strategic airlift aircraft, including the only U.S. owned and controlled major aircraft refueling facility in the eastern Mediterrean area.

Naval depot services and stocks for the replenishment, refueling, and aviation POL resupply for units of the U.S. Sixth Fleet. Twenty percent of Fleet fuel assets in the Mediterranean are stored in Turkey.

Major contingency storage of war reserve materiels, munitions, and petroleum supplies for use by the U.S. Forces.

Communications in support of logistics requirements, intelligence, and command and control of U.S. and other NATO forces in Southern Europe and the Mediterranean.

THE CYPRUS PROBLEM: NEW HOPE FOR A SOLUTION

INTRODUCTION

When Cyprus gained independence from Britain in 1960, a centralized government was established with checks and balances to protect the Greek-Cypriot majority and the Turkish-Cypriot minority. Cypriot Archbishop Makarios was elected President, and the leader of the Turkish-Cypriot community was chosen as Vice President. Greece, Turkey and the United Kingdom guaranteed the maintenance of this arrangement.

Strains between the Greek and Turkish communities developed immediately after independence. Violence erupted in 1963–64, 1967 and again in 1974. A UN peacekeeping force was introduced on Cyprus in 1967, and under UN auspices talks between Greek-Cypriot and Turkish-Cypriot community leaders were undertaken.

In 1977 the two communities agreed, for the first time, on principles under which a new government might be organized. Both the Greek-Cypriots and the Turkish-Cypriots accepted the idea of two ethnic zones on the island with some kind of central government uniting them. Specific details as to which activities were to be handled in the zones and which at the federal level were not resolved.

The United States played an important role in encouraging the two sides to reach this agreement in principle. It remains an important objective of U.S. policy to insure that follow-on negotiations successfully resolve these fundamental constitutional issues as well as the territorial question of where the dividing line between the two zones shall be established.

THE 1974 CRISIS AND ARMS EMBARGO

The present U.S. arms embargo on Turkey stems from the 1974 crisis. In July, 1974, elements of the Greek Cypriot national guard, supported by the Greek military junta in Athens, deposed President Makarios. In his place, they installed a Greek Cypriot extremist known to be fiercely anti-Turkish and anxious to unite Cyprus with Greece. Five days later the Turkish Government, claiming it was acting under the 1960 guarantees, landed military forces on the northern coast of Cyprus to protect the Turkish Cypriot population and prevent union with Greece.

Shortly thereafter, the coup on Cyprus collapsed, a cease-fire was achieved, and the legitimate government was restored. The Turkish troops did not leave Cyprus, however, and in August the Turkish Government landed additional forces, taking about 36% of the island. These events resulted in bloodshed and displaced a large number of persons. In 1975, a separate Turkish-Cypriot administration was established in the northern part of Cyprus. In succeeding months, Turkish Cypriots moved north and Greek Cypriots moved south to join their ethnic communities. It was in reaction to the second Turkish invasion that the U.S. arms embargo was imposed.

NEGOTIATIONS BEGIN

As a result of diplomatic pressure by the U.S. and other nations, intercommunal negotiations were resumed in 1975 under the aegis of UN Secretary General Waldheim. Some progress was made towards resolving humanitarian problems resulting from the 1974 fighting, but through 1976 the two sides remained deadlocked on the fundamental problems of the structure and functions of a future government and the future geographic division of the island.

Early in 1977, however, President Makarios and Turkish Cypriot leader Denktash meet personally under the aegis of Secretary Waldheim and agreed on a set of principles that would constitute a framework for a comprehensive Cyprus settlement. Cyprus was to be a sovereign, independent, bizonal, bicommunal federal republic; the Turkish Cypriots would withdraw from an unspecified portion of the territory they occupy; and the basic rights of freedom of movement, settlement and property ownership would be respected with certain conditions.

TURKISH-CYPRIOT PROPOSALS

When Turkish Prime Minister Ecevit assumed office in January 1978, chances for a settlement improved. Ecevit's predecessors had all ruled with coalition which made consessions politically difficult, whereas Ecevit commands an actual majority. Ecevit has declared that a Cyprus settlement is in Turkey's own best interest, and a matter of high priority for his government. Turkish Cypriots, with Ecevit's encouragement, submitted fresh constitutional and territorial proposals.

The Turkish Cypriots have amplified the latest proposals to include offers

That the Turkish Government would make further troop reductions as the intercommunal negotiations progress;

That some 30–35,000 Greek-Cypriots could commence returning to their homes and businesses in the city of Varosha as the negotiations progress;

That the Turkish-Cypriots are prepared to discuss the reopening of Nicosia airport for civilian traffic, and to explore the possibility of joint economic ventures between Greek and Turkish Cypriots.

The Greek Cypriots have stated that these proposals are unacceptable as a basis for resuming negotiations, and they have maintained this position despite subsequent assurances that the Turkish Cypriot side is prepared to be flexible and forthcoming as soon as the two parties are back at the table.

The Turkish Cypriot proposals appear to represent a real advance over the positions assumed by Turkish Cypriot negotiators in previous rounds of talks. The constitutional proposal is substantially more developed and the Turkish Cypriots have for the first time clearly agreed to discuss territorial changes. These proposals plus the more favorable political environment in Turkey make this an important and hopeful movement in the search for a solution in Cyprus.

THE RETURN OF GREEK CYPRIOT REFUGEES TO VAROSHA

Recent declarations by the Turkish Cypriots have moved the problem of resettling a sizable number of Greek Cypriots in the important seaside town of Varosha closer to solution.

Prior to the 1974 hostilities in Cyprus, Varosha (New Famaguta) was a flourishing and prosperous Greek Cypriot resort center of some 40,000 full-time inhabitants, not unlike a small-scale Miami Beach. In August 1974 the population of Varosha fled to the south to escape advancing Turkish forces. Rather than being opened to Turkish or Turkish Cypriot settlement, as were other abandoned Greek Cypriot communities, Varosha remained sealed off under the direct control of the Turkish army.

Varosha is now a ghost town. Yet it is perhaps the single most significant piece of territory in dispute between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots. For the former, the regaining of a major Greek Cypriot town of substantial economic importance has become a sine qua non of a settlement. For the latter, Varosha is of crucial significance because of its value to the Greek side and on account of its proximity to Famagusta Harbor, the only deep-water port in the Turkish Cypriot zone.

Varosha has now become a key element in efforts to resume the Cyprus intercommunal negotiations. The proposals submitted by the Turkish Cypriots to Secretary General Waldheim on April 13 include a separate section on Varosha, which provided for the return of some Greek Cypriot inhabitants subject to the laws and regulations of the Turkish Cypriot administration. This latter condition was rejected by the Greek Cypriots. The Turkish Cypriots have now clarified and elaborated on their proposal: They have specified that up to 35,000 Greek Cypriots will be able to return to Varosha; they have conceded that this return need not await conclusion of a settlement but can commence as soon as negotiations are resumed; and they have given assurances that the future political framework of Varosha is open to negotiation, thereby admitting the possibility of a revision to Greek Cypriot control.

These are welcome clarifications. Nevertheless, we understand why Greek Cypriots may well be reluctant to return to Varosha while negotiation are underway, should this mean they will be subject to Turkish Cypriot jurisdiction.

A practical solution would be for the United Nations to assume an interim role in the administration of Varosha, pending arrangements to be worked out in a final settlement. Secretary General Waldheim has tentatively endorsed this approach, noting in his May 31 report on the Cyprus question that, with reference to the status of Varosha, "it would seem natural to envisage United Nations assistance in this connection." Furthermore, the Turkish side has indicated that in the context of a resumption of intercommunal talks it would accept an interim United Nations role in Varosha to facilitate the return of the Greek Cypriot inhabitants.

Progress on the Varosha issue now seems possible. Such progress will be important not only for itself, but also because it could be instrumental in moving towards a resumption of full negotiations.

LIFT THE TURKISH EMBARGO

Jimmy Carter was right on the mark when he said the forthcoming Senate vote to lift the Turkish arms embargo is the most important piece of foreign-affairs business the Congress has left in this session. It's really quite simple. If the embargo is lifted, diplomacy gets a chance to start healing the wounds in Cyprus, the rent in Turkish-Greek relations, the strain in Turkish-American and Greek-American relations, and NATO's whole sorry disarray in the eastern Mediterranean. If the embargo stays on, everything gets worse.

The argument has been cast in pro-Turkish and pro-Greek terms, but that is misleading. There is a great deal in it for both Turkey and Greece, and for both Turkish and Greek communities on Cyprus, if the stalemate signified by the embargo is broken. The United States has gone to considerable lengths to make that case, explaining the vista that a lifting of the embargo would open, removing the previous administration's pro-Turkish tilt in military aid, and supporting Greece's wish not to be muscled by Turkey in their Aegean Sea dispute. The administration has also labored, successfully, to induce the Turks to offer a new Cyprus position conducive to negotiations. Ankara's position is not yet what Athens and the Greek Cypriots want it to be. The way to improve it is by the talks that would surely follow a lifting of the embargo.

The Greek lobby is hanging tough. That has led Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.) to offer an imaginative way out. Mr. McGovern can hardly be regarded as someone dominated by the strategic concerns that, for good reason, guide the views of many others who wish to end the embargo. He is sympathetic to the division and hardship on Cyprus. Mr. McGovern suggests lifting the embargo, while linking future Turkish-aid requests (including arms sales) to a presidential certification of good-faith diplomacy. His amendment is designed to eliminate the stigma that the embargo is for Turkey, but to retain a non-humiliating form of encouragement to the Turks to continue moderating their policy. The administration supports this approach.

Let us underline the essential point. The embargo was at its outset a well-meant, legally mandated protest against the use of American arms for the occupation of almost half of Cyprus. But experience has proven it to be destructive of the purpose it was meant to serve—reducing the occupation—and of much else. The embargo stands now simply as a hostile act against an ally, and one not in the slightest endorsed by any other NATO ally—except for Greece. The Senate should end it in the manner suggested by Mr. McGovern.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Christie Cohagen and Allyn Kreps of Senator CRANSTON's staff be allowed to remain on the floor during the debate on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Madam President, will the Senator yield? I make the same request, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Mark Edelman of Senator DANFORTH's staff be allowed the privileges of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I believe Senator CASE would like to be notified at this time. He is at the Appropriations Committee and he said he would be right back.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On whose time?

Mr. SPARKMAN. On my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Bob Downen and James Styles of Senator DOLE's staff be granted the privileges of the floor during the consideration of S. 3075; and also John Haddon of my staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On whose time?

Mr. HATCH. The same as the prior request.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, that would be under the control of the managers of the bill. Does the manager want time to be charged against his time on the quorum? His side is going to need a lot of time for discussion of this amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. May I ask that this quorum be charged?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I understood that, but the quorum has been called off, has been reinstituted by another Senator under the same conditions, I am just trying to call the Senator's attention to it.

Madam President, will the Senator yield me some time?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

LIFTING THE TURKISH EMBARGO

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Madam President, the time has come to lift the embargo on arms to Turkey. Ending the embargo will, I believe, be in the best interests not only of the United States, Turkey, and NATO, but of Cyprus and Greece as well.

I will, therefore, introduce an amendment later today, jointly sponsored by Mr. MCGOVERN, Mr. BENTSEN, and Mr. CHAFEE, which would end the embargo. This amendment would do more than simply repeal the embargo, however. It would also put into law a strong declaration of U.S. commitment to a just solution of the Cyprus problem. Further, it would require that in future requests for military or economic assistance, credits, or arms sales for Turkey, Greece, or Cyprus, the President transmit to Congress his certification that such a solution has been achieved or that such aid would be supportive of a solution.

In order for Congress to continually review progress toward resolution of the Cyprus issue, the amendment would also require reports from the President to the Congress every 60 days on this matter.

The amendment would also provide an additional $35 million in foreign military sales credits to Greece, bringing the total allocation for Greece up to $175 million, equal to the amount authorized for Turkey.

I am very pleased to join with Senators MCGOVERN, BENTSEN, and CHAFEE in sponsoring this amendment, which I will later call up.

I particularly want to express appreciation to the senior Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN) for his efforts in working the language of this amendment.

I also wish to express appreciation to the distinguished Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) for the efforts he has put forth in helping to work out language that we hope will command the kind of support in the Senate that is needed to resolve this critical issue.

Madam President, when the Senate first voted to apply the embargo in 1974, I was among those who supported it. There was an important point to be made in response to the Turkish use of U.S. weapons in Cyprus. That point has been made—clearly and unmistakably.

Now, we must look forward. The embargo has become counterproductive, an impediment to resolution of the Cyprus issue. For Turkey the embargo has assumed enormous—and highly negative—symbolic significance. As long as the embargo continues in force it is the dominant factor in Eastern Mediterranean relations and it inhibits significant progress toward a lasting solution on Cyprus.

Madam President, the embargo also seriously undermines our collective security arrangements.

Madam President, this is not a case of choosing between two valued allies—Greece and Turkey. We want to have good relations with both nations and believe that such relationships will be in our best interests as well as theirs.

The truth is that while the embargo has done little to resolve the Cyprus issue, it has greatly hampered our relations with Turkey and it has weakened Turkey militarily—and consequently weakened NATO's southern flank.

It is on this issue of Turkey's role in NATO that I want to place particular emphasis, because I believe this is a vital factor.

I recently returned from Europe where I had the opportunity to discuss this question with a number of European leaders as well as NATO officials. There was unanimity from everyone with whom I discussed the issue that the embargo should be lifted as soon as possible. The European leaders see this as a matter of overriding importance.

The Secretary General of NATO, Mr. Joseph Luns, strongly advocated that the embargo be removed, stating that all NATO countries, other than Greece, favor lifting the embargo.

A general European optimism about NATO and its direction was tempered somewhat by concern about the embargo and the problems it poses for the Alliance. German officials told me that while they could understand the original motivation of the Congress in imposing the embargo, Congress should now consider the full political effect it has had in the Eastern Mediterranean. This is not just a matter of Greek-Turkish relations, but of profound stategic consequences.

Turkey is the cornerstone of NATO's vital southern flank. It is not in the interests of the United States, Turkey, Cyprus, Greece, or NATO to permit the southern flank to disintegrate. NATO access to and control of Turkish air and sea space is a key element in NATO strategy. The Turkish ground forces are the second largest within the Alliance.

Our military leaders view lifting the embargo as a matter of great importance. Turkey has remained fully integrated within NATO, although as a result of the embargo, Turkey's defense equipment is becoming increasingly outdated. Without our assistance, Turkey will have great difficulty in modernizing its forces and in carrying out the long-term defense program which is the blueprint for NATO cooperation in the coming years. As Defense Secretary Harold Brown has pointed out, Turkey's ability to adequately maintain its defensive forces is diminishing. In order to keep some of the aging weapons systems in working order, cannibalization of equipment has become widespread, particularly in the Turkish Air Force. Maintenance problems have become serious and crew training has suffered.

As Gen. Alexander M. Haig, Jr., the supreme allied commander in Europe, has stated, the full and active participation of this proudly democratic nation in the Alliance is indispensable. A strong Turkey is an important component of NATO's deterrent capability—all the more so in the face of the build-up of Soviet and Warsaw Pact forces. A strong NATO is essential to U.S. security and to the protection of our interests in the Eastern Mediterranean. With Turkey sitting astride the maritime access to and from the Black Sea, as well as in a key location between the Balkans and the Middle East, the area's strategic importance is indisputable.

Another important factor to consider is the value of U.S. intelligence installations in Turkey. The loss of these facilities has limited our capacity to monitor Soviet military activities in the area. The intelligence installations in Turkey are needed to effectively monitor Soviet weapons systems technology and military training and operations, including space, nuclear, and missile testing operations.

Madam President, we must not allow the military situation in Turkey to continue to decline. As I stated earlier, our North Atlantic allies, with the exception of Greece, strongly support the ending of the embargo.

Indeed, not only is Turkey the cornerstone of NATO's southern wing, but Greece's own position would be much more precarious without a militarily strong Turkey. As General Haig has stated, so long as Turkey remains fully within the Alliance, any Warsaw Pact attack on Greece would be a highly risky adventure, while without Turkey's support the defense of Greece is vastly more difficult. The fact that the Warsaw Pact forces maintain the capability to deploy more than 50 divisions against Turkey is clear evidence of Turkey's importance to NATO's southern flank.

Thus, the embargo threatens the larger strategic interests of the United States and the Alliance. Further, it places a severe strain on United States-Turkish relations and is an impediment to improved relations between Greece and Turkey and a resolution of the Cyprus issue.

Madam President, since the founding of the Republic of Turkey in 1923 and the Turkish Reformation under the leadership of Mustafa Kemal Ataturk, successive governments have looked to the West for political, economic, and cultural relationships. Despite strong, economic and political pressures, Turkey has maintained its democracy and strengthened its ties with Europe and the United States. Along with Greece, it became a member of NATO in 1952, and is also a member of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development—OECD—and has a close relationship with the European Economic Community.

As Prof. Bernard Lewis of the Institute for Advanced Studies has written:

> Within Turkey there has been a gradual, painful but nevertheless genuine development of a western way of life, with a mixed economy and a parliamentary democracy, renewed and sustained despite successive revolutions and upheavals. Despite the continuing crisis resulting from the absence of an effective parliamentary majority for any party in the Assembly, Turkey has retained a commitment to democracy. . . . Turkey has pursued a generally pro-Western alignment in international affairs. Turkey dispatched a brigade to Korea in 1950 and remains firmly committed to the Council of Europe, to NATO, and to CENTO.

But now, Madam President, there is in Turkey a feeling of great disappointment with the West and the United States. Many Turks are embittered and feel increasingly distant from the West. This is a matter about which we should be seriously concerned, even though Prime Minister Ecevit has reaffirmed Turkey's strong commitment to NATO and its desire for good relations with the United States. During his recent visit to Washington, Ecevit said:

> We attach great importance to Turkish-American relations . . . which we would very much like to revitalize, not only in the interest of both countries, but also in the interest of world peace as a whole.
